In addition to this we would draw the attention of our musical friends to the extensive field of competitions opened to them. On the first day, a prize of £100 is to be competed for, and it has been said this will be the great test between North and South Wales choirs; on the second day, a choral competition for a prize of £30 will take place; on the third, for a prize of £20; and on the fourth day, another £100 will be competed for, but it is divided—first, £50; second, £30; and third, £20. The list also contains a male chorus prize, £20; brass band contest for £20; quartets, trios, duets, and solos to suit all voices. There is no scarcity of instrumental competitions, such as pianoforte solos, string quartet, harp solos, and a violin solo. Several prizes are offered in musical composition, and these will be adjudicated upon by Sir J. Benedict, Mr. Brinley Richards, Mr. John Thomas, Owain Alaw, and Ieuan Gwyllt. The committee will secure the services of the most competent adjudicators at the Eisteddvod, and it will be satisfactory to choirs to know that in choral competitions the conductors can elect their judges by ballot."

Mr. William Sexton, of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, and late of York Cathedral (alto), has been appointed Vicar Choral of Westminster Abbey, in the place of the late Mr. R. Barnby.

REVIEWS.

Novello, Ewer and Co.

The Sunlight of Song. A collection of Sacred and Moral Poems, with original music by the most eminent English composers. Profusely illustrated with engravings by the Brothers Dalziel, from designs by our best artists.

It is very rarely that we find a really good book of songs sufficiently well got up to become an ornament to the drawing-room table, and it is an equal rarity to find that an elegant book for the drawing-room table is a really good book of songs. It has been the aim of the publishers of the volume before us not only to unite these two qualifications, but to combine with them some of the finest specimens of appropriate engravings, from designs by well-known artists, the whole forming a Gift Book which cannot fail to find a warm welcome not only with the young, but with the elder members of the family circle. The volume differs from most others of its kind from the fact of the songs being composed by the most eminent English writers of the day; and although especially intended for the more youthful musicians, we need scarcely say that the artistic manner in which they are treated will assuredly recommend them to those whose critical faculties have been developed by years of experience. It would indeed be impossible to name any songs for special praise—not only because they are uniformly good, but because it might seem to throw a slur upon those not mentioned—but it may be said that the whole of the music is characterised as much by excessive delicacy and refinement, as by an absence of that morbid sentimentality which is too often the prevailing fault of songs addressed more particularly to the young. The little poems have been exceedingly well selected, all those which are not purely of a religious character tending, in a healthful manner, to promote that love of nature and of each other which should form the basis of the education of children. Of the illustrations we cannot speak too highly. The Frontispiece, representing a little family concert, is extremely well designed, the effective grouping and the drawing of each figure being in the highest style of art. We are almost tempted to point out some illustrations which are not only happily suggestive of the songs before which they are placed, but really beautiful pictures in the abstract, but we refrain, from the same considerations which arrested us in speaking of the music. Many of the designs are by the engravers of the whole—the Brothers Dalziel—but others are by artists whose names are a sufficient guarantee for their excellence. Lastly, to mention the general appearance of the book, it may truly be said that the exterior is, as such a work should be, more remarkable for artistic workmanship than for gaudiness of colour. The crimson and gold, in which the copy before us is bound, are, however, extremely pleasing to the eye; and were the contents of the volume even inferior to what they will be found on examination, we can scarcely doubt that during the coming Christmas it will have an extensive sale.

The Morning and Evening Service, together with the Office for Holy Communion, set to music in the key of F. By G. M. Garrett, Mus. D.

To the original Morning and Evening Service in F, Dr. Garrett has now added the Benedictus, Introit, Kyrie Eleison, Gloria tibi Domine, Gratias, Credo, Offertory, Sanctus, and Gloria in Excelsis, thus meeting a demand which is daily getting more imperative for a complete musical setting, not only of the Canticles (as was generally the case till more recent times), but of all the portions of the Communion Service which are capable of it. Indeed, the Communion Service is now treated by a section of the clergy in so distinctive a manner, by analogy with their teaching, as the chief feature in the services of the Church, that we must expect the appearance of music written specially for it, which will be intentionally as much more prominent and important than that written for matins and evensong, as the latter are regarded as portions of the Liturgy of less essential necessity to worshippers. We have, indeed, recently met with a Service written in all respects on the model of the masses of Haydn and Mozart: a most significant fact indeed. Dr. Garrett has not, however, given prominence to any particular piece. All are of equal merit and importance, the new movements—especially the Introit and Offertory, which admit of somewhat freer treatment—being all remarkable for the musicianly handling of very melodious themes.

The Morning and Evening Service, together with the Office for the Holy Communion, set to music in the key of E. By Joseph Barnby.

This entire service is divided into ten movements, which can be obtained singly, of which the second (Benedictus) is the subject of our remarks.

Whether different persons prefer the old to the new, the earliest expressions of an art with its necessary limitations to its later development with increased resources, there can be no question that English Church Music, with the improvements and additions modern science has given to the organ, besides the influence upon its exponents of general musical progress, should itself advance with the times, numbering among its followers musicians who are not content to reproduce the past or blindly follow antiquated traditions, but are eager to raise their branch of the art to a level of development with contemporary secular or sacred productions. In the movement before us, Mr. Barnby shows himself to be both desirous of this result, and to have striven for it with great judgment and success. Practical experience of orchestral effects and familiarity with the power our modern organ possesses of imitating them, as well as its own peculiar resources, have enabled him to write for that instrument a particularly brilliant and interesting accompaniment, while no one has had greater opportunities of acquiring a facility in vocal writing and an insight into vocal effect. In the endeavour to give force to the meaning of the text by frequent changes of the time and rhythm, the composition acquires a quasi-fantasia character, which is, however, partially atoned for by a recurrence in the Gloria to the opening motivi. If any lack of originality of idea exists, the treatment is frequently novel, and always vigorous, while it bears the unmistakable signs of thought and care.

A Collection of Kyries, Glorias, Chants, &c., &c. Compiled, composed, or arranged by W. T. Freemantle. Book I.

When we say that Mr. Freemantle numbers amongst his contributors Professor Macfarren, Messrs. Salaman, Tours, Walter Macfarren, and Monsieur Alex. Guilmant, it will readily be seen that, apart from his own compositions for the work, he has taken pains to secure for it the necessary "imprimatur," implied by its association with the names of so many prominent musicians. We should much regret if professors who have earned a reputation should allow themselves to be in any way concerned in a publication while ignorant of its merits. The public is, therefore, at liberty to take compilations of this class with a certain guarantee of their excellence. It would be invidious to select for particular approval any one of these twenty settings of the Kyrie Eleison. If twenty persons, after long separation, were to come suddenly together, a similar cry of congratulation would probably be on the lips of each, uttered without reflection or reserve. A number of musicians meet on a spiritual common ground, and evince a remarkable similarity in their conception of the situation. A few certainly endeavour to conceal their first impressions, and to assume a certain stiffness becoming to their dignity; but these more than all prove how a single sentence of unromantic prose is incapable of inspiring more than its single counterpart in music, and that though twenty musicians may at the same moment attempt it in twenty different corners of the earth, a comparison of their results will display an amiable unity in their appreciation of the subject. Yet inevitable as this is, we must remember that no two of them are ever intended to be heard at the same time, so that reflections inspired by reading them altogether are dissipated in actual practice. Viewed simply as twenty separate compositions we have only one fault to find. In his adaptation of a portion of the ballet-music from "Rosamunde" to the purposes of his work, Mr. Freemantle has offended in two ways. Firstly, by maiming the original, and secondly by running the risk of censure or offence in selecting a portion of an operatic work which is sufficiently popular to ensure its recognition by persons who dislike to hear in their churches compositions associated with the stage.

I will give thanks. Anthem composed for the Third Annual Festival of the London Church Choir Association at St. Paul's Cathedral, November 4th, 1875. By Edward J. Hopkins.

We must equally commend the bright, vigorous ideas, and the excellent musicianship manifested in these pages. The work is of some length, and consists of three movements; the first a chorus for four voices, with a free organ part; the second a quartett, "In God is my health and my glory;" and the last a chorus, containing many proofs of the author's thorough command of the resources of harmony. The resolution of the Dominant Minor 13th upon the Minor 3rd of the Tonic is a progression Herr Rubinstein has shown his fondness for, but it never seems to us quite satisfactory until left behind in the distance.

The Souls of the Righteous are in the Hands of God. Anthem for eight voices, composed by the Rev. Herbert Hall Woodward.

Although eight voices are certainly employed in this anthem, it is more with the idea of instrumental effect than as a display of the author's experience in eight-part writing. The very shortness of the piece may be its best recommendation.

Still like the dew. Song. Words from Moore's Songs and Ballads.

O Lord my God. Sacred Quartett.

Composed by John H. Gower.

The name of this composer is strange to us, but he claims attention, not only from the melodious character of his music, but from the graceful manner in which he moves his accompaniments throughout both the vocal pieces under notice. His faults—for it is better, perhaps, to dismiss these at first—are an over-anxiety to catch at tuneful phrases, whether they belong to himself or others, and a tendency to harmonise every note of the voice part. Both these defects are by no means uncommon, and the composer may be flattered by his admirers into the belief that other and greater men have done the same thing; but his best friends will tell him that the first step should be to aim at originality, and that the possession of power to harmonise fully is no reason why that power should be always exercised. The song has much merit, and in many places we have some extremely effective points, amongst which we may cite the concluding bars of holding notes, although we can scarcely reconcile ourselves to the sudden descent of the chromatic minor sixth to the key note, in the bass. The quartett contains some pure and expressive vocal writing which cannot be passed without unqualified praise. We particularly admire the manner in which the closes are occasionally delayed, and the care with which the voice parts are written must also be "honourably mentioned." We shall be glad to meet Mr. Gower on some future occasion.

Three Vocal Trios, for Female Voices.

No. 1, Faith. No. 2, Hope. No. 3, Charity.

The Italian words by G. Vitali; the English translation by the Rev. J. Troutbeck, M.A. Composed by G. Rossini.

It very often happens that when three or four poems, tales, or vocal pieces are published together, the popularity of one obscures the merits of the rest. So it has been with the three beautiful trios now before us. No. 3 has so thoroughly taken its place as one of the most melodious and brilliant little compositions for female voices ever written, that Nos. 1 and 2 have scarcely received that share of attention which they demand. We by no means say that the public verdict is wrong in selecting "Charity" as the best of the three trios, but unquestionably "Faith" and "Hope" are fully worthy of the reputation of their composer. In the first, especially, we have a sympathetic setting of the words not always to be found in the works of this writer, and the second, although perhaps not quite so expressive of the feeling it illustrates, abounds in charming passages, and is remarkable for a varied and characteristic accompaniment throughout. One quality, too, which should recommend these somewhat neglected trios to amateurs, is that the voices do not ascend so high as in the favourite one, and there is less individual display for the singers. This cheap edition will, no doubt, make these compositions more extensively known, especially as we find that each piece is to be obtained separately.

Five Introductory Voluntaries for the Organ. Composed by T. Mee Pattison.

The greatest recommendation we can give these pieces is that they are unambitious in plan, correctly and freely written, and of a simple melodious character quite certain to please. They will not only be found useful for performance during the more peaceful moments of the Church Service, but will no doubt serve admirably for teaching purposes.

Ashdown and Parry.

Popular Classics for the Pianoforte. Selected, edited and fingered by Walter Macfarren.

The twelve numbers issued in the fourth series of these gems of classical art are in every respect as interesting as those which have preceded them. The Minuet and Trio, in E flat, and Polonaise, in C, of Beethoven, the Two Minuets and Aria, from the first and fourth Partita of J. S. Bach, the Sonata, in E, of Paradies, the Rondo, La Galante, and Aria con Variazioni, of Hummel, and the Octave Study, of Steibelt, will have almost the charm of new works to the majority of amateurs; but Chopin's Nocturne, in E flat, Schumann's Wiegenliedchen, and Weber's two pieces, L'Invitation pour la Valse and Rondo in E flat, are comparatively well known, and we presume that Mr. Macfarren's object in including these was to show that "Classics" are not so called from the date of their composition, but from their excellence. As reliable editions, too, we must also commend these pieces, in proof of which we may cite Weber's Rondo in E flat, some of the passages in which, restored to their original form, will seem strange to many who have been accustomed so long to play them from incorrect editions. Mr. Macfarren deserves every credit for the care with which he has selected these varied specimens of the world-renowned composers. It is good to place such music by the side of the ephemeral pieces of the day, and we earnestly recommend them to those who can play them and those who can teach them.

Lamborn Cock.

The Black Knight. Romance for Piano. Composed by Arthur O'Leary.

Mr. O'Leary has always something to say, and his writings therefore are invariably welcome. In the piece under notice he gives us a musical legend, which the auditors may fill up as they please during the progress of the composition; but that the little sketch, unpretentious as it is, conveys a leading idea to an artistic mind may be gathered from the fact of the title having been suggested by the late Sir Sterndale Bennett. The agitated and melodious theme, in E flat minor, with which it opens is most effectively contrasted with the more placid subject in the relative major; and the brief episode which leads us back to the original key is thoroughly in sympathy with the character of the piece. With an intelligent audience the "Black Knight" may fairly rely upon a warm reception; and we can assure pianists who have sufficiently advanced to rely with certainty upon their fingers that they will be fully repaid for any practice the passages may demand.

The Pianoforte Student's Daily Study; comprising Scales, Chords, Arpeggi and Finger Exercises. Arranged by E. Ellice Jewell.

The authoress of this work has evidently deeply studied the theory of fingering, and has published the result of her study in one of the most perfect collections of Exercises we have yet seen. The whole of the scales, major and minor, in octaves, tenths, sixths, thirds and double notes are given; these are followed by chords, arpeggi on the key-notes, in three positions for both hands, in single notes and octaves. We then have the chromatic scale in octaves, tenths, sixths, thirds, and in contrary motion, with the French, English and German fingering, and also a method adopted, exclusively we believe, by Thalberg, but which we can scarcely recommend. Some preliminary exercises are also given, each of which has a definite object; and credit must be awarded for the extremely lucid manner in which the various difficulties encountered by all young players are pointed out and explained by examples. The circulation of these admirable exercises in schools would effect incalculable benefit upon the rising generation of pianists, and we cannot too strongly press them upon the attention of those teachers who desire that their pupils' fingers shall be trained to walk firmly before they are allowed to run.

O satisfy us early with Thy mercy. Composed by Henry Charles Banister.

This is one of a selection of Chamber Anthems "arranged for three eaqual (sic) voices with an accompaniment for the pianoforte." Words that commence with "O satisfy," and conclude with "Establish Thou it," would afford a capital exercise for the ingenuity of a musician to set them to any discovered form of musical rhythm without sacrificing the literary accent. Though Mr. Banister has not attempted the problem, he has written a very melodious and vocal movement which, without much reiteration of principal phrases, refers to them sufficiently to prove his endeavour to shape his thoughts with a due regard to coherency and design.

Weekes and Co.

Students' Edition of Classical Authors. Edited by Edmund H. Turpin.

The advertisements which constantly meet our eyes in the daily papers tell us how, if we only purchase the right books, we may learn almost every language "without a Master." Whether the Professors of languages would themselves agree in the possibility of this we cannot say; but certainly these works have an extensive sale, although we cannot assert that we have yet met any person who has become a proficient linguist solely by their aid. It now becomes a question whether by the issue of recognised works for students, we are not approaching the time when the words "Music without a Master" will head our publishers' lists, the lessons being included in the purchase-money of the pieces. As long as clearly engraved editions of classical compositions were published, with merely the leading fingers marked, everybody should warmly welcome them; but when we see the fingering fully given, the method of performing every doubtful passage printed in a foot-note, and now find that Mr. Turpin has commenced a series of pianoforte works with letter-press explanations indicating the composers' design in every phrase, we begin to reflect whether we are not training up a race of performers who will not only contrive to dispense with a master, but, in their conceit, imagine his lessons to be useless. Were we to advance this argument solely in the interest of teachers, it would of course be worthless, but we do so in the interest of art. Supply a pupil with the materials for thinking and you do him a positive good, but save him the trouble by printing and pencil-marking on his pieces and you do him a positive harm. Studying music and playing pieces are two distinct things; and one of the greatest masters we ever knew even went so far as to ask pupils who applied to him for lessons which they desired to do.

Apart from these considerations, however, we award the sincerest praise to Mr. Turpin for the excellent manner in which he has performed his task. Twelve numbers of the series are already published, and a careful examination of the explanations throughout each piece proves to us that the editor has thoroughly studied the compositions he undertakes to analyse. We would suggest, however, that it would be better if the key in which the several phrases are written were oftener mentioned; as, for instance, where the second subject in E flat minor in the first movement of the "Sonata pathétique" occurs; and also, in the same movement, where the "Grave" in G minor comes, after the pause, for certainly the words "Portion of Introduction" might mislead many students. The fingering is generally very good; but it appears to us that in many places it would be desirable to teach the principle of changing the finger upon a note, an example of which might be given in No. 4 (Mendelssohn's "Andante and Rondo Capriccioso"), bar 5, page 2, where the theme should be sustained in the right hand by changing the third finger to the fourth upon E.

Spring-Time. Part-Song. Words by B. Russell, Music by W. G. Marshall.

There is melody in this song, but the design of it leaves a feeling of monotony on the listeners which will, we fear, militate against its wide acceptance. First we have a theme, with a simple accompaniment, given to the Soprani: the basses then sing this over again, in the Dominant, with an accompaniment for Soprani, Alti, and Tenori in chorus. Next comes the same subject, in the original key, for the Tenori; and, lastly, the chorus is repeated, in the same form, ending with a coda. This can scarcely, perhaps, be truly termed a "Part-song;" but, if well sung, it may please in a drawing-room.

The Violin; its famous Masters and their Imitators. By George Hart.

If the author of this work had been more intent upon publishing an authentic history of the Violin, and less ambitious of writing a book, we think he would have been more successful. The "Dedication," which is "inscribed to the admirers of the leading instrument at home and abroad"—the likening of the backs of the finest violins, with the unrivalled varnish, to the "setting summer sun on cloud and wave"—the quotation from "Childe Harold," and the various anecdotes directly or indirectly connected with stringed instruments, somewhat detract from the effect upon those readers who seek only for accurate information upon the interesting subject to which the volume is devoted. Having said thus much, however, we must award the highest praise to Mr. Hart for this very satisfactory result of what must evidently have been the labour of many years. He is on safe ground when he arrives at the sixteenth century, leaving the early history of the violin in the hands of M. Fétis, who is, however, about as unreliable an authority as could have been selected. To enable the reader to understand the various types of Italian violins, Mr. Hart classes them into five distinct schools: the first, that of Brescia; the next (and most important), that of Cremona, the Neapolitan, embracing the makers of Milan and Naples; the third including the makers of Florence, Bologna and Rome; and the fourth, what he terms the Venetian school. This somewhat arbitrary division may be fairly accepted, although, as he says, Domenicus Montagnana, who had a Venetian fame, passed his early years at Cremona. Mr. Hart, of course, grows eloquent upon the subject of varnish, and we think rightly so; for there can be no question that in spite of much correspondence upon the matter, it does very materially influence the tone of the instrument. Upon this important question our author says: "A violin varnished with fine oil-varnish, like all good things, takes time to mature, and will not bear forcing in any way. At first the instrument is somewhat muffled, as the pores of the wood have become impregnated with oil. This makes the instrument heavy both in weight and sound; but as time rolls on the oil dries, leaving the wood mellowed and wrapped in an elastic covering, which yields to the tone of the instrument, and imparts to it much of its own softness." Some very valuable information is given respecting the peculiarities of style which distinguished the various makers, and the essential points of difference between the violins of Guarnerius and Stradiuarius are well described. Much credit is due to Mr. Hart for giving prominence to English makers; for, as he truly says, there can be no reason why violins should not, at the present moment, be produced in England which should fully reach the standard of merit maintained in the days of our forefathers, when, as we know, very excellent instruments were made here. Before concluding our notice of this book, we must not omit to mention the very fine wood engravings, from photographs, of the works of Stradiuarius, Guarnerius, Amati, and others, which are plentifully scattered throughout the volume, and materially add to its value.

Holy, Holy, Holy. Short full Anthem or Introit for Trinity Sunday.

If ye love Me. For Whit-Sunday. By Jacob Bradford.

These are both reprints from the Musical Standard. The first is extremely tuneful, while the answering points between the accompaniment and voices are rendered effective by their very simplicity. The 8ths between extreme parts in the accompaniment on the last page, score 3, bars 1 to 2, are not accounted for by the unison of the voices at the same place.

Rivingtons.

A Book of Litanies, Metrical, and Prose, with an Evening Service and accompanying Music. Arranged under the musical editorship of W. S. Hoyte.

It is matter of surprise that a compilation of this class has not appeared before. Manuals of devotion and collections of hymns abound, while Anglicans have hitherto been content that the solitary Litany found in the Prayer Book should represent an ancient and most popular form of worship. The catalogue of this collection proves its emanation from a section of the clergy, and precludes the possibility of its acceptance generally. For although the "Litany of the Blessed Sacrament" alone treads on controversial ground, its contents would be sufficient to condemn the whole volume in the opinion of the opponents of the doctrine of the Real Presence. The "Evening Service," moreover, has nothing to do with the Evensong of the Prayer Book, but is an original compilation somewhat after the manner of compline. The Litanies are divided into "Metrical" and "Prose," the latter founded on the model of that in the Prayer Book, the former consisting of verses of three lines with a response sometimes varied, at others running through the whole poem. In many instances, such as No. 2, page 15, "Shepherd of the straying sheep," these approach to a high standard of literary excellence. With such contributors as Dr. Stainer, the Rev. J. B. Dykes, Mr. Berthold Tours, Mr. E. H. Thorne, and Dr. Gauntlett, the editor has secured music of proportionate merit, while Mr. Hoyte, both by his arrangements and original tunes, has done much towards securing the success and importance of the work.

HOW SHOULD ORGANISTS BE SELECTED?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—In common, I doubt not, with many of your readers, I had been looking for some further correspondence in this month's number of the Musical Times on the topic of "Selection of Organists;" but as this is not the case, permit me to remark on one or two points touched upon in Mr. Stark's letter in your October issue. I have nothing to say respecting the plan he suggests for testing the fitness of an organist—that may be left to individual cases. I think, however, that, admitting the advantage of candidates for an organ appointment having passed a musical examination of some sort, this, in itself, would not meet the complaint of Mr. Stark, that "persons in business, city clerks, &c., hold appointments at good churches, and thus keep out of employment those who look to their profession for their daily bread." If it could possibly (as in the course of years it may) be an understood thing, that the passing a musical examination was a preliminary requisite for a candidature, it would not have the effect of reducing the number of amateur organists, but simply be another means of raising the musical standard in the particular department. So that, after all, this would only be one among many other results of a more general and thorough musical education of the people, which is, I presume, what Mr. Stark, with other able musicians of the present day, is aiming at. If, as Mr. Stark implies, there are many instances of ignorant amateurs holding good appointments, it is to be deplored; and being myself an amateur organist of fifteen years' standing, I do most cordially agree with him. But he would hardly expect that a time should ever come when those who may have had the advantage of a thorough musical education, but, from various reasons, may possibly be unable or unwilling to follow the profession altogether, should be excluded from competing for organists' appointments, merely because they are amateurs.

I heartily endorse what Mr. Stark says as to the silent countenance and support which it were well if the clergy generally gave to their organists, and hold it to be, with them, not optional, but a duty, to attend the choir rehearsals as frequently as possible. As to his concluding observations on what he rightly terms the "beggarly sums" offered at many good churches as the organist's stipend, there can be but one opinion among those who know anything on the subject; and that such should be so often the case only goes to prove how, with all our vaunted musical advancement, we are yet, as a people, miserably deficient in acknowledging the "artistic" labourer worthy of his hire. But while, as at most of our "respectable" churches, the organist is looked upon as merely one among a number of salaried officials, and ranking scarcely above the verger or pew-opener, I fear we cannot hope for any great improvement or radical change in this respect.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

Dulwich, 4th Nov., 1875. Edward D. Miller.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

Andover.—Two successful amateur concerts were given in the Town Hall on Thursday, the 4th ult., with the professional assistance of Mr. W. S. Bambridge of Marlborough College (piano), Mr. C. Fletcher, Southampton (violin), and Signor Torretti (bass). The express object of the concerts was to assist the fund for the erection of an organ in Fyfield parish-church. Mr. Fletcher's violin-playing was highly appreciated, and Signor Torretti was well received in his songs. Mr. Bambridge played a study in F sharp by Meyer, and on being recalled, gave a "study on the shake," by Schmidt. Mendelssohn's "Vintage Song" (chorus for men's voices), and "God save the Queen," brought the programme to a close.

Armitage Bridge.—A special service was held in St. Paul's Church, in connection with the opening of the organ, on Tuesday evening the 2nd ult. The service was opened with the hymn "O Worship the King," tune "Hanover," which was magnificently sung. Prayers were read by the vicar, the Rev. G. C. B. Madden, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. J. Ingham Brooke, rector of Thornhill. The Magnificat was sung to the "St. Saviour's Tone" in D. The Anthem was "O give thanks" (Sir George Elvey). The Versicles were sung to Tallis; after the sermon the "Old Hundredth" was given, the whole congregation joining. The organ was opened by Mr. J. C. Beaumont, the organist of the church, who displayed great skill and judgment throughout the service. The opening voluntary was "Slow movement, from Spohr's Quartett in G minor." During collection, "Slow movement, from Hummel's Trio in C, Op. 65." Concluding voluntaries, "Hallelujah" (Messiah), Handel; "We worship God" (Judas), Handel; and Haydn's "Hymn to the Emperor," with variations, all of which were played in a masterly manner. The organ was originally built in 1848 by the late Mr. Bishop of London. The extensive alterations and additions to the instrument just completed, under the direction of W. S. Barber, Esq., have been carried out by Messrs. Jardine & Co., of Manchester, and reflect upon them the highest credit.

Bristol.—On Thursday evening, the 18th ult., Mr. F. Todd, of Clevedon, gave a very instructive and elaborate lecture on "The History of Sacred Music," in the large Colston Hall. The lecturer observed that if his task were to deal with the question of English music, he would only have to go back 400 years, for, said he, we made but little figure in music until the year 1400; indeed, the oldest piece of music we had, was preserved in the Pepysian library of Magdalen College, Oxford, and was written shortly after the battle of Agincourt. The history of sacred music, unlike the history of a nation, was a history of all that was noble, pure, and good. He sketched the rise and progress of early Hebrew, Egyptian, Greek, Roman, English, and German music, &c., to the present time, giving some very entertaining sketches also of the lives of the greatest composers of sacred music. The lecturer was warmly applauded at the close. Mr. George Riseley, the organist of the Hall, ably illustrated the lecture by playing on the grand organ examples of Hebrew and Early Church Music, and selections from the works of Palestrina, Gibbons, Purcell, Handel, Bach, Haydn, Mozart, Mendelssohn, and Sir W. S. Bennett.

Buxton.—Mr. Julian Adams has just brought to an end a most successful season of concerts at Buxton, extending from March to November. The orchestral performances have included the principal works of all the great masters. The most eminent of modern vocalists have also contributed to the success of the concerts. During the last performance Mr. Adams addressed the crowded audience in a few well-chosen words of thanks.

Capel Curig, North Wales.—On Friday, the 5th ult., an amateur concert was held in the School-room for the benefit of the Children of the School. Miss Roberts, Miss Marriott, Mr. Thomas, Mr. Williams, and Mr. W. J. Mollineux were highly effective in their songs, which were ably accompanied on the harp and harmonium.

Christchurch (New Zealand).—The choir of S. Michael and All Angels (the cathedral church of Canterbury Province) gave a concert on September 9th, under the direction of the choirmaster and organist, Mr. Robert Parker. The first part consisted of Barnett's Cantata, The Ancient Mariner, the solo parts in which were sustained by Miss Rosina Carandini, Miss Parkerson, Mrs. C. M. Taylor, Mr. Appleby, and Mr. Knox. The chorus and band (the latter under the leadership of Mr. C. Bonnington) numbered about fifty performers, and the work was rendered throughout in a manner which was highly creditable. The second part included Weber's Jubilee overture, arranged for two pianos (8 hands), admirably played by the Misses Marshman and Cane, and Schubert's Impromptu in B flat, for pianoforte solo. Mozart's overture, "Der Schauspieldirector," was capitally given by the band.——On the 29th of the same month (Feast of S. Michael and All Angels) the annual Dedication Festival of the church was held. The services included full choral communion and evensong. At the latter service the processional was Dr. Longhurst's "March, march, soldiers of Christ," and the recessional "For thee O dear, dear country" to a tune by the organist of the church. The service was Garrett in F, and the anthem a selection from Spohr's Last Judgment. A diocesan choral association has recently been formed, numbering nearly a hundred members. The first annual festival will shortly be held in S. Michael's Church, when Goss's "Praise the Lord, O my soul" will be given as the anthem, and Barnby's "We march to victory" as the processional. Mr. R. Parker is choirmaster, and Mr. Neville Barnett, F.C.O., organist to the Association.

Cleckheaton (Yorkshire).—On Wednesday, the 10th ult., the fourth annual concert of the Tradesmen's Cricket Club was held at the Co-operative Hall, the artists being the Yorkshire Concert Party, assisted by Mdlle. Bertha Brousil, solo violinist. Miss Pauline Grayston sang Madame Bodda-Pyne's vocal waltz, "Inez," and "Rory O'More," in excellent style, and received an enthusiastic encore for the latter. Mr. Dodds was encored in "Will o' the wisp," and Miss Kennedy and Mr. Goodall were deservedly recalled. The violin solos of Mdlle. Brousil were much appreciated.

Clifton.—On Tuesday evening, the 16th ult., Mr. James C. Daniel gave one of his series of Clifton Winter Entertainments at the Victoria Rooms. The artists being Mr. Charles Hallé (pianoforte), Madame Norman-Neruda (violin), and Miss Ada Jackson, of Clifton (vocalist). The performance was of the highest class, and gave the greatest satisfaction to a large and brilliant audience.——On Wednesday evening, the 17th ult., a very successful concert was given in the Victoria Rooms, in aid of the funds for building St. Matthew's Church, Moorfields, Bristol. The programme was well selected, and consisted of trios, duets, songs, and solos. The vocalists were Miss Bretelle and Mr. A. Tovey; the instrumentalists, Signor Paggi (flute), Mr. Norgrove (violin), Mr. Pavey (violoncello), and Dr. Colman (piano).

Dundee.—On the 29th October the Amateur Musical Society gave a performance, for the first time in Dundee, of Barnett's Cantata, The Ancient Mariner. The choruses were sung by members of the Society, numbering about 50 voices. Mr. W. H. Richmond (pianoforte) and Mr. S. C. Hirst (harmonium) were the accompanists. Miss Annie Sinclair (soprano), Miss D'Alton (contralto), Mr. Pearson (tenor) and Mr. Wadmore (baritone) were the soloists; and Mr. John Kinross, conductor of the Society, directed the performance. A large audience filled the area of the Kinnaird Hall.

Edinburgh.—At the annual general meeting of the University Musical Society, held in the Music Class Room, on the 15th ult., Professor Oakeley in the chair, the report of the secretary showed that the number of students last year was the largest the Society had yet attained. The chairman, in an eloquent address, gave an interesting account of the gradual development of the Association to its present state of prosperity; and several speeches followed, in which Professor Oakeley's labours in the cause were warmly eulogised. The proceedings concluded with a performance on the organ, the selection principally consisting of reminiscences, chiefly from the students' part-songs of former University concerts.

Fleetwood.—A concert was given in the Whitworth Institute, on Friday evening, the 12th ult., in aid of a Fund for educating an Abyssinian Boy (who was brought over to this country after the war) as a missionary to his own countrymen. Miss Crewdson (Ulverstone), Messrs. Thornborough (Kirkham), Phillips and Burt, from the Philharmonic Hall, Liverpool, Mr. J. P. Smith, musical director of the 22nd Royal Cheshire Regiment, and Mr. Warner, of Rossall College, kindly gave their services. The pianist was Dr. Aspinall of Fleetwood. A feature of the evening was a flute solo by Mr. J. P. Smith, who was rapturously encored. Several pieces by Hatton, Callcott, Dibdin, &c., were well sung, and reflected great credit on the performers.

GREAT MALVERN.—A morning Recital was given at Mr. Haynes's concert-rooms, on Wednesday, the 17th ult., by Mr. Charles Hallé and Madame Norman-Neruda, under the direction of Mr. James C. Daniel, of Bristol and Clifton. This being the first time these artists had ever been to the town, considerable interest was excited, and nearly every ticket was disposed of a week before the performance. The concert proved a great treat to the large audience present.

GREAT YARMOUTH.—On the 17th ult., the Rev. G. Venables, Vicar of the parish, and several other leading gentlemen of the town met in the Record Room, Town Hall, for the purpose of presenting Henry Stonex, Esq., organist of the parish church, with a testimonial consisting of £81, accompanied by a list of subscribers. The Vicar occupied the chair, and in making the presentation spoke of Mr. Stonex in eulogistic terms, and referred to his readiness and anxiety always to do all he could to promote the services in the church where he had officiated as organist for 25 years. Mr. W. Worship also spoke of Mr. Stonex in high terms, and the services he had rendered to the town by means of the Great Yarmouth Musical Society, of which he was the able conductor. Mr. Stonex suitably responded, thanking the Vicar and Mr. Worship for the kind remarks they had made about him, and expressing his desire to do his best in the position in which he was placed in connection with the church and the town.

GREENHITHE.—The Autumn Soirée of the Greenhithe Musical Society was held on the 6th ult. in the National School-room, when a long and varied programme was presented, and much appreciated by a numerous audience. The various solos, anthems, choruses and instrumental pieces were satisfactorily given, and elicited frequent applause. Mr. T. B. Buckham conducted.

KEIGHLEY.—A concert was held at the Mechanics' Institute, on Saturday, the 13th ult., the vocalists being the Yorkshire Concert Party. An attractive miscellaneous programme was provided and rendered in excellent style, several encores being awarded during the evening.

LAVINGTON, PETWORTH.—On Tuesday, the 2nd ult., the opening of the Wilberforce Memorial Church took place. The Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishops of Chichester, Winchester, Rochester, and Ely, and about 150 clergymen were present. A most eloquent and appropriate sermon was preached by Canon Liddon. The services were well rendered by the church choir, assisted by several of the choristers from Chichester Cathedral, the Precentor of which also intoned the services. Mr. J. G. Smith (an old choir boy) was a most able accompanist.

LONDONDERRY.—The St. Columb's Choral Union gave an operatic Recital in the City Hall, on Thursday evening, the 28th October, Der Freischütz having been selected for performance. Mrs. Muncey, of London, was the principal soprano, and was highly successful. Mr. Turpin and Mr. H. Houseley presided at the pianoforte and harmonium. The overture was played with precision and force, and the choruses, especially the "Laughing Chorus" (in which Mr. Philson introduced the solos of Kilian, the peasant, with effect), the "Bridesmaids'" and "Huntsmen's" choruses were given with a clearness which evinced admirable training. Mr. Byron undertook the part of Rudolph, and, in his scena, "Thro' the forest," achieved a great success. Mr. Killoch, in the part of Caspar, received marked appreciation. Miss Forssman, in her song, "Comes a gallant," the duet between Agnes and Annie, and the trio with Agnes, Annie and Rudolph, received well-merited demonstrations of applause. The piano used on the occasion was one of Kirkman's manufacture.

MAIDENHEAD.—The Philharmonic Society gave the third concert of the season on the 4th ult. The first part was miscellaneous, and the second consisted of Romberg's Lay of the Bell. Miss Jessie Royd, Mr. V. Harding, and Mr. O. Christian interpreted the solos, and the choruses were rendered with spirit and precision. Herr Rosenthal was leader; Mr. Goulden presided at the pianoforte, and Herr Max Schultz conducted.

PARKGATE.—The performance of Handel's Judas Maccabæus by the Rawmarsh and Parkgate Philharmonic Society, in the United Methodist Free Church, on Monday evening, the 8th ult., was quite equal to, if it did not surpass, any oratorio previously given by the Society. The band and chorus numbered about 120 performers. There was some unsteadiness in the rendering of the choruses, "O Father, whose almighty power," and "Hear us, O Lord." As a whole, however, the choir sang splendidly. The principal vocalists were Madame Walker, soprano; Miss Chadwick, contralto; Mr. R. Sutcliffe, tenor; and Mr. T. Harrison, bass. Madame Walker was enthusiastically applauded at the conclusion of the airs, "O Liberty" and "Wise men flattering." In connection with the former, the violoncello obbligato by Mr. J. Whitehead was very fine. Miss Chadwick, in the air, "Father of Heaven," was exceedingly successful. Her duet, "O lovely Peace," with Madame Walker, met with an unanimous encore. Mr. Sutcliffe sang the air, "Sound an alarm," with excellent effect, and Mr. T. Harrison was much applauded in "Rejoice, O Judah." The members of the band deserve the utmost credit for the manner in which they contributed to the success of the performance. Mr. T. Brameld, as conductor, officiated with his usual ability.

POPLAR.—An entertainment was given at the Town Hall, on the 24th ult., by the members of the Trinity Mutual Improvement Society, assisted by Messrs. Charles and Ernest Durham, whose efforts contributed in no small degree to the success of the evening.

REDDITCH.—An amateur concert was given in the school-room, Webheath, on Monday evening, the 15th ult., on behalf of the church expenses. Several choruses were creditably rendered by the choir, and vocal solos and duets were contributed by Miss K. Smith, Mr. Avery, and Mr. Taylor, the latter gentleman's song, "Danger on the line," being encored. A pianoforte solo on "Irish Airs" was well played by Miss Isabel Smith. The concert was very successful.

RICHMOND.—The Gregorian Festival which took place in the parish church, on the 11th ult., attracted a very large congregation. The service, on the whole, was exceedingly well given. The Anthem, by Dr. Stainer, was the only modern composition in the selection; but the music was appropriate throughout. Mr. C. Warwick Jordan, Mus. Bac., presided at the pianoforte.

SHEFFIELD.—On the 13th ult. a series of fortnightly Saturday afternoon organ recitals and concerts were inaugurated at the Albert Hall, on which occasion there was a large attendance. To Mr. J. T. Parkin, the promoter, considerable praise is due for the introduction of such excellent entertainments at a cheap rate. Mr. Parkin opened the recital with a "Concert Fantasie," by Dr. Stewart, and joined Herr Schollhammer in a duet, "Notturno," for viola and organ, which contributed materially to the success of the entertainment. Rossini's "La Charité" arranged for organ, piano, and violin, with Mrs. Mellowes at the pianoforte, gave great satisfaction. Mr. Johnson was the vocalist.——On the 19th ult. Mr. W. Pyatt, of Nottingham, gave a ballad concert in the Albert Hall. Madame Cave-Ashton, Miss Helen D'Alton, Signor Fabrini (in the unavoidable absence of Mr. Sims Reeves), and Signor Foli were the artists. Madame Cave-Ashton, who made her first appearance in Sheffield, was highly effective in "My mother bids me bind my hair" and "The bird that came in Spring," in which Mr. Nicholson played the flute obbligato. Miss Helen D'Alton was encored in "Looking back." Mdlle. Bertha Brousil played one of De Beriot's violin concertos in a very effective manner, and also took part with Mr. Nicholson (flute) and Mr. Naylor (pianoforte) in the overture to Dichter und Bauer, as well as in several other pieces. Mr. S. Naylor officiated as accompanist.

STIFFORD, NEAR GRAYS.—On the 14th ult., the Harvest Thanksgiving Service was held at Stifford Church. The occasion was made unusually interesting by the opening of a new organ built by Messrs. Maley, Young and Oldknow, of Ossulton-street, N.W. The Rev. E. Lethbridge intoned the service (Tallis in C), and sang the tenor solo in the Anthem, "O Lord, Thou art God alone," the soprano solos being rendered by Mrs. Littlehales and Miss Beech. The choir was well trained, and the Rev. C. P. Merriott preached. Mr. Oldknow presided at the organ.

WELLINGBOROUGH.—Mendelssohn's Elijah was given on the 27th Oct. by the members of the Philharmonic Society. The principal artists were Miss Ada Moore, Mrs. M. A. Warren, Mr. W. Williams, and Mr. Orlando Christian. Mrs. Warren in "Woe unto them" and "O rest in the Lord" was loudly applauded, and Mr. Christian was very efficient in the part of Elijah. The trio, "Lift thine eyes," was redemanded, and the rendering of the choruses showed that the work had been well studied. Mr. P. H. Diemer presided at the harmonium, and Mr. Harrington conducted.

WINDSOR.—The first concert of the season took place in the Town Hall on Monday evening, the 8th ult., under the direction of the late Mayor (W. Underhay, Esq.), and under the patronage of Her Royal Highness Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein. Beethoven's Sonata in D, Op. 12, for violin and piano, was brilliantly executed by Mr. J. S. Liddle (violin) and Mr. J. H. Gower (piano). The other instrumental pieces included Corelli's Sonata in A, for the violin, well rendered by Mr. Liddle; Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata," brilliantly executed by Mr. J. H. Gower; and a Meditation on Bach, for violin, pianoforte, and organ, by Gounod, played by Miss E. Underhay (who presided at the organ), and Messrs. Liddle and Gower. The lady vocalist was Miss Annie Sinclair, who contributed several songs. Mr. Sexton, of St. George's Chapel, made his first appearance on this occasion, and was well received. Mr. Orlando Christian and Mr. Henry Guy were the other vocalists.

New Octavo Edition.

BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS. Edited and Fingered by AGNES ZIMMERMANN. Paper Covers, 5s.; Cloth, gilt, 7s. 6d.

"Of all the small editions yet issued we must certainly give the palm to that before us, which is a very careful reprint of the full-size publication edited by Miss Agnes Zimmermann, of which we spoke in the highest terms when it first appeared a year or two since. This volume is not only the best engraved, printed, and bound that we have seen—it is far and away the most carefully edited; so that, look where we will, and with whatsoever keenness we may, it is impossible to discover a mistake. The accomplished editress—one of the most distinguished of the later pupils of the Royal Academy of Music—has evinced sound judgment in her treatment of questionable matters, and has earned the gratitude of future art-students by the patient care she has bestowed upon the fingering of this mass of music—no light task when its extent and (in some instances) complicated character are borne in mind; and, by her interpolated marks of phrasing, she has done much towards rendering the least intelligible of Beethoven's intricacies clear and appreciable. All honour, then, to Miss Zimmermann, who has accomplished her difficult and responsible duty to Beethoven's memory and to the public in a manner above all praise, and has presented to the world one of the greatest products of the human mind with a completeness and thoroughness worthy its immortal author."—The Queen, Oct. 15.

EIGHTY MUSICAL SENTENCES

TO ILLUSTRATE CHROMATIC CHORDS.

BY

G. A. MACFARREN, MUS. DOC.,

Professor of Music in the University of Cambridge, and Principal of the Royal Academy of Music.

FROM THE PREFACE.—Any isolated example of a chord, even with its resolution if it be a discord, can give as little idea of its effect upon the sense or meaning of a musical phrase, as can a word in a column of a dictionary represent the spirit of a poetical passage in which it may occur. Analogous to the literary quotations with which lexicographers elucidate the meanings they expound, are designed to be these concise strains. It would have been very easy to cite, from the works of the great masters, instances of every chord and every progression herein exemplified; but impossible to find complete phrases, in which some of the chords were not so surrounded by other matter that their distinction would have been troublesome for a learner. It is, therefore, perhaps, best to the purpose to have framed these original sentences, which, in systematic order, display the entire subject. The author is happy to issue this publication as a confession of musical faith, avowing implicit belief in the harmonic theory on which it is based, and thorough conviction that the theory accounts for everything that is beautiful, and guards against what is unsatisfactory in musical combination and progression.

In publishing the above, Chappell and Co. feel they are supplying a want long felt by Amateur Organists, as this work removes the difficulty amateurs experience in performing Handel's songs from the scores. Being published in three lines, the solo parts and accompaniments are easily and effectively distributed.

The words of each song being printed upon the top line will be found of great service to the performer in giving proper expression to the songs.

AGENTS REQUIRED IN EVERY TOWN FOR

THE NEW PEDAL ATTACHMENT FOR PIANOFORTES.

MR. J. HAMILTON begs to inform Organists, Organ Students and others, that his invention for attaching Pedals to Pianofortes is meeting with great success and is much approved of, as the subjoined testimonials will show. The new action is entirely noiseless, and its simplicity and cheapness must ultimately supersede the cumbrous, expensive, and rattling organ action as usually applied. It can easily be attached to a pianoforte, as it is sent complete, with printed instructions "How to attach." The pedals are manufactured of well-seasoned, hard wood, and are similar in scale and compass to the pedals made for organs of the present day.

A set of Radiating and Concave Pedals (30 notes, C to F), with action, price £5 5s. Or, Straight Pedal Board, with action, price £4 4s.

ORGAN-TONED HARMONIUMS.

W. HATTERSLEY & CO.'S CELEBRATED ORGAN-TONED HARMONIUMS, which for Durability, Sweetness of Tone, and Rapidity of Touch, are unequalled by any other maker.

These splendid instruments are manufactured only by W. HATTERSLEY & Co., with improved sound board, in double veneered cases, and from well-seasoned material, and have been tried side by side with the best English, American, French, and German Harmoniums, and have been pronounced to be far better both in quality of tone, variety in the stops, repetition in touch, and predominance of the treble over the bass. The large instruments, with double action, and several other improvements, are nearer to the organ than anything yet made.

W. H. & Co. have now enlarged their Manufactory and increased their hands, so that they may be able to keep up to the demand, which has been so pressing of late.

Price from 7 Guineas.

"Archdeacon Downall begs to inform Messrs. Snell, that the Harmonium has arrived safely, and the case (empty) is returned to-day. The instrument gives great satisfaction."

From W. R. Williams, Esq., Professor of Music, Tydee, Newport.

"Gentlemen, "Mon., March 7, 1873.

"Having had several instruments from you during the last ten months, I feel it nothing more than a duty on my part to candidly tell you that each instrument has far exceeded the expectations of the purchaser, and given entire satisfaction, without a single exception. The instrument that has arrived to-day is a model of workmanship, and a marvel of cheapness. I wish to make particular mention of the 'Pneumatic Sourdine' stop, which I thought was a sham when I first saw your list, but which I find softens the bass most effectually. In fact, your instruments are, without flattery, really good and wonderfully cheap. If you wish, you may give publicity to these remarks, which have been unsolicited, but duly merited.

"Respectfully yours,
"To Messrs. E. and W. Snell." "W. R. WILLIAMS.

THE MUSICAL TIMES
AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.
JANUARY 1, 1876.

THE PROSPECTS OF THE COMING MUSICAL SEASON.

BY HENRY C. LUNN.

WE have been told by Talleyrand that our eyes are placed in front of the head in order that we may always look forward. This witty method of enforcing the necessity of anticipating rather than regretting, we have always considered as one of the best of the many good things said by the far-seeing statesman; and there can be little doubt that he, as well as many others, thoroughly proved the benefit of acting upon this axiom. In looking towards the future, we can invariably conjure up happy visions of pleasures yet unknown; but how few of us can recall the past without feeling that the road we have travelled is strewn with the wrecks of many of our brightest hopes, although we may perhaps be able to cling to the recollection of some of the sunny spots we have lingered over in our journey. Those of our readers who have duly perused our annual summary of the Musical Season must be fully sensible of the tender manner in which we have been compelled to touch upon the many unfulfilled promises to be found in the brilliant prospectuses issued at the commencement of the year. We have, indeed, felt that in many cases the kindest thing we can do is to tear up the list of pledges, and glance only at what has actually been done. As in the lenient reviews of a parliamentary session, we may presume that shortcomings cannot be helped. Important works in music, like important measures in politics, are too often pushed aside to make way for more trivial matters; and when, at the conclusion of the season, the "massacre of the innocents" commences, it is well perhaps to shut our eyes, and believe such an act to be not only justifiable, but inevitable.

But in the present instance we have set ourselves a pleasing task; for, as Talleyrand suggests, we are going to "look forward." On no New Year's Day within our recollection have we been enabled to speak so hopefully of the coming musical season as on that which ushers in 1876; and we have good reason to believe that, at least in the majority of instances, every plan thus temptingly displayed before us will be satisfactorily carried out.

A portion of the interesting selection of works comprised in the scheme of the present series of Saturday Concerts at the Crystal Palace has already been given; but on the recommencement of the performances after the Christmas vacation, a rich mine of artistic wealth will still be in store for the subscribers. Whilst thanking Mr. Manns, however, for many things that he has done to render his concerts attractive, we cannot but express a wish that he had left some others undone. The re-arranging and embellishing compositions which are in themselves perfect in the form originally intended is a descent from the high purpose which the concerts have been presumed to hold steadily in view; and we should be sorry if the undiscriminating applause with which such exhibitions have been greeted should be accepted as a reason for persevering with a system which cannot but shock the feelings of those amongst the audience who hold these works in reverence.

At the Alexandra Palace the production of Handel's strangely neglected Oratorio, "Esther," has conferred the highest honour upon all concerned; and it is also extremely gratifying to find that compositions of the "British Army Quadrille" school are henceforth to be excluded. During the season many works which must command attention will be given; and with so excellent a band and choir as we find assembled under the experienced direction of Mr. Weist Hill, there can scarcely be a doubt that the Muswell-hill concerts may fairly enter into an amicable rivalry with those at Sydenham.

The Monday Popular Concerts, which commenced on the 8th November last, will continue until the middle of March, and will present a powerful attraction to the lovers of Chamber Music. At these concerts not only may it be relied upon that the highest-class instrumentalists will be engaged, but that they will positively appear; and it is a feature that the dates of their respective performances are usually given in the prospectus issued at the commencement of the season. The morning concerts on Saturdays may be also mentioned as in every respect equal to the long established Monday evening performances.

We are glad to find that the Sacred Harmonic Society begins to show unmistakable signs of awakening from its lethargy. It is true that sacred works of acknowledged merit which have never yet been given by this Association are still passed over; but the revival of Handel's "Deborah" has been a step in the right direction; and the "selection from the lesser known works of Handel and other composers," which is announced for the 25th of next month, may be accepted as an indication that entire works of "other composers" will follow in due time. Meantime, Sir Michael Costa deserves every credit for the improvement he has effected in the choir: and if the "additional accompaniments" could be a little more toned down, there can be no question that the orchestral portions of the Oratorios would be listened to with infinitely more pleasure by the majority of the audience.

We should certainly be puzzled to divine the connection between fish and music, but it appears an understood thing that no Aquarium can be made successful unless backed up by concerts. London, of course, must not be behindhand in following the fashion, and accordingly the Westminster Aquarium is, we understand, to combine these two attractions; and, if we may trust report, the musical portion of the entertainment will be of a superior order. The fact of Mr. Arthur Sullivan being engaged as conductor would sufficiently warrant the supposition; but we are also informed that the best available talent, both in the vocal and instrumental departments, will be secured, and that every effort will be made to ensure a perfect ensemble in the rendering of the compositions. We could wish that a concert-room which promises so much were separated from the distracting influences which must inevitably attend the contemplation of ocean life; but it is good, perhaps, that music should find even a watery home in the metropolis, and the enterprise, therefore, has our best wishes.

The Philharmonic and other orchestral concerts which will be given during the season are tolerably certain to mitigate the severity of that conservative line of policy which ruled their programmes for so long a period. "Young England," as well as "Young Germany," is growing up to manhood, and places must now be reserved for each at our artistic feasts. When a tedious lecturer announced that he was speaking for posterity, it was cleverly remarked that if he talked much longer his audience would be there. So it is with the "music of the future." We have gone on writing and reasoning on this subject so many years, that the term has now become an absurdity, for a generation has grown around us which knows nothing of former prejudices, and will take the liberty of judging works on their own merits. Man grows old, but art is ever young; and though it may put forth various forms, its principles are too deeply rooted to be seriously affected by the temporary cold or warmth on the surface.

What Mr. Mapleson may mean by calling his new building on the Thames Embankment the "National Opera-House," we are at a loss to understand. It is true that we have admitted the Italian language to usurp the place of our own for operatic purposes so long that it may be the fashion to believe no other tongue suitable; but we are not to be ruled by fashion, and independent thinkers are beginning to see that lyrical works should be sung either in the language originally employed by their composers or in that of the country where they are performed. In the name of musical England, then, we protest against the word "National" being prefixed to an institution which has nothing national about it; and whilst wishing it all the success it deserves, we must take leave—in spite of the flowery speeches spoken over the "first brick" and the "first stone"—to regard it simply as a commercial speculation, reared upon the solid foundation of aristocratic support, and appealing to the general public only for that small additional strength which may be found necessary to ensure its stability. If, therefore, we are led to hope for any real artistic benefit from the erection of this edifice, it is because the love of the feeble lyrical drama is declining, and not because artistic lessees are anxious to educate the public to a taste for better works. The pressure from without has been gradually strengthening, and the opening of a new building affords an excellent opportunity for partially yielding to its force. Wagner's Opera, "Lohengrin," for instance, has been long demanded by the public voice, and this demand being responded to by accommodating managers, the success has been such as to warrant us in confidently predicting that the claims of those who seek for novelty will in future not be so utterly disregarded as was formerly the case; and that if the coming season should not prove so satisfactory as we could wish, it will not be frittered away in the presentation of works for the mere exhibition of a number of untried vocalists.

The Royal Italian Opera—an establishment which at least has the merit of justifying its title—will no doubt "fully sustain its reputation." Various rumours are afloat, and we may perhaps fairly presume that in sympathy, like its rival, with the slight alteration in public taste, the favourite singers will not only be heard in their favourite parts, but will occasionally appear in some Operas which are not familiar to this country. In spite of the conservative nature of this institution, we are certain that even the holders of boxes are beginning to get tired of the usual routine of the season, and the powerful counter-attraction which may this year be confidently expected will no doubt nerve the lessee to some little exertion. It is difficult indeed to imagine that two houses for the performance of the Italian Lyrical Drama can receive adequate support; but assuredly the difficulty must be materially increased when both establishments—merely from the spirit of intense competition—act the same Opera on the same night.

The Birmingham Musical Festival, which is announced to take place in August, will be, as usual, one of the principal events of the season. At this meeting we always look forward to the production of compositions which, but for this friendly home, might probably never obtain a hearing. Why it is that no Musical Society in London should commission a composer to write works especially for its concerts—as was done years ago by the Philharmonic Society—we cannot imagine; but the fact is before us, and Birmingham has nobly earned our gratitude for past favours. Unusual exertions have been made to preserve the high character of these Festivals at this year's celebration, which will inaugurate the second century of their existence. The Marquis of Hertford will be the President, and the conductorship will again be placed in the hands of Sir Michael Costa. A new Oratorio, composed for the occasion by Professor G. A. Macfarren, will be produced. This indeed will be a welcome novelty, for the genius of its composer in the illustration of biblical text has been so powerfully shown in "St. John the Baptist," that additional interest will be created in his second sacred work, which, from all we have heard, is likely to prove even an advance upon that which has stamped his fame as an Oratorio writer. Professor Niels W. Gade, of Copenhagen, has also undertaken the composition of a secular Cantata, and will visit England for the express purpose of conducting it. The third original composition will be a secular Cantata from the pen of Mr. F. H. Cowen, who has already shown a talent which will no doubt ripen under the fostering care of those who have so often lent a helping hand to rising English artists. About two years ago M. Gounod was requested to compose a work for this Festival, but circumstances have compelled him to decline the offer at present, although he has expressed his willingness to negotiate with the Committee on a future occasion.

It is a trite saying that when a person who is totally incompetent to manage an undertaking, defies his advisers and insists upon making the attempt, the direst revenge is to stand aside and give him free action. If the Dean and Chapter of Worcester had listened to friendly remonstrance, they would have yielded gracefully, in spite of their convictions, to the feeling of the majority, and allowed the Three Choir Festivals to continue as usual; but they have preferred to fight out the battle to the bitter end, the result being that the Worcester meeting was an acknowledged failure, and that Hereford takes its turn this year with a strength gathered from the defeat of its opponent. We regret, indeed, that persons armed with clerical authority should be the cause of discord amongst those who have existed in amicable relationship for upwards of a hundred and fifty years; but quarrels sometimes lead even to firmer friendship than before; and we trust that the feeling shown at the approaching Hereford Festival will sufficiently prove how firmly and resolutely the people are resolved to maintain an institution which has not only worked nobly in the cause of charity, but upheld the dignity of an art which, as a necessary aid to the promotion of religious feeling, has been acknowledged, and is still acknowledged, by the highest dignitaries of the Church.

Under the brightest prospects, therefore, will the Three Choir Festival commence at Hereford on the 12th September next, directed, as usual, by the Organist of the Cathedral and Honorary Secretary to the Stewards, Mr. G. Townshend Smith. The preliminary arrangements are, of course, not yet completed; but we understand that a hundred stewards have already signified their intention of acting voluntarily on the occasion, and there is every reason to believe that in all respects the meeting will be far superior to any of its predecessors. If some new work could be produced, or one of the forgotten treasures of the past revived, an additional interest would be given to the selection; and, after the recent controversy on the continuation of the Festivals, it certainly would be highly beneficial to show a desire on the part of the promoters of the undertaking for the performance of compositions unknown to the usual frequenters of the Cathedrals on these occasions. We also live in hopes of seeing every concession made to those who ground their objections to these meetings upon the interruption which they cause to the ordinary services; for, much as we advocate the presentation of great sacred works in Cathedrals, we have no desire that they should in the slightest degree interfere with the worship of those who dissent from us. The feelings of each party may be treated with equal delicacy and consideration; for true religion ceases when its professors fail to act towards each other with mutual forbearance.

In the course of the year we shall also have Musical Festivals at Bristol and Glasgow; and it is gratifying to announce that for the latter Professor G. A. Macfarren has accepted the commission to write a secular Cantata on the subject of Scott's "Lady of the Lake," the libretto by Madame Natalia Macfarren. We have not yet heard of any new composition at Bristol, but should imagine that the unprecedented success of "St. John the Baptist" would encourage the directors to continue the policy adopted at their first Festival of engaging some eminent composer to write a work for the occasion.

We have said nothing about the Chamber Concerts and Pianoforte Recitals which will most certainly form a portion of the season's music, our only fear indeed being that the supply—especially of the latter—will immeasurably exceed the demand. Confining ourselves solely to those events which have a real bearing upon the progress of art in this country, we have briefly drawn attention to a year's programme which, both for interest and variety, has certainly never been equalled. We have now only to hope that the seed thus plentifully sown may produce a rich harvest of results.

GOVERNMENT SINGING.—No. II.

By J. Powell Metcalfe.

Sec. for Music to the York Diocesan Choral Association.

He who finds the fault should name the remedy. It it fair enough that those who indulge in the luxury of fault-finding, should hold themselves ready to answer the natural question—"How else would you have it?" We propose in this paper thus to supplement what we said in the last number of the Musical Times. We there ventured to animadvert somewhat strongly upon the Government plan for what is officially designated "teaching singing." We pointed out that to encourage the ordinary schoolmaster or schoolmistress to attempt to teach the whole of a school, or even the two-thirds required to be operated upon as condition for any grant whatsoever for "teaching singing," is nothing more and nothing less than the systematic depravation of ear and destruction of voice, and that not only in the scholar, but in the teacher as well. This disastrous process is gradually, but surely, "untuning the land"—paid for as it is, moreover, by public money voted for just exactly the opposite process. Shall we propose to give up this public money altogether, cruelly perverted in its purpose as it is? If the present system must remain in operation, by all means—of course, of course—there is discord enough in this wicked world without fostering it by educational codes. Let the grant for "teaching singing" go to the submarine navy; there it will be only simply flat loss, it will not, at any rate, go to increase the enemy's fleet.

But can nothing really be done—and that without any radical changes—so to arrange matters that this grant, so well in intention, shall really be the means of effecting its proper purpose? Let us see.

Now two conditions must assuredly be observed before we can hope for this:

1st. That the scholars shall be capable of being taught;

2nd. That the teacher shall be capable of teaching.

With reference to the first, we repeat that one-fifth is as large a proportion of children as an ordinary school can be expected to supply capable of being taught to sing in tune and produce proper tone, at present—mark, we say at present—for by keeping the four-fifths seated and attentively listening to the true notes of the singing one-fifth—the ears of the listeners will be gradually trained in accuracy, and a taste for sweet sounds gradually developed, till we may hope the proportion capable of being taught to sing will be largely increased—so that "not more than one-fifth" may be relaxed—never, never, however, to be changed into "not less than two-thirds."

And now, secondly, how are we to find teachers capable of teaching? In spite of "My Lords," we must be allowed to adhere to the old-fashioned idea, that a man must know a thing himself before he can teach it to another. The question then comes pretty much to this—first, how can we prevent schoolmasters and schoolmistresses attempting to teach singing when they cannot sing themselves? and then—how can we get the one-fifth of our schools "taught singing" when the ordinary teacher is unable to sing?

Now, for one thing, at least, we must give "My Lords" credit, namely, for putting the right man in the right place, by making Professor Hullah Inspector of Music. Much might be done by duly utilizing his vast experience. In discharge of the duties of his office, the Inspector visits every training college in the country once during the year—and at these visits each member in training is passed before him. Short as this personal inspection must needs be, it must be amply long enough to enable one of his immense experience to decide positively on competency or incompetency to teach singing. Let the Inspector give his certificate to the competent, and in the coming supply of masters—the incompetent may be prevented from teaching discord at 1s. a head. Is it not monstrously absurd that the one certificate now granted should be supposed to cover all? As if, because a man can teach arithmetic, geography, and the rest of it, he should necessarily be able to teach singing. Why, even "My Lords" separate the 4s. grant from the 1s. singing grant. And surely it is not requiring too much of those who now have charge of schools, that they should present themselves before the Inspector of Music at the nearest Training College and prove themselves. If competent, their certificate, of course, will entitle them to ask a higher salary; if incompetent, as honest men, they cannot wish to obtain money under false pretences.*

* No teaching power varies so much in the teacher as the power of teaching singing. Why should there not be, then, the usual three progressive third, second and first-class certificates, entitling to teach an increasing proportion of a school, say one-fifth, one third, and one-half—in very exceptional cases even more. This would, of course, necessitate the adjustment of grant per scholar—probably 3s. a head would still keep all within the amount of the present grant.

But what must become of all our little country schools that cannot afford these higher salaries? Must all the music-grant be monopolised by the big town schools? Surely, it cannot—it ought not—to matter to "My Lords" who helps a school to earn its singing shillings; so long as real singing be taught, it cannot matter who teaches. What a vast help it might be to the promotion of true singing, if the Professor would allow others beside schoolmasters in being, or to be, to present themselves before him as candidates for his certificate. What a blessing to small choirs, so often the sport of ignorance, thus to have efficient teachers selected for them; and how much teaching power might thus be brought into use that now is thrust aside by bustling incompetency.

Suppose a school in charge of a teacher incapable of obtaining the inspector's certificate, might there not be someone at hand who, for the shillings of the present and possible future, might be inclined and able to qualify himself, by a certificate, to act for the schoolmaster in the singing half-hour. Or ladies might be forthcoming who, for the hope of happiness to future homes, might undertake the office. "And do you mean that ladies should obtain certificates as well?" Yes, truly. Why not? True metal will never object to the stamp being put upon it. And surely Professor Hullah may safely be left to deal in this matter with musical ladies who desire to help dear music. Certificate there must be; there must be due check to prevent a school taking singing-money when discord only is taught. The Government now says—and fairly enough—"We must be assured by a certificate that your teacher is competent to teach before we give you the 4s. or 5s. a-head, as the case may be." There is no more unfairness in saying the same of the singing shillings.

There is just one thing—while we propound our scheme, we seem to hear a soft professorial remonstrance: "I have quite enough to do already, without turning Examiner-General of All Comers." Well, there are such things as Assistant-Inspectors. Why should not the Professor, if he needed it, have the help of some other experienced musician? If salary were needed, amply enough would be saved by ceasing to pay for the promotion of discord. If any difficulty arose in the manufacture of another educational official, plenty of most ready volunteer assistance might be had in helping forward so important a national movement.

And this plan of certificates, moreover, would, to some extent, resolve that knotty point—the annual school inspection. Forbid the attempt to teach an unteachable number of children, ensure the competency of the teacher to teach, and, without fear of much harm accruing, we may leave the results to be adjudicated upon by the present Inspectors. They can, at least, judge whether or no the sound goes on uninterruptedly in its verses—that is, whether or no the song sung is "got up." The Professor will have taken care beforehand that if it goes at all it will go aright; at least, that it will not be made the means of depraving ears, destroying voices, and eradicating musical taste. Of course, if we could obtain in this matter of singing the double check against the waste of public money that is thought absolutely necessary in the matter of reading, writing, arithmetic, and the rest—namely, both certificate and also efficient inspection—we should hail the boon with delight and thankfulness. But the great obstructor—want of money—stands in the way of this; though, if fairly tried, it is just possible it would be found both much less expensive and easier to arrange than it seems at first sight. But we will not enter on this question here. This only do we claim, and that on the broadest ground of taxpayers' right—that so much of precaution as is most rightly taken to prevent waste of public money for five-sixths of the school grant, so much of this precaution as can be taken, without entailing further public expenditure, shall be extended to the other one-sixth.

The sales of "important" musical copyrights continually taking place would lead many to imagine that some of our greatest works are in the market, and that it would be essential, therefore to watch into whose hands they eventually fall. A glance down the auctioneers' lists will, however, usually convince such persons of their error, and when we see the prices realised by songs and pieces which bear about the same relation to music that children's books do to literature, it requires a sanguine person indeed to speak hopefully of the public taste. It must be remembered, however, that music has now become so general that everybody is presumed to be either an executant or a willing listener, and the extensive spread of ephemeral compositions, therefore, does not prove that the party of progress is not rapidly increasing. True believers can always afford to wait, and who knows but that before long a well-considered and elaborate musical work may become as valuable as a "Royalty" song, and that when copyrights are termed "important," the word may have some reference to art as well as to commerce?

That, whatever opposition may be offered to the spread of Gregorian music for the service of the Church, there is a large and increasing party resolved to uphold it, may be proved by the proceedings at the meeting of the London Gregorian Choral Association, which took place on the 9th ult., at Sion College, London Wall. Earl Beauchamp, the President of the Association, occupied the chair, and the report showed that highly satisfactory progress had been made during the year, the efforts of the Society being materially assisted by the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's Cathedral. We may also mention that the candidates for the Organ Scholarship of £100 a year, at Keble College, Oxford, which is to be competed for during the ensuing month, must show real efficiency in Gregorian music, so that we may reasonably presume that the partisans of this movement in Oxford are resolved to have one important practical representative of their views, even where the "ancient tones" have hitherto been considered obsolete.

It appears from the report of a meeting of the City branch of the Committee for Promoting a National Training School for Music, held at the Mansion House during the past month, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, that as sixty scholarships have been subscribed for, and from forty to sixty others promised, some information should be afforded as to what persons are to form the professional staff of the school. It might be imagined that this important matter should have been settled before the scholarships were founded, but faith is perhaps better than conviction; and when the pupils arrive in the building, no doubt somebody will be found to teach them, Meantime it is good to know, on the authority of Mr. Ball, one of the speakers at the meeting, that the Directors of this Institution are not a "clique," and that they are not "acting in opposition to the Royal Academy of Music."

WE are glad to find that music is no longer to be regarded as a graceful accomplishment at Eton College, but as a portion of the course of study which all the boys are expected to pursue. It is true that the acquisition of the rudiments of the art is only made compulsory upon those scholars in the lower division; but everybody must know that this will lead to the result we have stated, especially when it is considered how many are the boys who must pass through the lower division. As this new regulation has been framed at the earnest request of Mr. Barnby, not only the Etonians, but all who have the interest of music at heart in this country, must congratulate themselves upon his appointment as Professor at a College where the art has, up to the present time, been comparatively disregarded.

SHEFFIELD, the birthplace of Sir Sterndale Bennett, has nobly proved its admiration of his genius. A marble bust of the composer was unveiled on the 20th ult., in the Cutlers' Hall, the ceremony being appropriately performed by Mr. Stirling Howard (an intimate friend of the deceased artist), whose eloquent admiration of the talents of his townsman was echoed by Mr. W. Smith, President of the Sheffield Chamber of Commerce, and Alderman Tozert, the Master Cutler. It is gratifying to find that England is beginning to honour her artists, as well as her warriors and statesmen.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

THAT Professor Macfarren's Oratorio, "St. John the Baptist," should have produced so marked an effect, in spite of the depressing influence of the weather and the consequent thinness of the audience on the 4th ult., is a proof of the power of the work; and we sincerely hope that the desirability of repeating the Oratorio under more favourable circumstances will be recognized as much by the directors as by the many music-lovers who were reluctantly compelled to absent themselves on the occasion. We may say that the choir, although by no means faultless, was fairly good throughout; and that the solos were most satisfactorily rendered by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Madame Patey, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and Mr. Wadmore. Mr. Henry Holmes's Violin Concerto in F was a welcome novelty, and, finely played as it was by the composer, elicited the warmest applause. It is an exceedingly clever work, but scarcely contains sufficient originality to lead to the supposition that other violinists will include it amongst their stock-pieces. The selection in celebration of Weber's birthday was hardly, we think, a judicious one. Certainly, the Overture, "Peter Schmoll," written at the age of fifteen, although retouched some years later, and the Symphony in C (No. 2) could scarcely be considered as representative works; but the Pianoforte Concerto (No. 2), in E flat—finely played by Mr. Franklin Taylor—may prove to many who are more intimately acquainted with the Concertstück how thoroughly the great master could grasp the design of a work demanding higher qualifications for its success. The Adagio and Rondo from the Bassoon Concerto (Op. 75), the principal part excellently rendered by Mr. W. Wotton, was also a great success. The début of Mdlle. Ida Corani, a young vocalist with a charmingly pure soprano voice of extensive compass, must be mentioned as one of the principal events of the past month.

ST. ANNE'S CHURCH, SOHO.

THE special service at St. Anne's Church, Soho, on the 22nd ult., afforded a convincing proof of what can be effected by a carefully trained body of vocalists, a well-balanced orchestra, and an efficient organist; for though we have often attended so-called church "Festivals" of far greater pretensions, we have never heard the purity of sacred music more truthfully revealed, never seen a congregation more deeply impressed with religious fervour, than on this occasion, by the sublime strains of Bach's "Christmas Oratorio." When the mighty power of this composer became first appreciated by the general public of this country, it must be remembered that it was through the performance of his works in the concert-room; and it became a question, therefore, with those who upheld the absolute necessity of the people taking part in the musical service, whether, when his compositions were transferred to their legitimate home, the congregation would be excluded altogether from joining their voices with the choir. This doubt is now, however, happily set at rest, for at the service referred to the music of the chorals having been freely distributed in the church, and every person requested to sing them, we can ourselves bear testimony to the fact that this request was so extensively complied with as thoroughly to satisfy the most rigid advocate of congregational worship.

The choruses, especially "Christians be joyful," and the chorals woven in with the solos, were sung with a precision and perfection of intonation which evidenced the most careful training. The tenor, Mr. Charles Wade, deserved every credit for his rendering of the music allotted to him, and Mr. Berwick Orgill gave the bass solos with commendable accuracy, considering how extremely difficult are many of the intervals in the Recitatives. The unaffected expression and calm devotional feeling evinced by Miss Gill in the beautiful solo, "Sleep, my beloved," spoke to every heart; and indeed in all of the alto music the perfect satisfaction created throughout the congregation, though inaudibly expressed, was no less obvious. A good word must be said, too, for Master Atwater, whose clear voice was heard to much advantage in the soprano solos. The first and the greater portion of the second Parts of the Oratorio were given; and afterwards the "Hallelujah" chorus from the "Messiah" was sung, the congregation again availing themselves of the invitation to sing with the choir. Mr. Barnby—to whom the lovers of Bach owe so deep a debt of gratitude—conducted with his usual judgment; and Mr. J. Munro Coward presided, both with skill and intelligence, at the organ. We sincerely hope that the amount of the collection—which is to be devoted to the expense of these services and the reduction of the choir debt—will amply repay the many who have laboured in the good cause for their praiseworthy exertions. The services were announced to be repeated on the 29th ult., and on the 5th and 12th inst.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

THE Students' Orchestral Concert of this Institution, which was given at St. James's Hall, on the 15th ult., before a large audience, will prove much more emphatically than anything that can be written the claims of the Academy to public support. We may say that we have scarcely ever listened to a finer performance of the instrumental portion of Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang" than was presented on this occasion, and the charming manner in which the choral parts were given throughout reflected the utmost credit upon the pupils themselves, as well as upon the excellent training they must have received. The vocal solos were also most effectively rendered by Miss Marie Duval, Miss Mary Davies, and Mr. Henry Guy; but a word might have been said for the last-named student, who, having been detained for hours by an accident on the railway, had only just arrived in time to hasten to the Hall, and, although suffering from a severe cold, to exert his best powers in fulfilment of his duties to the institution. The first movement of Mr. Eaton Faning's Symphony in C minor gave evidence of commendable reverence for the works of the best masters in this school of writing, and indicated the possession of a talent which will, no doubt, ripen by experience. The Sacred Cantata, by Mr. A. H. Jackson, is, in every respect, a composition of excellent promise. The choral portions are decidedly the best, many points of undoubted merit occurring in the choruses, "The Lord is nigh," and "Let us sing;" indeed, we have seldom heard more favourable specimens of student-work than were exhibited in this Cantata; and the ovation which the composer received at the conclusion of its performance was fairly earned. The solo parts were effectively given by Mr. Wadmore, who is now rapidly winning a fame outside the walls of the institution in which he was educated. The song, "Love and Laughter," by Oliveria Prescott, another student, has much poetical feeling, and is instrumented with a care and judgment which augurs well for her future: it was exceedingly well given by Miss Kate Brand. The delicacy of touch and facility of execution displayed by Miss Amy Turner Burnett in Hummel's graceful Rondo, "Le Retour à Londres," fully sustained the high reputation the Academy has so long enjoyed as a school of tuition for the pianoforte; and Mr. Walter Fitton's rendering of Mendelssohn's "Rondo brillante," in E flat, was also thoroughly successful. Great praise must be awarded to Mr. Walter Macfarren for the manner in which he conducted the entire performance, every item in which proved the soundness of instruction now carried out in the several departments of our National School of Music.

BACH'S Cantata, "God's time is the best," was performed, with full orchestral accompaniments, at the afternoon service in Eton College Chapel on the 4th and 11th ult. The soprano and alto solos were taken by Masters Churchill and Mellor, the latter producing an excellent effect in the air, "Into Thy hands my spirit I commend." The tenor and bass solos were well rendered by Messrs. Mellor and O. Christian. The band and chorus numbered 100 executants. Mr. J. M. Coward presided at the organ, and Mr. Barnby conducted. The Princess Christian was present on the 4th ult.

THE production of "Antigone," with Mendelssohn's music, at the Crystal Palace during the past month must have called to the memory of many there present the excellent performance of this work at the old Covent-garden Theatre, some thirty years since, under the earnest and skilful direction of Mr. G. A. (now Professor) Macfarren. Audiences were not then educated to the appreciation of such music as Mendelssohn has wedded to the text; and although the few enjoyed the choruses, therefore, the many preferred the acting. Taste has now, however, altered, and at the Crystal Palace there can be no question that the few enjoyed the acting, whilst the many preferred the choruses. Indeed we may say that the dialogue—although the speakers were tolerably well "coached up" in their respective parts—was almost universally felt to be an interruption to the music. Mr. W. Gadsby deserves much credit for the manner in which he had trained his choir, every piece being given with a precision and truth of intonation highly commendable, the "Invocation to Bacchus," of course, producing a marked effect upon the auditors. We are glad to find that the revival of "Antigone" is to be followed by that of "Œdipus at Colonos."

THE Festival of the Choir Benevolent Fund, which took place on Wednesday, the 8th ult., at Westminster Abbey, may be said, in spite of certain shortcomings, which appear to be inseparable from Church Festivals in the metropolis, to have been musically successful, although the collection fell far short of what might have been expected from the first appeal of the Association to a London congregation. Dr. Wesley's anthem, "The Wilderness," which severely taxed the powers of the choir, was perhaps the best executed piece in the service; but Dr. Croft's "Cry aloud and shout," sung as the opening anthem, produced a marked effect. The service was the well-known one by Attwood, and a Chant by Mr. Turle was the one selected for the Psalms. After the sermon (which was eloquently preached by Dean Stanley) three anthems were given—Dr. Bridge's, "It is a good thing to give thanks," Gibbons's "Hosanna to the Son of David," and Sir John Goss's "Lift up thine eyes." During the offertory Dr. Bridge played an Andante from one of Mozart's Symphonies, and as a concluding voluntary J. S. Bach's Toccata in F.

THE foundation stone of the new Opera-House on the Thames Embankment was laid on the 16th ult., His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh being the amateur mason on the occasion. An address to the royal visitor was read by Sir James Hogg; and at the luncheon at Willis's Rooms, which followed the ceremony, several speeches were delivered, in which the objects of the lessee. Mr. Mapleson, in undertaking the direction and management of the building were eloquently dwelt upon. Several of the most eminent musical professors were present.

A CONCERT was given in Surrey Chapel, on Thursday evening the 16th ult., in aid of the funds of the London City Mission Auxiliary. The performance was opened with Sir F. A. G. Ouseley's March in the Oratorio, "St. Polycarp," well played by Mr. F. G. Edwards, R.A.M. Madame Edith Wynne, Miss Williams, and Mr. Lewis Thomas were the vocalists. The second part of the concert was devoted mainly to secular music. Mr. Edwards played the Allegretto from Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang" Symphony, and a portion of the same composer's Wedding March (in honour of Madame Wynne). A duet for piano and harp, being an adaptation by Mr. John Thomas of Welsh melodies, was beautifully played by Miss Waugh and Mr. John Thomas. The arrangements were carried out by Mr. Jabez Jones.

A CONCERT was given on the 16th ult., in the Church Room, St. Mark's, North Audley-street, under the direction of Mr. A. D. Miles, the Organist, being the third of the Winter Series of Entertainments. The programme consisted of songs, duets and trios, by Miss Marie Duval, Miss Joyce Maas, Mr. W. A. Howells and Mr. Thurley Beale; violin and flute solos by Mr. F. B. Smythies and Mr. Miller; pianoforte solos and duets by Mr. H. A. Branscombe and Mr. A. D. Miles. The performance gave the greatest satisfaction.

A PERFORMANCE of Handel's "Messiah" was given on Friday evening the 17th ult., at Tolmer's-square Church, Hampstead-road, by Mr. T. Pettit's Choral Society, of sixty voices, assisted by Miss Jessie Royd, Madame Alice Barnett, Mr. H. Guy, and Mr. Wadmore. The whole of the choruses were well sung; "For unto us" and "The Lord gave the word," being noticeable for great precision. The solo vocalists were also very successful. Mr. T. Mountain presided at the organ, and Mr. Pettit conducted.

A MUSICAL PERFORMANCE by the pupils of the London Society for Teaching the Blind to Read was given at the Institution, Upper Avenue-road, Regent's-park, on the 14th ult., the Bishop of Tennessee in the chair. A very excellent programme was provided, and every piece rendered with a care and artistic feeling which cannot be too highly praised. The chairman paid a well-deserved compliment to the Professor of the Society, Mr. Edwin Barnes, and stated that of all the many schools he had visited since his arrival in this country, none had given evidence of such earnest work as the School for the Blind, at St. John's-wood. We may also say that, as evidence of the good this Society is effecting, a late pupil of the school has recently obtained an organist's situation, at a salary of £100 a year.

THE Organ at St. Botolph's Church, Bishopsgate, having been repaired and thoroughly cleaned, on Advent Sunday Mr. J. C. Dunster presided at the evening service (full choral) and gave a recital at the close. Mr. Dunster's performance was admirable, and his selection a judicious one for displaying the power and variety of the instrument, Bach's fugue in A minor being executed in such a perfect manner as to call for special notice. Bach's fugue in C minor was also well played by Master C. J. Dunster, who recently took the first prize for organ and pianoforte playing at L'Ecole de Musique Religieuse, Place Pigalle, Paris.

THE Organ at St. Jude's Church, Commercial-street, was re-opened on Sunday the 5th ult., after having been removed from the west gallery, reconstructed, and erected at the east end of the south aisle, with a few additions. The work has been excellently carried out by Mr. Thos. R. Willis. At the commencement and conclusion of each service, selections were played by Mr. Godfrey, organist of the church, which effectively displayed the improvements made in the tone and mechanism of the instrument.

Two Concerts were given by the Messrs. Barth at the Town Hall, Hammersmith, on the 2nd and 16th ult. respectively; and, though not successful financially, the directors deserve credit for their endeavour to promote the performance of a good class of music. Among the artists who have appeared have been the Misses Leonora Braham, Adele Meyers, Martha Harries, Messrs. Stedman, Theodore Barth, Knight Smith, John Evans, and Thurley Beale. Mr. A. J. Barth proved an admirable pianist, and Mr. Frewen was an efficient accompanist.

Madame Liebe Konss gave an Evening Concert at the Seymour Hall, Portman Square, on Thursday, the 2nd ult., when an excellent programme was provided. Miss Clara Perry (pupil of Madame Konss), Mr. Newton Baylis, Mdme. Marie Arthur, Mr. Theo. T. Moss, Miss L. Thomas, and Mr. Arthur Monkton were the vocalists. The concerted music was rendered in a most excellent manner. Miss Jennie Robethen presided at the pianoforte, and gained a deserved encore for one of her pieces. Solos on the violin and flute were also played by Mr. Perry and Mr. Arthur Gittens.

The fifth trial of new compositions by the Musical Artists' Society took place on the 11th ult., at the Royal Academy of Music, before a large audience. Any criticism upon the performance is scarcely perhaps desirable, but we may mention in highly favourable terms, amongst the instrumental works, a Quartet in A flat, for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello, by H. Westrop, excellently played by Mrs. Algernon Bathurst, Messrs. Ralph, Webb, and Pettit; Mr. J. Parry Cole's two Sketches for the pianoforte, effectively performed by Mr. Henry Baumer, and a pianoforte Impromptu by Mr. Eaton Faning, well rendered by the composer. The vocal music included songs by W. H. Sangster, and C. H. Couldery, both capitally sung by Mr. Walter Bolton, and the clever song by Mrs. O'Leary Vinning (already noticed in our reviewing columns), "My Angel Lassie." Mr. Arthur O'Leary, the energetic hon. sec. to the Society, presided at the pianoforte.

The South London Choral Association gave its annual performance of Handel's "Messiah," on the 20th ult., at the Lecture Hall, Walworth, under the direction of Mr. Leonard C. Venables. The soloists were Miss Jessie Giles, Miss Cravino, Mr. Carter, and Mr. F. Whitby. Miss Giles sang her solos fairly, Mr. Carter was successful in "Every Valley" and the "Passion Music," and Mr. Whitby made a favourable impression in "The people that walked." The choruses were rendered in a praiseworthy manner, and Mr. Venables must be congratulated upon possessing a very efficient choir—"For unto us," and the "Hallelujah" being given most effectively.

A correspondent asks us two questions—1. Why cathedrals differ in placing the Decani Choir, some on the north side and some on the south side? 2. Which is strictly the Decani side, north or south? We have made every inquiry on the subject, and have much pleasure in printing the following, kindly communicated by the Rev. Mackenzie E. C. Walcott:—"In a cathedral of the Old Foundation, which has always been served by secular canons—as York, St. Paul's, Salisbury, Chichester, Exeter, Wells, Hereford, Lincoln, and Lichfield—the dean has always sat on the south-west side, with the precentor facing him in the north-west stall; hence annes de Choro were either ex parte Decani or ex parte Cantoris, terms abbreviated into Decani et Cantoris. In the other cathedrals, those of the New Foundation which had belonged to regular orders—Canterbury, Winchester, Durham, Carlisle, etc. (see my Traditions and Customs of Cathedrals), the services were mainly if not wholly sung by men's voices, without harmony, as in the secular churches which had a full choir of vicars and boys. The two sides were called ex parte Abbatis and ex parte Prioris; the bishop was abbot and sat on the south side, the prior fronted him. At the Reformation the bishop still could claim his stall (as at Durham, and Carlisle, and Ely), and the prior became dean and retained his seat, so that his side (improperly) was in places considered to be ex parte Decani. The precentor in these cathedral churches is always a minor canon, and appointed by the dean and chapter."

The St. George's Glee Union Monthly Concert took place on the 3rd ult., at the Pimlico Rooms, when Mendelssohn's "Athalie" was performed with complete success. The solo parts were well sung by Misses Matilda Scott, Bessie Spear, White, and Clara Buley, and the Lyrics were recited in a masterly manner by Mr. Charles Fry, the audience repeatedly showing their appreciation of his perfect elocution and powers of declamation. The Overture and March were played on two pianofortes and a harmonium, the players being Misses Bliss, Hamilton, Klein, and Buley, and Mr. G. F. Smith, R.A.M., all of whom acquitted themselves well. The choruses were sung with great precision and good general effect. Mr. Garside conducted.

We have but space to record the successful revival of Handel's Oratorio, "Deborah," by the Sacred Harmonic Society, and to express a hope that it will not again be allowed to slumber. Its many fine choruses alone should recommend it to Handel-lovers; but several of the solos may also be cited as thoroughly representative of the great master's style. The principal vocalists were Mdlle. Johanna Levier, Miss Julia Elton, Mr. Montem Smith and Mr. Lewis Thomas.

The Pianoforte Recitals of Madame Essipoff and Mdlle. Mehlig, during the past month, have attracted large audiences; and at each performance the artists have fully sustained their high reputation. We are glad to record that at Mdlle. Mehlig's concert, the bénéficiaire associated herself with Madame Essipoff in two duets for two pianofortes, Schumann's Andante with variations in B flat, and an Impromptu, by Reinecke, on a theme from Schumann's "Manfred." Both, it is needless to say, were received with the most enthusiastic applause.

The Saturday Concerts at the Alexandra Palace have progressed most satisfactorily during the last month. Amongst the novelties produced we must mention a clever orchestral piece by Duvivier, called "Triomphe de Bacchus," which has sufficient merit to make us hope that it may be again heard during the season. We are glad to find that Handel's "Esther" has been repeated, and have little doubt that its many beauties will now preserve it from that oblivion to which (until its revival, under Mr. Weist Hill's direction) it had been so long doomed.

Royal Academy of Music.—The examination for the Westmorland Scholarship and Potter Exhibition took place on Monday, the 20th ult.; the examiners being the Principal (Professor Macfarren), F. R. Cox, Esq., M. Garcia, Esq., H. C. Lunn, Esq., Walter Macfarren, Esq., Brinley Richards, Esq., Dr. Steggall, and A. Randegger, Esq. The results were as follows: Westmorland Scholarship—Miss Marie Duval, elected: highly commended, Miss Kate Brand and Miss Rachael Jessopp. Potter Exhibition—F. W. W. Bampfylde, elected; highly commended, T. Silver and T. A. Matthay.

The St. Matthew's (Brixton) Choral Society gave a Miscellaneous Concert, on the 14th ult., in the Schools, Church-road, Brixton, under the direction of Mr. Geo. Shinn (organist of Brixton parish church). The programme consisted of part-songs and choruses for the choir, and solos for Miss Mary Davies, Signor Rizzelli, and Mr. S. Crome, as well as two trios for violin, violoncello and pianoforte, which were executed by Mr. Michael Henry, Mr. H. B. Hawkins and Mr. Geo. Shinn. The accompanists were Mr. S. Fisher (pianoforte) and Mr. J. B. Gaunt (harmonium).

On Wednesday evening, the 22nd ult., a special choral service was held in St. Andrew's Church, Thornhill-square, Islington, when the new organ, built by Messrs. J. W. Walker and Sons, was opened by Mr. James Higgs, Mus. Bac., Oxon, organist of St. Andrew's, Holborn. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Gordon Calthrop, M.A., Vicar of St. Augustine's, Highbury New-park. The anthem was, "Praise the Lord, O my Soul," by Sir John Goss, and the service "Cooke in G." The voluntaries were—air, "Let the bright Seraphim," Handel; Andante by Dr. S .S. Wesley; choruses, "Worthy is the Lamb" and "Amen," and Mendelssohn's First Grand Organ Sonata, all of which were played by Mr. J. Higgs in his usual masterly style. The collection for the organ, and Church Repair Fund, amounted to £50 11s.

A SERIES of Readings have been given by Mr. Marlande Clarke, at Langham Hall, on the 9th, 16th, and 23rd ult. The vocalists on each occasion were Miss Annie Sinclair and Mr. Stedman, whose songs, &c., were highly appreciated. Mr. J. S. Shedlock and Mr. W. Wright presided at the organ and pianoforte respectively.

A CONCERT was given at Trinity Wesleyan Chapel, Hornsey, on Nov. 29, in aid of the funds for the repair of the chapel. The first part was a selection from the "Messiah," in which Miss Withers, Miss M. A. Withers, Miss Hulford, Mr. Rendell, Mr. H. Joyce, and Mr. H. G. Froome were the soloists. The second part consisted of anthems, sacred songs, &c., the Misses Withers and Miss Stevenson being very successful in "Lift thine eyes" ("Elijah"). The choruses were satisfactorily rendered, under the direction of Mr. H. G. Froome. Miss Bent officiated as accompanist.

M. GUILMANT will give Organ Recitals at the Bow and Bromley Institute on the 5th and 6th inst.

REVIEWS.

NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

God is the Lord. Full Anthem.
Te Deum laudamus in G major.
By Charles Joseph Frost.

OF these two compositions the anthem is remarkably effective, and well within the capacity of the humblest choirs, the probable excellence of whose performance would, however, be much enhanced if the free organ-part were in the hands of a clever musician. The first portion of the movement being in E flat, there occurs a charming episode in the well-contrasted key of G major, which is introduced after a vigorous unison passage in the same key for the voices, answered by brilliant chords from the organ. The return to the original key of E flat is somewhat sudden, while, with some sacrifice of coherency in the plan, the opening subject is not returned to or even hinted at; and, though we must confess to feeling this to be somewhat unsatisfactory, we cannot complain that the new matter is deficient in merit or character. The Te Deum is a short and useful setting, though not entirely free from faults. In both these pieces Mr. Frost has many times given to the basses the interval of an augmented fourth ascending, and followed by another ascending interval, which is not only difficult to sing, but of bad effect musically speaking. This passage would be improved, both musically and vocally, if written thus—it being always advisable, nay, even imperative, that such an interval should be (so to speak) resolved within itself, to satisfy the requirements of part-writing as well as the demands of the hearing sense.

Let not your heart be troubled. Anthem. Composed by Emily M. Lawrence.

THERE is decided merit in this, which a careless revision of the proofs prevents us from recommending as heartily as we could wish.

The grass withereth, the flower fadeth. Anthem. Composed by Emily M. Lawrence.

THE authoress evinces a sympathetic insight into the text, and a great deal of freedom in the use of a considerable knowledge of harmonic resource.

Thou didst hide Thy face. Short Anthem for Thanksgiving and other Festival Occasions. By H. C. Bonavia Hunt.

COMMENCING with a tenor solo and quartett in A minor, the composition concludes with a remarkably vigorous chorus in A major, the merit of which is slightly marred by the redundant bars in the coda.

Six Offertory Sentences for Treble Voices. Set to music by G. H. F. Orwin.

MR. ORWIN has managed to set the Sentences to very melodious music without sacrificing the verbal accents—a by no means easy task. Treble voices are not treated in any particular manner, so that a performance of the movements containing full four part harmony will simply give the impression that the lower voices of the choir are absent.

Lay not up for yourselves. A short Anthem or Offertory for treble solo and chorus. Composed by J. Hornsey Casson.

A Processional Hymn. For Parochial Choirs and other Festivals. Words and music by the same.

THE latter is good of its kind; the anthem is a well-written though not remarkable piece, which deserves to be heard.

Missa de Sanctis. A Plain-Song Service for the Holy Communion. Composed by the Rev. Ernest Geldart, with accompanying Harmonies for the Organ, by Charles W. Pearce.

IF a meeting could be effected between Ambrose, Archbishop of Milan, and Herr Wagner, and they were to unite their efforts in the joint composition of a musical work, some curiosity as to the result, and amusement at the singular co-operation, would certainly be excited. Celebrated personages always secure attention even in their vagaries. There could, nevertheless, be no such interest manifested in the resurrection of an obscure Deacon of early Christian times and his association in a similar task with a little-known individual of the nineteenth century. Their efforts would not even be warranted by a probability of collateral interest apart from the certainty of musical failure. The partners in the work before us have, however, undertaken to impersonate these respective characters. The confusion caused by the archaic notation of the one is increased tenfold by its combination with a series of chords, having no reasonable motive, and following one another in a meaningless procession. An undisciplined force without motive for its operations is unworthy of the sword of a great general, or, if attacked, is speedily dispersed. The critic can only direct his attention to works framed upon some principles of construction, or referable to a standard of excellence, it may be, in but one branch of an art: when everything is indefinite and vague, he has no choice but to reserve his ammunition for a more reasonable foe.

Hear me when I call. Full Anthem for four voices. By I. S. Bowen.

AN unpretending short anthem, in which nothing is particularly objectionable, with the exception of the bass fourth, p. 2, score 2, bars 2 and 3.

Southwell School Songs. Words selected from the Poets, and music composed by Rev. R. F. Smith, M.A., Minor Canon of Southwell.

WE can scarcely imagine a better selection of poetry for school use than Mr. Smith has culled from the works of some of our best authors, and can also bear testimony to the sympathetic and musician-like manner in which he has wedded them to melodies which cannot fail to please the young vocalists for whom they are expressly designed. There is little attempt to do more than clothe the tunes with the harmonies which appear most natural; but in all cases this task has been performed so gracefully and artistically as to leave no room for a disparaging word. Longfellow's "Psalm of Life," Mrs. Hemans's "Graves of a Household," and Hartley Coleridge's "The Lark and the Nightingale" we may mention as our especial favourites, but all, as we have said, are extremely meritorious. It was a bold thought to set Cowper's "John Gilpin," in eight Lays, especially as a number of verses must be sung to each tune. The necessity of doing so quite nullifies the plan which appears to have been adopted of changing the music when the character of the words alters; for although (as an instance) the swinging 6-4 rhythm is well adapted for the verse commencing "And now, as he went bowing down," it is by no means suitable for that beginning, "Stop, stop, John Gilpin! here's the house." This is, however, only a minor defect, and we are quite certain that not one of the eight Lays will be found wearisome.

Fairy Revels. A series of short pieces, for the Pianoforte. Composed by Arthur Trickett.

THE title-page of this piece gives us no idea whether "Fairy Revels" is one of a number of short compositions, or a general title for the whole of them; but as we find it marked "No 1" on the first page, we are inclined to believe the latter guess to be the right one. We hope that the next numbers will make amends for the thinness of texture observable throughout the one forwarded to us. Fairy music must be light, but not feeble; and we think that even the composer will allow that we have rather too much of the trivial subject in E flat. The second theme is better because character is given to it by the left-hand part. We hope the fays will grow more spirited as the Revels proceed.

The Gay Hussar. Song. Words by Alfred E. T. Watson. The music adapted from Spindler's Husarenritt, by Louis Diehl.

IT is seldom that the adaptation of an instrumental piece for the voice is successful; but the exception proves the rule, and the specimen before us may certainly be cited as an exception. Those who know the spirited and melodious "Husarenritt" of Spindler will be glad to see it transformed into so effective a solo; and those who do not will be pleased to make acquaintance with it in its present form; for, apart from its origin, it is really a capital song. The pianoforte accompaniment, which goes almost throughout with the voice—with the characteristic triplet on the second beat of the bar in the left-hand part—gives much life to the theme, although it will require a good pianist to do it full justice. We must award praise to Mr. Watson, too, for the excellent manner in which he has fitted his words to the melody.

Sunbeams. Four-part Song. Words by Longfellow. Music by Emily M. Lawrence.

THE composer of this part-song has but attempted to set Longfellow's words melodiously and gracefully; and when we say that in this endeavour she has succeeded, we are probably giving her as flattering a notice as she sought for. Something more than this, however, is required in these days when Part-songs of this unambitious character are published in such quantities, if it be the design of a creative artist to make a name; and we can scarcely see, therefore, that criticism should be called for when the absence of grammatical errors is really the only merit that can be conscientiously dwelt upon. As, however, we have selected this composition as the type of a class, we may say that we like the change of key at the double bar, but think it would have been better to have stopped upon the dominant of F, at the pause, instead of compelling the repetition of the key-note harmony.

"As I laye a-thynkynge." The last lines of Thomas Ingoldsby. Song. By William Jackson, jun.

THE little legend told in the quaint lines of Thomas Ingoldsby has been well set by Mr. Jackson. The monotony of the music will scarcely be felt as an objection in such a song, where, indeed, the words should be as little as possible interfered with, either by melody or harmony. A slight variety is given to the two-bar phrases ending each verse by making the sub-dominant chord major or minor according to the feeling of the poetry; but in other respects the music remains unaltered throughout, although there are seven verses. A good effect is gained by interrupting the last close by the dominant harmony of the relative minor; and there is true musical expression in the final phrase, the voice speaking the last words, "Here is rest!" unaccompanied, and ending on the fifth of the key. A singer who can enter into the true spirit of this song will be certain to make it successful.

CHAPPELL AND CO.

Piano and Singing, Didactical and Polemical. For Professionals and Amateurs. By Friedrich Wieck. Translated, for Madame Clara Schumann and Miss Marie Wieck, by H. Krueger.

THE singular title of this work will prepare the reader for the very original style in which it is written; but there are few artists, we think, who will not acknowledge the stern truths its author enforces. Friedrich Wieck was a man of no ordinary power. His two daughters, Clara Schumann and Marie Wieck, who owed their musical training entirely to their father, would be alone amply sufficient to attest his skill as a teacher; but, in addition to these, the names of many of the most eminent German performers and vocalists who have been his pupils might be mentioned, amongst whom let us cite Hans von Bülow, who in a letter to Wieck, dated 1863, says "Never in thought or in word have I forgotten or denied—and herein will the future continue to reflect the past—what I owe to you, highly revered Master." We might freely forgive anything like egotism in one who, knowing his exceptional qualifications for what he rightly considered his mission in life, believed it almost a sin to pretend to hide this knowledge from the world. "Nature," he says, in his Preface, "has made me susceptible to everything that is good and beautiful; a correct instinct and a tolerable understanding taught me to avoid the untrue and the hateful; aspiration to higher knowledge led me to pay attention to everything that I came across on the path of my life, and I need have no hesitation in asserting that I have striven to fulfil according to my strength my vocation on earth." We should be very glad if every artist who has so high an opinion of himself had as much solid truth to back it with. It would be impossible in the limited space which we are enabled to devote to the consideration of this little book to give an idea of the many excellent observations upon art which it contains. Conversations with the parents of children who are studying music in the conventional style are of frequent occurrence; and in this form many of the theories which guided the great Master in his teaching are given forth. From one of these only we will quote. Being asked who has taught him all that he knows, our author replies, "What is to be taught many people can learn; how to teach it, this I have acquired only by having with my whole soul devoted myself always with great love and constant thought to the musical cultivation of my pupils, and in fact to their general intellectual development. Certainly it is also necessary to go on quickly—because the subject proceeds step by step, one thing laying the foundation of the next; because the pupil learns everything surely, calmly, thoughtfully, and accurately, without roundabouts, without distracting and retarding wanderings; because I teach neither too much nor too little; because I always anticipate and endeavour, while engaged with the one matter to be learned, at the same time to lay the foundation of many other necessary matters. And that is the chief point, because instead of wishing to cram the memory of the child with my own wisdom (as is often done in a crude and hurried manner), I at once rouse his intellect and give it something to do, allowing him to develope of his own accord, and not degrading him into a wooden machine." In conclusion, we heartily commend this work to the attention both of pupils and teachers; and can confidently assure them that in every page will be found matter for mature reflection, although couched, as we have already said, in somewhat eccentric language.

WEEKES AND CO.

Studies for the Pianoforte. Books 1 and 2. Composed by Henri Stiehl.

THESE studies impress us with a thorough conviction of the artistic qualifications of their author, both as a theorist and a composer: indeed it is long since we have had before us more refined and intellectual music. The first Book is modelled upon the plan so successfully pursued by Schumann in his "Kinderscenen" and other collections of pieces especially intended for juvenile players. From Herr Stiehl's group of little compositions it is difficult to select any for special comment, for all are models of pure, melodious writing. We may say, however, that amongst those certain to make their way with little critics are "Cheerfulness after work"—where the lingering upon the minor supertonic, in the key of A minor, is a charming point—"Watching at little sister's cradle"—a melodious and sympathetic sketch, in F sharp minor, with an unexpected close in the tonic major—"Holiday March"—a capital pompous movement to accompany the display of harmless guns and wooden swords—"The Dance"—a merry little tune, with appropriately simple harmonies—and "Evening Reflections"—an expressive theme with a flowing accompaniment, forming the sixteenth and last piece in a volume the design of which may be presumed to musically illustrate one of the happy days of childhood. The numbers in the second book have no titles, and, as a rule, appeal to more advanced players, although some are comparatively simple. Many will be found excellent studies for phrasing, and we have also—as, for instance, in No. 2—good examples of unusual rhythm. No. 3, in G minor; No. 5, a graceful Waltz; No. 8, an effective exercise for crossing hands; No. 12, a characteristic little piece in A minor; and No. 16, a melodious sketch, containing some valuable examples of varied punctuation, may be particularly recommended to students who are desirous of cultivating style and preparing their minds and fingers for the due rendering of the standard classical works.

F. PITMAN.

The Burnley Tune Book. A New Manual of Hymn Tunes, Chants, Kyries, Glorias, &c.

"THE compiler of the 'Burnley Tune Book' believes that no apology need be offered for introducing a new collection of tunes to the notice of the public," although "the publication of a new psalmody may appear to many to be a work of supererogation at the present time." He further "trusts that the two extremes of excessive floridness on the one hand, and scientific stiffness or angularity of style on the other, have been avoided for a more natural flow and arrangement of the parts." While we agree with the first proposition, and decline to number ourselves among the "many" spoken of in the second, we must observe that the present compilation is not "new" in such a sense as to warrant our acceptance of it as an improvement upon what has gone before, or even as the equal of its predecessors. Mr. Simpson (the compiler), in his efforts to secure "the mean" degree of harmonic beauty, has, moreover, committed some egregious blunders. To look at his original tunes is to be convinced of his incapacity to undertake a task requiring at least a groundwork of knowledge. We are content to point out the faulty harmony in No. 378, b. 3, where the seventh and root resolve on the third; No. 151, where a seventh resolves upon the fifth, and the root upon the third of next chord; in the sixth double chant we find a first inversion of a dominant seventh with the seventh rising to the fifth of the tonic. We presume Mr. Simpson cannot seriously mean to describe No. 73 as a "canon, treble and bass." In No. 74 again occurs the same fault as in No. 151 of the Hymn Tunes. We might multiply examples from the compiler's work alone to exhibit clearly in what his ideas of novelty consist, and how his "natural flow" induces on our part a want of appreciation for his endeavour to keep clear of "angularity" and "floridness."

AUGENER AND CO.

Select Anthems from the Works of English Composers. Edited, with Suggestions for Tempi, Marks of Expression, and an independent Organ Accompaniment added, by Francis Edward Gladstone.

THE collection comprises two anthems by Dr. Boyce, two by Dr. Hayes, two by Dr. Greene, one by Dr. Croft, and one by John Weldon. As they are all as well known in our churches as "Rule Britannia" is out of them, remarks upon their merit would be superfluous. The "suggestions," as Mr. Gladstone modestly calls them, show how carefully and completely he has done his work; while his growing reputation as a practical organist and composer will ensure a cordial reception of the volume from those who have neither leisure nor inclination to undertake the task for themselves, and have only the old editions in their libraries.

LAMBORN COCK.

Larghetto and Fugue for the Organ. Composed by Westley Richards.

THIS is a great advance upon the last composition of the author that came under our notice. The ideas are not striking or original, but are treated in a manner that shows Mr. Richards to have mastered the art of fugal writing. We can only wish that the many who attempt such compositions would exemplify principles half as clearly.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

HOW SHOULD ORGANISTS BE SELECTED?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—No one will question the importance of this subject, now that almost every church contains its three-decker, and that good music has become so much a necessity to our congregations.

Your correspondents seem agreed in thinking that the present mode of selecting organists by public competition often fails to discover the most suitable candidate or to give general satisfaction to the parishioners; and it cannot be disputed that it frequently leads to disappointment and ill-feeling on one side or the other, which is not at all to be wondered at, considering the very objectionable mode of proceeding. The other methods of election suggested by Mr. Miller and Mr. Stark have each their advantages, but would be applicable, I fear, only in a few places. There is another mode of election which I would suggest for the serious consideration of your readers, especially the clergy and others in authority; namely, that when an organist's post is vacant, they should look around for some desirable and suitable candidate, and then freely offer the post for his acceptance. This is the way the clergy themselves receive their appointments, and I see no reason why it should not be equally satisfactory for organists. It would save the authorities of the parish infinite trouble and unpleasantness; it would be paying a genuine compliment to the organist, and would be much more likely to secure a faithful and able discharge of his duties than would be gained by any public trial or competition, however impartially or judiciously managed.

Of course it is to be regretted that in many places organists should be so ill paid and so disrespectfully treated; but as musical taste advances, and organists themselves improve in skill and general attainments, their stipends will also increase at a similar ratio; and in a few years I trust we shall look in vain for such advertisements as hail in your present number from Leyburn Church and De Beauvoir Town! Amateur organists (whether properly qualified or not) who undertake appointments at a reduced stipend, or no stipend at all, have much to answer for in this respect. The importance of this subject to all church musicians must be my apology for the length of this epistle, but I trust it may lead to further discussion, and a better appreciation of a most deserving class of men.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

A TRUE LOVER OF MUSIC.

JONES'S TUNE "NAYLAND."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—Your correspondent "C" will find this tune in the third edition (1865) of the Hymnal, published by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, under the musical editorship of Mr. Turle, of Westminster Abbey. The tune is there assigned to the 23rd and the 81st Psalms, and a foot-note is appended to the effect that it is given as originally printed for the 23rd Psalm in the "Ten Church Pieces with four anthems, for the use of Nayland Church, by Wm. Jones, M.A., F.R.S. March 25th, 1789," except only that the key is changed from B♭ to A. The harmonies differ slightly from those in the earlier edition (1863) of the above-mentioned Hymnal; and in the recent edition, brought out under the musical supervision of Mr. Arthur Sullivan, the foot-note has been withdrawn, and the tune is given with new and more widely-different harmonies.

I am, Sir,
Yours truly,
A. H. D. PRENDERGAST.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

BEDFORD.—Mr. H. R. Rose gave his first public Recital on the 25th November, in the New Corn Exchange, assisted by two fellow-students of the Royal Academy of Music, Miss Mary Davies (Welsh Union Scholar), and Mr. Howells. Mr. Rose played Mendelssohn's Introduction and Fugue in E minor (Op. 35), Schubert's "Impromptu in G" (Op. 90), and the "Toccata" (Op. 38) of Sterndale Bennett, (which was brilliantly rendered), and also Studies by Henselt, Chopin, &c. A duet was sung by Miss Davies and Mr. Howells, "O that we two were maying," with commendable taste. The Recital was highly successful.

BEDMINSTER, BRISTOL.—On Wednesday, the 15th ult., Mrs. Andrews gave an Evening Concert at the Conservative Hall. The programme was well rendered, many of the pieces being encored. The vocalists were Mrs. Andrews, Miss Pennington, and Messrs. B. Gay, E. T. Morgan, and H. J. Dyer. Sir J. Benedict's fantasia, "Erin," and Weber's polonaise, "L'Hilarité," were played by Miss Nannie Praeger (piano). Mr. John Barrett acted as accompanist throughout.

BOGNOR.—A very successful Concert was given on the 14th ult. at the Assembly Rooms, in aid of the "Observer" Beef Fund. Miss Marie Duval, Mr. Stedman, and Mr. Finlay Finlayson were the vocalists, and gave great satisfaction in their several solos, the performance of the two trios, "Vieni al mar," and "This Magic-wove Scarf" being also highly successful. Violin solos were given by Mons. Kuhn; and Mr. F. Partridge was the accompanist.

BRISTOL.—On Wednesday evening, the 1st ult., a Concert was given in the large Colston Hall by "Mr. Greenwood's Choir," in aid of the funds of the Church Schoolmasters' and Schoolmistresses' Benevolent Institution. The hall was crowded in every part, and the programme was of a thoroughly popular character. Some part-songs were well sung by the choir. The soloists were Miss Jessie Royd and Mr. Brandon. Mr. Geo. Riseley presided at the organ, and Mr. C. Greenwood at the piano. Conductor, Mr. J. Greenwood.

CAMBRIDGE.—The members of St. Paul's Musical Society gave their second Concert on the 7th ult., to a large audience. The principal feature was the part-singing, under the able conductorship of the Rev. D. Banham. Songs were given by Misses Headley and Hudson, and Messrs. Bishop and Roe, several receiving encores. A violin solo, by Mr. Whitehead, and a harp solo by a lady, whose name did not transpire, were highly effective. The profits of the concert were given in aid of Addenbrooke's Hospital, Cambridge.

CHELTENHAM.—The first Concert of the Musical Society, this season, was given on the 11th ult., at the Assembly Rooms, before a crowded and fashionable audience. Handel's Acis and Galatea and a selection from Auber's Masaniello formed the programme, which was well executed by the band and chorus. The solos were sung by members of the Society. Mr. Woodward, of Gloucester, led the band, with Mr. Waite, of Clifton, as principal violoncello, and Mr. Arthur E. Dyer, Mus. Bac., Oxon, conducted.——The usual Christmas Concert took place on the 16th ult., in the large classical room of Cheltenham College, before an audience numbering nearly a thousand. A selection from Macfarren's May-Day and some part-songs were well performed by about 100 members of the College, under the direction of the newly-appointed Organist, Mr. A. E. Dyer, Mus. Bac. Gounod's song, "Maid of Athens," sung by the Rev. H. Kynaston, Principal of the College, was encored, as were several of the miscellaneous items of the programme. Haydn's Toy Symphony, performed near the close of the second part by several of the Masters, created considerable amusement. According to custom, the first part of the concert concluded with "Auld lang Syne," and the second part with the Holiday Hymn, followed by the National Anthem.

CLIFTON.—On the 2nd ult., Mrs. Viner-Pomeroy gave her annual Morning Concert at the Victoria Rooms. The following instrumentalists assisted:—Mr. A. W. Waite (violin), Mr. E. Woodward (viola), Mr. J. Pomeroy (violoncello), Mr. J. O. Brooke (clarionet), Mr. J. Pimm (contrabasso), Mr. Edwards (French horn), and Mrs. Viner-Pomeroy (piano). The programme included selections from Schubert, Weber, Beethoven, Servais, and Moscheles.——On Thursday evening, the 9th ult., Signor Paggi gave a Concert at the Victoria Rooms, assisted by his daughters, Mdlle. Paggi (piano), Mdlle. Anita Paggi (flute), and Mdlle. Josephine Paggi (violin), and his son Master Paggi (violoncello). Miss Brettelle and Mr. J. H. Kearton were the vocalists. Signor Paggi's children displayed great musical talent.——On Monday, the 13th ult., Mr. J. C. Daniel introduced to a Clifton audience, at the Victoria Rooms, the eminent Russian pianist, Madame Annetta Essipoff, who gave a grand recital from the works of Mendelssohn, Handel, Chopin, Gluck, Schubert, Bach, Scarlatti, Rubinstein, Heller, Liszt, &c. The rendering of the various pieces was most highly appreciated.

COLCHESTER.—Mr. Groom's Concert took place on Nov. 29. The vocalists were Miss Jessie Royd, Miss Dones, Mr. Stedman, and Mr. Thurley Beale, by whom an excellent selection of vocal music, comprising quartetts, duets and solos, was given, each artist being honoured with encores. Mr. Groom officiated as accompanist, and was also successful in some performances on the harmonium.

DERBY.—The Midland Musical Society gave its first Concert on the 7th ult., in the Drill Hall, under the direction of Mr. Kempton. The first part included Sullivan's On Shore and Sea, in which the choruses were well-rendered; and the second part consisted of songs and ballads, sung by Madame B. Porter, Miss E. Clelland, Mr. Kenningham, and Mr. O. Christian; and several part-songs. Madame Porter, in "L'Ardita," and Mr. Kenningham, in "My own, my guiding star," were warmly encored, and Mr. Christian, in Harper's "A Bandit's Life," and Miss Clelland, in "Was it a dream," were fairly successful. Mr. Houseley was organist, and Mr. G. H. Gregory presided at the pianoforte.

DEVIZES.—The Choral Society gave its first Concert of the season at the Town Hall, on the 14th ult., when Carter's Cantata, Placida, was performed with much effect under the direction of Mr. J. T. Abraham. Mr. Sly (Piano), and Mr. Woodrow (Harmonium), accompanied.

DISS.—The Choral Society gave its first Concert of the season, on Thursday the 16th ult., to a large and appreciative audience. The concert commenced with the first and second parts of Haydn's Creation. The principal vocalists were Master Cross, Master Watts (from Cambridge), Rev. F. Page Roberts, Messrs. Heather, E. W. Abbott, and F. Aldrich; Conductor, Mr. H. Hill; organist, Mr. Hemstock. The second part opened with a selection from Haydn's Symphony No. 1; after which several songs were given, Mrs. Abbott and Mr. Hemstock presiding at the piano.

DONCASTER.—The Messiah was given in the Guildhall, on Monday, the 13th ult. There were two performances—at 2.30 and 8 o'clock. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Holt, Miss Bloomfield, Miss Jennie Smith, Mr. Videon Hopley, Mr. Sutcliffe, and Mr. R. Brooks. The chorus was well balanced and effective, the treble part being almost entirely sustained by the choir-boys of St. George's and St. James's Churches. The band, ably led by Mr. G. Booth, played with precision, and the performance, as a whole, has never been equalled in Doncaster. Mr. J. H. Eyre conducted. The performance in the afternoon was well attended, but in the evening the demand for places was so great that numbers were obliged to be refused admission, in consequence of which the oratorio was repeated for the third time on the following evening.

EDINBURGH.—Professor Oakeley recommenced his organ recitals on the 25th November. The Music Class-room was crowded in every part, the Professor receiving as much applause and giving as evident satisfaction to his audience as on any previous occasion. The programme was an excellent one, the overture to Otho being particularly interesting, and very well rendered.

ENNISKILLEN, IRELAND.—A Soirée was held in the Protestant Hall on the 17th ult., the Earl of Belmore in the chair, when the musical selections were: recitatives, airs and choruses, "O Thou that tellest," (Handel), "Welcome Christmas" (S. Cooper), "Gaily thro' the Greenwood" (Young), "The Last Rose of Summer," harmonized by Stevenson, &c. The performers included Miss Bagot, Miss Graham, Miss Houghton, the Misses Gray, Messrs. Arnold Seddall, and Captain Taylor. An especial feature in the programme was the violin solo, played by the conductor, Mr. M. Arnold, and redemanded.——A Society has recently been formed here, and selections from the Messiah, St. Paul, and Elijah, are already in rehearsal, with Mr. Matthew Arnold as conductor.

FROME.—The performance of Handel's Oratorio, Samson, by the Musical Union, in the Mechanics' Hall, on Tuesday evening the 14th ult., with full orchestral accompaniment, was quite equal to, if it did not surpass, any oratorio previously given by the Society. The band and chorus numbered about eighty-five performers. The choruses were particularly well rendered. The solo vocalists were Miss Leaker, Miss Cox, Miss Coombs, Miss A. Parsons, Mr. Harvey, Mr. Morgan, Mr. Trotman, and Mr. Lewis. Mr. J. Davis-Cox was the conductor, and Mr. F. J. Reed led the band.

HASTINGS.—A most successful Concert was given by the Choral Union in the Music Hall, on Tuesday evening the 14th ult., the proceeds being devoted to the "Gale Relief Fund." The orchestra was augmented by members of the Hastings Pier Band, and Miss Sophie Ferrari and Mr. J. Thornton were the principal vocalists. Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm was splendidly rendered. Dr. Abram conducted.

HORNCASTLE.—On the 16th ult., Mr. Wakelin, Organist of the parish church, gave his Annual Concert at the Corn Exchange before a large audience. With such artists as Madame Wells, Mr. Dunkerton, Mr. Schofield, and several members of the church choir as vocalists, and Mdlle. Bertha Brousil (violin), Mr. Henry Nicholson (flute), and Mr. Wakelin (pianoforte), the selection could not fail to be highly attractive; Mdlle. Brousil's performances especially were enthusiastically received.

KENDAL.—The Choral Society gave a Concert on Monday, the 13th ult., in the National School-room, the band and chorus numbering one hundred. Handel's Oratorio, the Messiah, was performed in a very satisfactory manner. The principal vocalists were Miss Clelland, Miss Edith Clelland, Mr. T. J. Harrison, Mr. Grant and Mr. Godfrey. Mr. W. B. Armstrong and Mr. Wm. Smallwood were the conductors. The proceeds of the concert will be given to the Kendal Industrial Exhibition, which takes place next year.

LEAMINGTON.—Mr. C. Sydney Vinning gave two classical Chamber Concerts at the Royal Music Hall, on November 26. The first part of the morning's performance was selected from the works of Sir Sterndale Bennett; the chamber trio, "Rondo Piacevole," for pianoforte, and a romance for violoncello and pianoforte, being principal features. Amongst other works given, were Mozart's trio in E, Op. 15; Sonata, violin and pianoforte (Beethoven), Op. 24; Sonata (Beethoven), Op. 14, for pianoforte alone, and other compositions by Schumann, O'Leary, Bache and Mayseder. The artists were Mr. Henry Hayward (violin), Mr. Joseph Owen (violoncello), Mr. Sydney Vinning (pianoforte), and Madame Whitaker (vocalist).

LEEDS.—The members of the Arion Quartett Society gave a Concert in the Church Institute on Thursday evening, the 16th ult., assisted by Miss Tomlinson, Mr. J. H. Walker, Mr. W. S. Hall (flautist), and Miss Fanny Arthur (pianist). The concert was an exceedingly good one, the part-singing of the quartett, Mr. H. James Coldwell (alto), Mr. B. Johnson (first tenor), Mr. G. White (second tenor), and Mr. Tom Law (bass), being a great feature.

LEES.—On Wednesday evening, the 1st ult., an Organ Recital was given in Zion Chapel, by W. T. Best, Esq., organist of St. George's Hall, Liverpool. There was a good attendance, many local organists being present. Mr. Best chose a difficult selection of organ music by ancient and modern composers, and performed his task in a masterly style from beginning to end.——On Sunday, the 19th ult., the Annual Sermons, were preached, and collections made on behalf of the choir of Hey Church. The selection of music for the day was as follows: Psalms (morning), Woodward and Havergal in D; Te Deum, Kemp in E; Jubilate, Bridgewater in A; Hymn 159, Chope's selection, tune Hosanna, Bristol Tune Book; Kyrie, Harrop in G; Credo, Ross in G; Psalms (evening), Mornington and Wesley in E; Magnificat, Dr. Clarke-Whitfeld in E; Nunc Dimittis, chant by Dr. Hiles in E; Anthem, "O Zion that bringeth," Dr. Stainer; Hymn 5 and tune 5, Chope's selection; Hymn 155, Chope, tune "Regent-square," from the "Hymnary." The collections amounted to over £29, nearly £7 more than last year.

LEICESTER.—Mr. H. Nicholson's Annual Concert was given on Monday evening, the 6th ult., at the Temperance Hall, as the second of the series of concerts of the Leicester New Musical Society. Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Jessie Jones, Miss Dones, Mr. E. Lloyd (in place of Mr. Sims Reeves, absent from indisposition), and Mr. Hilton, were the principal vocalists. The second part of the concert commenced with a trio for pianoforte, violin, and flute, by Kuhlau, well executed by Mr. Sidney Naylor, Miss Brousil, and Mr. Nicholson.

MANCHESTER.—Mr. Yarwood's Annual Concert took place on the 13th ult., in the School-room, Bury New-road. The Misses Vyner, Sutton, Wilson, and Styles, and Messrs. Williamson, Edgar and Allen, were all successful in their various solos; and several glees were sung by an efficient glee party. Mr. Piddock gave a flute solo, and Councillor Brierley and Mr. Wolstencroft contributed some recitations. Mr. E. Page was the accompanist, and Mr. Yarwood conducted.

NEWBURY.—On Tuesday, the 7th ult., the largest room in the Corn Exchange was filled to excess, on the occasion of a Children's Musical Festival. The choir (numbering eight hundred, raised from various Sunday Schools in the town) performed an admirable selection of sacred and secular music, under the superintendence of Mr. Walter J. Blacket; Miss Langford presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. G. H. Bates at the harmonium. Much credit is due to Mr. Walter J. Blacket, as the originator of the Festival.

NEWMARKET.—Mr. W. F. W. Jackson, Organist of St. Mary's, gave an Organ Recital on the newly-erected organ on the evening of the 9th ult. The programme was selected from the works of Mendelssohn, H. Smart, Batiste, J. S. Bach, Mozart, and Handel. The recital was highly appreciated.

NEW ZEALAND.—The first Annual Festival of the Canterbury Diocesan Choral Association was held in the Pro-Cathedral Church of St. Michael and All Angels, Christchurch, on Tuesday, October 19. The following choirs were represented, St. Michael's, St. Luke's, St. John's, and St. Mary's. The prayers were intoned by the Rev. H. J. Edwards, who acted as precentor, and the sermon was preached by the Venerable Archdeacon Harper, M.A. Mr. Neville Barnett, organist of St. John's, presided at the organ, and to his exertions much of the success of the service was due.

OLDHAM.—On Monday evening, the 29th November, the second Public Concert of the Gentlemen's Musical Club was given in the Town Hall. The following artists were engaged: Miss Katherine Poyntz (soprano), Miss Chadwick (contralto), Mr. Whitehead (tenor), and Mr. Thornton Wood (bass). Instrumentalists: Mr. Irvine Dearnaley (pianoforte), and Mr. Avison (violoncello).

PERTH.—The Euterpeon Society gave the First Rehearsal of this season, in the City Hall, on the 7th ult. The programme consisted of Spohr's "Christian's Prayer," one of Haydn's Seasons, "Summer," Mozart's Motet, No. 1, and the Hallelujah Chorus from Engedi. The chorus-singing excelled anything hitherto attempted by this Society, and the solos and pianoforte accompaniments were efficiently rendered by members of the choir. Mrs. Hempel conducted, as usual, and Mr. Richmond, Dundee, presided at the harmonium.

PEWSEY.—The members of the Musical Society gave a performance of F. H. Cowen's Cantata, The Rose Maiden, on the 6th ult. The solos, duets, &c., were sung with much taste by Mrs. Dixon, Miss R. Goode, Miss Gale, and Miss Kerr; and Messrs. Whitchurch, Ainsworth, and Mould. The accompaniments were ably played by Mrs. Barrett (pianoforte) and Mr. Woodrow (harmonium). Mr. J. T. Abraham conducted.

RUSHOLME.—The first Concert of the season was given by the members of the Choral Union on Monday the 13th ult., in the Public Hall. The programme included songs, part-songs, glees, and a pianoforte solo by the conductor, Mr. James Hindle, who also played a duet with one of his pupils. The choruses were exceedingly well sung.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI, U.S.—A sacred concert was given on Friday, November 12, for the benefit of St. Luke's Hospital, when Professor Malmene's Cantata, The Holy Sabbath, was performed, conducted by the composer. Mr. E. M. Bowman presided at the organ.

STRATFORD.—On the 13th ult. the West Ham Philharmonic Society gave a good performance of the Creation, in the Town Hall, the vocalists being Miss Annie Sinclair, Mr. Stedman, and Mr. J. W. Batten. The rendering of the various solos allotted to Miss Sinclair called forth repeated marks of approval, and Mr. Stedman's singing of "In native worth" was highly appreciated. Mr. J. S. Bates, the energetic and painstaking conductor, is to be congratulated upon the admirable manner in which his choir sang, the precision and attack of the leads being most creditable. Mr. J. Tunstall presided at the pianoforte.

SWINDON.—An Operetta and Concert performance took place at the Mechanics' Institute on the 1st ult., the artists being Madame Romanelli, Mr. Stedman, and Mr. John Wilson. Offenbach's operetta, The Pirate's Bride, was performed, and this, as well as the miscellaneous Concert which followed, was much appreciated by the audience, several encores being awarded. Miss Marie Odell proved herself an efficient accompanist.

TORONTO, C.W.—The Toronto Philharmonic Society commenced its fourth season on the 26th November with brilliant success. The programme comprised selections from the Cantatas, Fridolin (Randegger), and Spring's Message (Gade), Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony, &c. The principal vocalists were Miss Williams, Messrs. Waddington and Beddoe. Conductor, Mr. F. H. Torrington.

UXBRIDGE.—The first Concert of the Choral Society for the present season was given on the 15th ult., at the Public Rooms. The first part of the performance was sacred, consisting of selections from Handel's Samson; principal vocalists, Miss Jessie Jones, Mr. Shakespeare, and Mr. Lewis Thomas. In the secular part, the rendering of the "Cradle Song" (Henry Smart), and "Good night, beloved" (Pinsuti), was worthy of praise. Some duets for organ and pianoforte, played by Mr. Pettit and Mr. A. D. Miles, were also features of the evening. The pianoforte accompaniments were played by Mr. J. Walsh, organist of St. Margaret's, and Mr. Miles conducted.

WELLINGBOROUGH.—The Philharmonic Society gave a performance of Handel's Messiah, on the 21st ult., with great success. Mrs. Warren, Miss Butterworth, Mr. Williams, and Mr. O. Christian were the solo vocalists; Mr. H. Sartoris, solo trumpet; and Mr. W. R. Harrington, conductor.

WOLVERHAMPTON.—The Festival Choral Society commenced the present season on the 6th ult., at the Exchange. The programme was an excellent one, the greater portion being devoted to orchestral works, which were well rendered by a full band, under the conductorship of Mr. Stockley. Miss Emma Beasley was the vocalist, and solos on the oboe and the violoncello were contributed by Mr. Horton and Mr. Walter Pettit. The choir sang well, especially in Hatton's part-song, "The Belfry Tower."

WOOD-GREEN.—A concert was given at the Masonic Hall on the 2nd ult., in aid of the three assistant-masters of St. John's College, whose effects were destroyed in the recent fire at that establishment. Mdlle. Stella and Mr. Heino Hugo were the vocalists, and were very successful in their several songs. Pianoforte pieces were contributed by the Misses Sabel; Mr. H. Weist Hill (who conducted the concert) joining Miss Nellie Sabel in two duets for violin and piano.

YORK.—On Monday evening, November 29th, Mr. John Wilson gave a very excellent concert in the Festival Concert Room; the great source of attraction in the instrumental department being the presence of the principal performers in Charles Hallé's orchestral band, the artists numbering forty-one. Vocal music of a high class was given by Madame Nouver, who made her début before a York audience on this occasion, and was received with considerable favour. The overture to Egmont, which opened the concert, was well interpreted by the band. Mr Charles Hallé's pianoforte solos were, of course, a special feature of the evening.

"A great novelty, and written in a clever and amusing style. It cannot be praised too much."—Court Journal.

"Miss Shedlock may be congratulated on having produced one of the most original and ingenious books of the season. Her Trip to Music-Land is an attempt, and a very successful one, to gild the bitter pill of musical instruction with the attraction of a fairy tale. She endeavours, and with great cleverness works out her idea, to give in this handsome quarto an allegorical and pictorial exposition of the elements of music, which in a most novel and entertaining manner obviates much of the repulsive drudgery that is attached to rudimentary musical teaching. Mr. James has greatly aided the accomplished authoress by making her explanations additionally attractive by his humorous and original illustrations."—Daily Telegraph.

New Octavo Edition.

BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS. Edited and Fingered by AGNES ZIMMERMANN. Paper Covers, 5s.; Cloth, gilt, 7s. 6d.
"Of all the small editions yet issued we must certainly give the palm to that before us, which is a very careful reprint of the full-size publication edited by Miss Agnes Zimmermann, of which we spoke in the highest terms when it first appeared a year or two since. This volume is not only the best engraved, printed, and bound that we have seen—it is far and away the most carefully edited; so that, look where we will, and with whatsoever keenness we may, it is impossible to discover a mistake. The accomplished editress—one of the most distinguished of the later pupils of the Royal Academy of Music—has evinced sound judgment in her treatment of questionable matters, and has earned the gratitude of future art-students by the patient care she has bestowed upon the fingering of this mass of music—no light task when its extent and (in some instances) complicated character are borne in mind; and, by her interpolated marks of phrasing, she has done much towards rendering the least intelligible of Beethoven's intricacies clear and appreciable. All honour, then, to Miss Zimmermann, who has accomplished her difficult and responsible duty to Beethoven's memory and to the public in a manner above all praise, and has presented to the world one of the greatest products of the human mind with a completeness and thoroughness worthy its immortal author."—The Queen, Oct. 15.

A THEORY OF HARMONY.

BY

J. STAINER, M.A., MUS. DOC.

THIRD EDITION, REVISED AND ENLARGED.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"There is much ingenuity in Dr. Stainer's method, and he has the gift of conveying his ideas in concise terms."—Athenæum.

"* * * * * The great and leading characteristic of the work is its logical reasonings and definitions, a character not possessed by any previous book on the subject, and for this Dr. Stainer's theory is certain to gain ground, and be the means of opening an easy and pleasant path in a road hitherto beset with the thorns and briars of perplexing technicalities."—Morning Post.

"Dr. Stainer is, so far as we know, the first writer on musical harmony who has endeavoured to make his theory accord with physical facts. * * * * * Of the soundness of this view, that the tempered chromatic scale is the only rational basis of all music, and that the diatonic scale is an arbitrary selection from it, answering all practical purposes, but supplying no basis for real musical science, we have for ourselves been long ago convinced."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"It is quite refreshing to find Dr. Stainer, at the outset of his book, throwing the light of common sense upon the needless obscurity created by older theorists.* * * * * Our own conviction is that the organist of St. Paul's has done an immense service to the theory of his art by the publication of this work; stripping that theory of many superfluous appendages, and giving it not only light but liberty."—Westminster Review.

Price 16s.

The publication of this work supplies a want which has undeniably been long felt to exist by amateurs and those interested in musical art. Here will be found, not merely definitions of the various terms used in music, but exhaustive articles on such subjects as the Sonata form, Temperament, Ancient Systems of Music, and many other matters, information concerning which has hitherto been obtainable only to those having access to a well-stocked library. Illustrations, both pictorial and musical, have been largely used throughout the work, and the names of Mr. R. H. M. Bosanquet, Mr. Champneys, Mr. W. Chappell, Mr. Ellis, Rev. T. Helmore, Mr. J. Hullah, &c., among the contributors is a sufficient guarantee that the special articles have received careful and competent consideration.

The large instruments, with double action, and several other improvements, are nearer to the organ than anything yet made.

W. H. & Co. have now enlarged their Manufactory and increased their hands, so that they may be able to keep up to the demand, which has been so pressing of late.

AGENTS REQUIRED IN EVERY TOWN FOR

THE NEW PEDAL ATTACHMENT FOR PIANOFORTES.

MR. J. HAMILTON begs to inform Organists, Organ Students and others, that his invention for attaching Pedals to Pianofortes is meeting with great success and is much approved of, as the subjoined testimonials will show. The new action is entirely noiseless, and its simplicity and cheapness must ultimately supersede the cumbrous, expensive, and rattling organ action as usually applied. It can easily be attached to a pianoforte, as it is sent complete, with printed instructions "How to attach." The pedals are manufactured of well-seasoned, hard wood, and are similar in scale and compass to the pedals made for organs of the present day.

A set of Radiating and Concave Pedals (30 notes, C to F), with action, price £5 5s. Or, Straight Pedal Board, with action, price £4 4s.

THE MUSICAL TIMES
AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.
FEBRUARY 1, 1876.

ON THE RELATION OF MUSICAL ARTISTS TO THEIR ART.

BY JOSEPH BENNETT.

"For none of us liveth or dieth to himself."—ST. PAUL.

THE great epistolar formulates an obvious truth in the words I have placed at the head of this paper. It is not possible for any one of us, even though he imitate St. Simon Stylites, and dwell on the top of a pillar, to live or die to himself. The bond of a common nature is too strong; the dependence of man on man too deep-seated in its causes; and the links that bind him to his fellows are too many for severance. But the words may be taken as expressing an obligation, in so far, at least, as they refer to life. No man can live unto himself; every man ought to live unto something that is not only outside himself, but stimulative of noble thoughts, unselfish feeling, and beneficent deeds. If there be any need to prove this duty, I may as well set about doing so at once, and abandon the considerations it was my intention to base upon it. But let not such need be assumed to exist. Men sometimes quote the vile old proverb, "Everyone for himself, and God for us all" (as though Providence had a monopoly of benevolence), but they do so without believing what they say. We are all conscious that the end of life is not to live, that the limit of duty is not the boundary of self, and that he is the truest man who makes the greatest sacrifices for the noblest end.

The duty, so defined, is an obligation upon everybody. That man violates it who cheats his neighbour by selling adulterated goods; and so does he who, though scorning roguery, spends his time in self-indulgence without a thought of anything beyond. Upon some of us, however, the obligation rests with peculiar force, touching us at many points, and affecting even the concerns of daily life. I don't know that it is incumbent upon the man who keeps a bank or sweeps a crossing to remember, as regards the conduct of his business, that there are duties above and beyond justice to himself. In the bank-parlour or in the street he rightly seeks to make the greatest amount of honest gain. That is his legitimate object, and the law of higher motive simply comes in force when the question arises as to the disposal of his earnings. Others, again, are never able to get away from the obligation. It springs out of the very nature of their daily work. The true minister of religion, for example, is necessarily the most unselfish of men. It is not for him to think what will be of most personal advantage, nor to allow his own wants and wishes to prevail. He serves not himself, but a principle which often exacts sacrifices. He has to march and fight and bivouac while the sellers of tea and sugar are snoozing by the fireside. We expect this of him as the sworn soldier of a great cause, and we look for similar devotion from all who fill an analogous place. The physician lives for humanity, not for his fee, though he is worthy of it; and the servants of "god-like charity" do more than serve themselves. But what of the followers of art? Are they among the classes privileged to "buy in the cheapest and sell in the dearest market"? or have they placed themselves in any degree under obligations superior to the demands of self? If any artist should so far get through my preamble as to reach this point, the question will probably amuse him. He may treat it as a whimsical speculation indulged in for the sake of discussion, like the theses of the ancient schoolmen. Or he may regard it as springing from one of those impracticable minds which apply the conditions of perfection to a most imperfect world. Let me hasten to assure and, perhaps, to astonish him by saying that I am serious in propounding the question, and mean to be very earnest in giving it an answer. First of all, however, I must limit the application of the word "artist" to those who follow the musical profession, not only because it is with them I have avowedly to deal, but because, otherwise, injustice might be done. A multitude of circumstances combine to separate musical artists from their fellows, and to place them under conditions of special trial. The painter lives and works in the privacy of his studio, the poet worships the muse in the seclusion of his library, and in each case everything tends to encourage that spirit of devotion which sinks the man in the minister of a noble and beneficent power. What great deeds and mighty sacrifices have the studio and the library witnessed, and how men have there learned to "scorn delights and live laborious days" while an easy road to a nearer reward lay before them! But the musical artist is tried as are not other men. He labours at his vocation in the full glare of day, with all the world looking on. His success or failure at any given moment depends upon a hundred chances which he must be quick to seize. His life is a struggle with rivals who are ready to profit by any slip he makes, and he is to no small extent dependent upon an ignorant public liable to be influenced by equally ignorant, perhaps malevolent, guides. These are not the conditions which foster a true artistic spirit. They are the conditions, rather, which beget selfishness, make personal advantage the be-all and end-all of life, and tend to measure success by encores and guineas. What wonder, then, if musical artists bear, as artists, an indifferent name. What wonder if they are associated, as a rule, with much that is unworthy of the dignity of their calling, and are too often credited with bringing to the discharge of its duties the spirit of a hucksterer! Where there is smoke there is fire, and the facts just stated make it the imperative duty of all who can reach the persons concerned to hold up the ideal of artistic life, and to insist upon the binding power of obligations which are so liable to be overlooked.

But here the artist may interpose, and resent as an impertinence this intrusion upon the conduct of his business. "Why," he may ask, "should I be lectured into what you choose to consider good behaviour? Leave me to manage my affairs and attend you to your own." With regard to the last clause in this protest, that is precisely what I am doing. As between man and man I have no right at all to speak; as between an artist and an amateur of art the matter is one which concerns me—is my business, in point of fact. You cannot see this, because it has not yet dawned upon you that you represent an art upon which thousands of us depend for a good deal that makes life a pleasure; that, as such, you are responsible for every professional act, and subject to the control of influences which lie outside of and apart from yourself. Your position, as thus defined, may be irksome, but that is your business. You are not compelled to remain in it. But while you do remain, understand that the position has its duties as well as its rights, and that anyone who is interested in the welfare of your art may call upon you to fulfil them.

The question now arises—What are the claims of music upon those who profess it?

The answer, if given in all its fulness, would carry us into the domain of impracticable theory. Personally, I have no desire to go so far. The domain in question is the home of dreamers, and of those who, not able to recognise the limits of the possible, blunder over them in imagination, and wonder why others do not follow in reality. It is a barren region, save when it creates enthusiasts whose example leavens a, mayhap, too practical and matter-of-fact world with a little of their own devotion. I am not, therefore, about to contend—though the contention would be theoretically justified—that when a man has consecrated himself to art he should, under all circumstances, prefer its interests to his own, and at its command refuse to do or insist upon doing any and every thing without reference to personal advantage or loss. What would be the use of preaching such a doctrine, especially now, when the struggle of life is fierce, and every man has to fight, like Hal-o'-the-Wynd, "for his own hand" against a thousand who, if not his personal enemies, would walk over his body to their own goal with the utmost complacency? It would be vain and foolish to look for absolute devotion, and he who would discuss this subject practically, must dismiss the idea. But something is possible, and the realisation of it lies in the duty of promoting by every available means the welfare of art, while doing all that circumstances permit to avoid compromising its interests. No artist will object to this as a rule of conduct. Let us see how far its application to certain every-day experiences may be satisfactory.

A is an artist to whom B brings a trumpery song at which, under ordinary conditions, A would not look twice. But B says, "It suits your voice, sing it everywhere for so long a time, and you shall have so much for every copy sold." A jumps at the bait, and forthwith goes among the public lending the influence of his name and gifts to the recommendation of rubbish. Here, in parenthesis, let it be understood that I am not attacking what is usually called the "royalty system." That system may or may not be a bad one, but it is certain that "royalty songs" are not trash of necessity. B might have taken to A a masterpiece, in which case, though it involve the "royalty system," my present argument would not apply. But assuming the conditions laid down above, what rag of defence has A against the charge of sacrificing his art for paltry gain? It is a case of disloyalty, and more—it is a case like that of a soldier who turns against his own colours the weapons given to him for their defence.

> "Treason doth never prosper. What's the reason?
> Why, when it prospers, none dare call it treason."

Let me prove old Sir John Harrington wrong for once, by stigmatizing the practice under review as treason in its worst form.

C is an artist whose help is necessary to the production of a work the influence of which cannot be too greatly strengthened. But the composer has not written with a view to the claims founded by C upon his artistic rank. There are not songs enough, or they come too early or too late, or they are not adapted to show the best points in his voice. C thereupon declines the engagement, and leaves it to a man of humbler pretensions as well as smaller means. The result is damage to the work. Here the first consideration was personal advantage, not duty to art. But something more than this was involved, viz.—inability to recognise the fact that the dignity which the pursuit of art reflects is a truer and nobler thing than that which springs from personal rank and fame. The greatest artist — happily the annals of music illustrate this over and over again — may, without the smallest loss of greatness, minister in a humble capacity. "Those also serve" says Milton, speaking of the angels, "who only stand and wait." So before the majesty of high art all its followers are equal, though by comparison amongst themselves there are ranks and orders. Could this exalted truth be more generally recognised we should see less of a contemptible self-assertion which assumes that individual aggrandizement is the ultimate end, and the gratification of individual feeling the highest good of artistic life. There is nothing more pitiful or more hopeless than the condition of one who is given over to such a form of selfishness. An old theologian has said, "Thou must be emptied of self before thou canst be filled with the Spirit," and, in like manner, until the follower of art is emptied of self he cannot be an artist. He is the Iscariot among disciples, and thinks more of dipping his hand into the store-bag than of furthering the cause which unites his companions.

D is an artist who scorns to make money by playing or singing bad music, and is indifferent about asserting his precedence over others, but suffers nevertheless from a consuming ambition. He wants to make a noise in the world; to be talked of in society; to see long articles concerning himself in the public journals, and to find his name the battle-cry of a musical faction. To this end he works by cultivating what is called individuality. He has odd ways in public, which simple souls connect with genius in the blundering fashion of people who speculate upon what they know nothing at all about. Perhaps he wears long hair, and achieves the abstracted look of a man able to see more things in heaven and earth than are dreamt of in the philosophy of common folk. Perhaps he has eccentric notions of dress, or he may assume an air of abandon on the platform as of one "possessed," or he may, as is most in fashion now-a-days, sacrifice the music he performs to "new readings" such as a gullible public takes in with very long ears and much asinine wonder. It is hard to define what a musician afflicted in this mode may or may not do, so wide is the field in which, by a mysterious dispensation of liberty, folly or conceit, or—worst of all—deliberate calculation, disports itself. There are many such people calling themselves artists, and some of them are men who, but for their weakness on this point, would be artists in deed and in truth. Their case is the worst of all. He whose object is gain can, at least, be understood. Money is power; the world worships it; and the desire for wealth is a perfectly intelligible, if vulgar, weakness. He, again, who stands up for his dignity to the disregard of art, enjoys a natural, though unworthy, triumph. But the man who uses ability and opportunity to make art the means of a sensational display intended solely for his own glorification—he is an offender sui generis; one who sins against light, and is beyond the reach of forgiveness. As well as living to himself, art, as far as he can make it, lives for him too, and is kept in his stable, that at any moment he may bestride it and witch a foolish world with most ignoble horsemanship.

Other examples might be brought forward, but the limits of this paper are reached, and those already cited will suggest many more to every observant mind. And now the question may be asked Cui bono? What can come of this preachment against the wind, of which every man can hear the sound and that is all? Well, that is exactly what I don't know. But an old book of wisdom says, "Cast thy bread upon the waters, and thou shalt find it after many days." I remember, when a boy, putting the advice to a literal test, and wasting a slice of excellent provender. Nevertheless, I have faith in it still as a figure, and it may be that the words now drawing to a close will nourish somewhere or other the seed out of which a true artist springs, helping it to bring forth the fruit of high aims, noble devotion, unselfish feeling, everything, in point of fact, that distinguishes an artist from a mere trader upon art.

A letter from Mr. T. Backhouse, which we publish in our present number, gives a warning to concert-givers which they will do well to ponder. Rightly or wrongly, it has been so long the custom to place compositions in a programme without any communication with the authors, that the official letter from Mr. Harry Wall, who represents the "Authors', Composers', and Artists' Copyright and Performing-right Protection Office," must at first have appeared almost like a practical joke. That it was not so, however, has been proved by the fact of the proprietor of the Raglan Hall having been fined £4 and costs for the offence of having permitted one of Wallace's compositions to be performed, "innocently, ignorantly, and quite unknowingly." Should this restriction extend only to Wallace's works, of course it is easy, as Mr. Backhouse says, to meet the difficulty by not performing them; but if other authors' compositions are included, public notice should be given of the fact; for we cannot think it fair on the part of the Society to remain passive until certain songs have been sung at concerts, and then come down upon the concert-giver for a fine.

Before we accuse our creative artists of inaction, we should be careful to look, not only in the most likely, but the most unlikely, places for proofs of their industry. An advertisement lately issued, in addition to informing us that "the most beautiful songs and ballads of the day are those sung by the Moore and Burgess Minstrels," announces that the music of these songs is "composed by the most celebrated musicians of the age." In the list which follows we confess to lighting upon some names which we had never heard of before; but as "the most celebrated musicians of the age" do not require to be catalogued, we presume that it was deemed advisable only to mention those exceptionally gifted men whose fame has been solely made through the instrumentality of Messrs. Moore and Burgess.

We are glad to find that Mr. Arthur Sullivan, in accepting the post of Principal of the National Training School for Music, does not resign his professorship at the Royal Academy of Music; indeed, we may add, on credible information, that, from a deep attachment to the institution in which he pursued his early studies, he positively refused to sever his connection with it, confidently relying upon the two Academies working together in amicable relationship. So satisfactory a termination of a subject deeply affecting the furtherance of musical education in this country will be universally welcomed; and we have now only to express a hope that the new school may in time gather around it as many endearing associations and artistic traditions as linger in the memory of all who have grown up under the fostering care of the Royal Academy of Music.

In perusing the American musical journals we often light upon much valuable information. "Oboy's London Letter," for instance, published in a recent number of the Music Trade Review, tells us that the Promenade Concerts were "instituted twenty years ago by the late Jullien," and that the choruses to "Antigone" were written by Mendelssohn "in unison." But these are trifles compared with the announcement that "the Dean and Chapter of Worcester have at last been compelled, by the pressure of public opinion, to give their cathedral for the triennial festival." Considering that the letter in which this appears is dated "December 4, 1875," and that the "Services of Song" which supplanted the usual festival at Worcester, took place during the previous September, such a paragraph seems perfectly inexplicable.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The Saturday Concerts were resumed, after the Christmas recess, on the 8th ult., and the following week witnessed the presentation of a group of absolute or comparative novelties, as though the managers had resolved to make ample amends for the time lost in attendance upon the genius of pantomime. Over some of these unfamiliar things we lightly pass in order to arrive at one which demands special notice. Enough, therefore, that simple mention be made of the overture to Spohr's "Fall of Babylon," Mendelssohn's Fugue in E flat for strings, and the Overture to Adam's "Le Brasseur de Preston." Interesting as all these were, they excited only ordinary attention as compared with the "Magnificat" for soli, chorus, and orchestra, written by Mr. Ebenezer Prout, and hitherto unperformed. It is quite superfluous to insist upon the fact that Mr. Prout holds high rank among those English composers who take the loftiest views of their artistic mission. As far as we know he has never degraded his powers by writing things "to sell," while his name is familiar in connection with several works of great pretensions and scarcely less great achievement. To remember this was to anticipate the "Magnificat," as one looks for a good thing. Of course the risk was all the greater for Mr. Prout; but he came triumphantly out of the ordeal, and found his new work accepted as a remarkable and honourable contribution to a distinctive English school. The "Magnificat" consists of eight numbers, beginning with a massive chorus in C major, simple in construction but full of effect. A soprano air, "For He hath regarded," follows, and is noteworthy for its purely vocal style, in association with no common grace and refinement. In No. 3, "For He that is mighty," we have an eight-part chorus admirably laid out, with a beautiful episode on the words, "For holy is His name," which shows a fine sense of contrast as well as of truthful expression. The next number, a tenor solo, "And His mercy is on them," exhibits ingenuity of treatment, and is well worth study as combining scientific skill with tenderness of sentiment. No. 5 is a chorus, "He hath showed strength," full of animation and force at the outset, afterwards illustrating the composer's contrapuntal skill to much advantage. A soprano song, "He hath filled the hungry," and a duet for soprano and tenor, "He remembering His mercy," are very beautiful, and well sustain the interest of the work. After these comes the "Gloria Patri," on which Mr. Prout has brought his utmost skill to bear with a result which may elicit various opinions, differing only in their measure of praise. Without entering further into the detail which will be more in place under the head of "Reviews," we may truly say that Mr. Prout deserves the hearty thanks of every English musician for producing a work which is an honour to his country's art. The performance (solos by Mrs. Osgood and Mr. E. Lloyd) might have been better, taken as a whole, but no one was disposed to be hypercritical in presence of the music itself.

OPENING OF THE ROYAL WESTMINSTER AQUARIUM.

An Aquarium without fish can scarcely be said to offer a legitimate attraction to the public, and it is not surprising, therefore, that on Saturday, the 22nd ult., when the "Royal Aquarium, Summer and Winter Garden" opened its doors for the first time, the programme of entertainment provided for the visitors should include such items as "Arrival of Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress," "Arrival of H.R.H. The Duke of Edinburgh and Suite," and that military bands should relieve the monotony of staring at the gorgeously fitted up royal box, which was, however, placed in such a position that the occupants of the reserved seats in the gallery could only guess what was going on during the reading of the address and the reply thereto. But our business is only with the music; and here it must be said that, whatever deficiency may have been observed in other departments, no fault could be found with the band which Mr. Arthur Sullivan has formed, nor with the programme exclusively selected from the works of English composers, which had been drawn up for the opening concert. Macfarren's "Festival Overture," to which the composer had written additional parts for a military band expressly for the occasion, was finely played, the effect indeed being so materially heightened by the extra instruments as to cause us to hope that it may often be heard in this form; the Minuet and Trio from Sir Sterndale Bennett's Symphony in G minor were also a feature in the instrumental portion of the programme, and Sullivan's brilliant "Procession March," performed by the orchestra and military bands, formed a fitting finale. The vocal music was well chosen for a popular audience; Madame Edith Wynne gave Bishop's "Bid me discourse," and Clay's "She wandered down the mountain side;" Madame Patey, Arne's "Gentle youth," and Wallace's "Sweet and low;" and Mr. Sims Reeves, Balfe's "When other lips," and Hatton's "Good bye, sweetheart." To say that all these pieces were received coldly would not be to record the whole truth; for at the conclusion of the instrumental compositions positively not even a recognition of their having been performed was heard in any part of the building; even the songs were acknowledged by that faint murmur of satisfaction which seemed more to express a sense of relief at their termination, than of pleasure at their performance; and the singers, who have so long been accustomed to hear the ringing applause of the audience in acknowledgment of their efforts, left the orchestra as if glad to escape from the chilly atmosphere with which they were surrounded. We do not attempt to account for this, but merely state the fact; and heartily congratulate Mr. Sullivan, who has evidently his heart in the cause, on the firm and energetic manner in which he conducted his band under such adverse circumstances. In the evening a concert was given, under the direction of Mr. George Mount, when the powers of the Aquarium band were successfully tested in a well-selected programme, including Mendelssohn's Overture to "Ruy Blas" and the slow movement from Beethoven's Symphony in C minor.

The authorities of the Alexandra Palace offer two prizes of £20 and £5 respectively, together with a certificate, for the best two Orchestral Symphonies to be written by British composers, the judges being Professor G. A. Macfarren and Herr Joachim. The work which gains the first prize is to be performed at one of the Saturday concerts, and the second, if of sufficient merit, will also be presented to the public. Manuscripts must be sent in to Mr. H. Weist Hill, Alexandra Palace, on or before March 13.

It is anticipated that the new Training School for Music, at South Kensington, will open soon after Easter. The following appointments have already been made. Mr. Arthur Sullivan (composition), Mr. Pauer (pianoforte), Dr. Stainer (organ), Mr. Carrodus (violin), and Signor Visetti (singing). Mr. Arthur Sullivan is also to be the Principal of the Institution.

The members of the Aldermanbury Musical Society, which has become one of the largest of the kind in the City, gave the first Concert of their second season on Monday evening, the 10th ult., in one of the saloons of the Oriental-buildings, New Bridge-street. There was a large audience. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Newman, Miss Goldsworthy, Miss F. M. Prince, Miss Alice Berton, Messrs. Bateman, Mellis, Salisbury, Harris, Wright, and Markham. Miss Rose Williams, Miss Isabel Waite, and the Misses E. and M. Jones were highly successful in their pianoforte solos, that of Miss Waite having been re-demanded.

We are sorry to record the death of the Rev. Dr. Dykes, which occurred on the 22nd ult., at the age of fifty-two. Dr. Dykes was favourably known as a composer of Church music, his Service in F, his Anthems, "These are they that have come out of great tribulation" and "The Lord is my Shepherd," and many of his hymn-tunes, being very widely used.

On Thursday, the 30th December, the members of the Evening Service Choir of St. Paul's showed their appreciation of the services of Dr. Stainer (organist of the Cathedral) by presenting him with a handsome bâton of ivory and gold, accompanied by an illuminated address on vellum, congratulating him upon his recovery from the serious accident which had for a short period incapacitated him from the performance of his professional duties. The presentation was made at a soirée given to the gentlemen of the choir at the Chapter House of the Cathedral, under the presidency of the Very Rev. the Dean (Dr. Church), Canons Gregory and Lightfoot being present on the occasion.

A good word is due to Mr. Frederick Penna for his thoughtful lecture on the character of the Prophet Elijah, as musically depicted by Mendelssohn, which was given for the second time on the 30th December, at the Beethoven Rooms, Harley-street. Mr. Henry Lesingham, who delivered the lecture, was much applauded; and Mr. F. Penna's musical illustrations were thoroughly appreciated. In the double capacity of analyser and vocalist, Mr. Penna, at the conclusion of the lecture, was called for and warmly greeted. In the concert which followed, Miss Catherine Penna displayed a carefully cultivated soprano voice, and in many of her songs a dramatic power which will doubtless ripen by experience.

An Evening Concert for a charitable purpose took place at the Drill Room, Well-walk, Hampstead, on the 17th ult., when the following vocalists gave their valuable assistance:—Madame Antoinette Sterling, Miss Emily Spiller, Miss Gill, Madame Lia Rohan, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Thurley Beale, and Signor Caravoglia, all of whom were highly successful, Madame Sterling receiving an unanimous encore for her expressive rendering of Barnby's song, "When the tide comes in." Miss Amy Turner Burnett, of the Royal Academy of Music, fully supported the reputation of the institution in which she is still a student by her facile and brilliant rendering of Arthur O'Leary's pianoforte piece, "There's nae luck about the house," and Herr Otto Booth was much applauded in his violin solos. The conductor was Mr. James Shaw, who also played a solo on the pianoforte.

An interesting performance of Mozart's Operetta, "L'Impresario," took place at the Athenæum, Camden-road, on Wednesday, the 19th ult., this being the first time that the work has been played in England. The characters were sustained by Miss Manetti, Miss Annie Schalders, Mr. Stedman, and Mr. Sutcliffe, all of whom rendered the music allotted to them in a highly satisfactory manner, Miss Manetti and Mr. Stedman being especially successful. The orchestra, under the direction of Mr. H. Keatley Moore, played the overture and accompaniments with delicacy and effect, and the scenery and dresses were alike excellent. The libretto was well adapted for the English stage by Mr. Finlay Finlayson.

At the forthcoming Hereford Festival the works to be performed are "Elijah," "Samson," the first Part of the "Creation," Spohr's "Last Judgment," Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," J. F. Barnett's "Raising of Lazarus," and the "Messiah." One hundred and ten Stewards have already consented to act, and it is anticipated that the list will continue to increase.

The Arion Musical Society gave its first concert at the Burdett-road School, E., on the 30th Dec. The first part of the programme consisted of Haydn's Mass No. 1, with Cherubini's "Ave Maria" as an Offertory; the second part, of Schumann's "Gipsy Life," and a miscellaneous selection. The solos were rendered by Miss Lizzie Emblem, Mrs. Hickie, Miss McGaw, and Messrs. Nolan and Donnelly. Mr. J. B. Hulbert conducted.

For the Edinburgh Orchestral Festival, on Feb. 11, 12 and 14, in connection with the Reid Concert, Professor Oakeley has engaged Mr. Hallé's orchestra. The works to be performed are:—Symphonies, Beethoven No. 7; Gade, No. 4; Raff, No. 5; Overtures, "Don Juan;" "Egmont;" "Fire-à-bras" (Schubert); "Euryanthe:" "Hebrides;" "Ferdinand Cortez" (Spontini); "Carnival" (Berlioz); "Handel Adventure" (Reinecke). Pianoforte Concertos, Beethoven, No. 1; Sterndale Bennett, No. —; and Grieg in A minor, Also Lachner's Orchestral Suite, No. 6; Brahms's Variations on a Theme of Haydn; Rheinberger's Scherzo, &c., "Wallenstein's Camp;" Solos by Mr. Hallé from the works of Bach, Schubert, Chopin, and Schumann. The vocalists are Madame Antoinette Sterling and Mr. E. Lloyd.

At the recent examination held by the Academical Board of Trinity College, London, the following candidates passed:—Senior Choral Fellows: F. G. Cole, St. Mary's, Staines; H. W. Little, New College, Oxford.—Choral Fellows: George F. Smith, Royal Academy of Music; Walter Stokes, Birmingham.—Choral Associates: F. H. Dale, Trinity College, Manchester branch; J. Hawley, Trinity College, London.—Examiners, Edward Dearle, Mus. D., Cantab., S.C.F.; Roland Rogers, Mus. D., Oxon.; William J. Jennings, B.A., Cantab., S.C.F.; and J. Gordon Saunders, Mus. B., Oxon., S.C.F.—There were ten candidates in all.

Mr. George Mount having resigned the conductorship of the Amateur Philharmonic Society, St. John's-wood, the appointment has been offered to, and accepted by, Mr. Wm. Beavan.

Sir Sterndale Bennett's "Woman of Samaria" and Professor G. A. Macfarren's Cantata, "Outward Bound," were announced to be performed by the Brixton Choral Society on the 31st ult. Since Mr. Lemare has abandoned the idea of attempting great works with an organ and pianoforte accompaniment, and engaged a competent orchestra, the concerts of this Society have materially advanced in public estimation.

Two Free Scholarships, tenable for two years, have been founded by a subscription amongst the Professors of the Royal Academy of Music. These Scholarships will be awarded in April next to the best player on the violin, and to the best player on any other orchestral instrument.

The St. George's Glee Union gave its usual monthly Concert at the Pimlico Rooms on the 7th ult., the principal choral pieces being Locke's "Macbeth" music (the solos by Miss Spear, Messrs. McCann, Linington, Harvey and Tom Ellis), "For the New Year" (Mendelssohn), "Christmas madrigal," "Hail, smiling morn," "In going to my lonesome bed," and "Blow, blow, thou winter wind" (Stevens). Miss Bessie Spear was encored in "Do I not love?" (a new ballad by Donald King), and Miss Florence Wydford gave "To the woods" (Warner) with considerable success. Mr. Williams gained much applause for his careful singing of "The Rose Song" (Balfe) and "Only for thee;" and Mr. Thurley Beale, who introduced a new descriptive song, "The Gladiator" (C. E. Tinney), and also sang "The Free Lance" (Campana), met with the enthusiastic reception which always attends his appearance at these concerts. Two pianoforte solos by Miss Hamilton were well received. Mr. T. Garside conducted.

We regret to announce the death, on the 17th ult., of Mr. James Tilleard, at the the age of forty-eight. Mr. Tilleard was known as the compiler of Collections of Sacred and Secular Music for the use of Children, and as the composer of many hymn-tunes.

The Somerleyton Amateur Opera Company performed Donizetti's opera, "Lucia di Lammermoor," at the Merchants' College, Brixton, on the 15th, 17th, 19th, 22nd, and 24th ult. The principal characters were sustained by Miss Beckton, Miss Craven, and Messrs. M. W. Hall, C. King, H. Kisbey, Hudson, and Kossuth Hudson, all of whom were very satisfactory in their several parts. Miss Lardner was the accompanist; and the scenery (painted by members of the company) and dresses were effective.

On the 17th ult. a Concert was given by the members of the Choir of St. Peter's, in the School-Room, St. Peter's-street, Mile End, under the direction of Mr. R. Croger. The soloists were Miss Kate Frankford, Messrs. C. W. Lock, S. Foulds, and G. Weige, who were highly successful in their several songs, duets, &c. The choir sang the part-songs, "Sir Knight, Sir Knight," "Let the hills resound," and "Blanche." The band played several selections during the evening. Miss H. E. Croger played the accompaniments in excellent style.

REVIEWS.

Novello, Ewer and Co.

A Dictionary of Musical Terms. Edited by J. Stainer, M.A., Mus. Doc., and W. A. Barrett, Mus. Bac.

We are so little accustomed to imagine that in a work termed a "Dictionary" any more than the briefest explanation of words will be found, that we were most agreeably surprised, on opening this book, to light upon a large number of essays contributed by writers the most eminent in the special subjects they have treated. That the word "Cyclopædia" would have more aptly described the character and scope of a volume which must have absorbed a very considerable amount of labour and research will be at once admitted by all who turn over the pages of this book, and glance even hastily at the large space devoted to those words the real meaning of which has hitherto been but imperfectly understood by musical students. It is true that in existing Cyclopædias and in scattered volumes upon our library shelves an explanation of musical terms may, after much time, be hunted out; but it was reserved for Messrs. Stainer and Barrett to place before us in one compact volume not only a mass of reliable information upon every subject connected with the art, but to bring down to the present day the history of musical thought, and thus to supplant the writings of many who have so long been held up as authorities. The Editors truly say, in the Preface, "In a work of reference of this kind it is always difficult to find any definite principle by which to include or exclude the words to be explained." Knowledge and experience are indeed absolutely necessary to successfully surmount this difficulty; and although we had great faith in the judgment of those to whom the conduct of the work has been entrusted, we confess that, on a careful examination of its contents, the result has far exceeded our expectations. Not one word we could call to mind has been omitted, and the clear and concise manner in which the meaning of those which do not demand any lengthened explanation is given cannot be too highly praised. The illustrations, which are plentifully scattered throughout the book, add materially to its value; and much care has been bestowed upon those which represent ancient instruments and obsolete notations. In the next notice of this attractive work we shall endeavour to give our readers some idea of the richness of its contents: at present we desire only to draw attention to the fact of its publication, and to show that not only an existing want has been supplied, but that the editors of the volume, however competent themselves, have wisely called to their assistance some of the ablest men of the day.

A Theory of Harmony. By John Stainer, Mus. Doc., M.A. Third Edition.

Few, excepting those unfortunate reviewers whose duty it is to read through all the new theoretical works on music which make their appearance, can imagine the relief experienced in making acquaintance with a treatise on harmony in which we do not find on every other page allusions to "ratios" or the "harmonic series." We therefore offer Dr. Stainer our heartiest thanks that in the present work we find neither the one nor the other. Whether the major third corresponds to the ratio of 4 to 5, and the minor third to that of 5 to 6 or not, is a question about which we believe the great masters never troubled themselves at all; while, on the other hand, there are few, if any, instances of musical mathematicians who have also become distinguished composers. Dr. Stainer very sensibly remarks on this subject:

"The attempts hitherto made to reduce all chords to a series of simple arithmetical relations to some given generator have been so unsuccessful, that the only safe course in laying the foundation of a Theory of Harmony is to generalise from the results observed in the treatment of harmonic combinations in the works of the best masters."

Instead, therefore, of starting with any mathematical calculations, Dr. Stainer simply takes the twelve semitones in the octave, as they are to be found in all modern music, and constructs his Theory upon their use. In the earlier editions of the work it was entitled "A Theory of Harmony founded upon the Tempered Scale." These last words are now judiciously omitted, because, as the author says in his preface, it will be found perfectly applicable to the system of just intonation. As a matter of fact composers make no difference whatever in writing for instruments in which perfect intonation is possible—such as the violin—and for those (e. g., the piano) in which the tempered scale is a necessity. The question therefore naturally arises, why should a distinction be made in theory when none is made in practice? In our opinion the true course is that which is adopted in this work, to deal with actual facts, and not with musical or mathematical possibilities.

We therefore cordially welcome Dr. Stainer's book as a practical work founded on common-sense principles, and shall proceed to give a short account of the contents of his volume. The first and second chapters containing the necessary introductory matter are admirably clear in their definitions and explanations. We decidedly approve of the system adopted in naming the intervals, calling the fourth and fifth from C to F and from C to G "major," instead of "perfect." As all the other intervals in the major scale reckoning upwards from the key-note are called "major," we can see no valid reason for not retaining the name for the fourth and fifth, a system of nomenclature, by the way, which is adopted by some German writers on music.

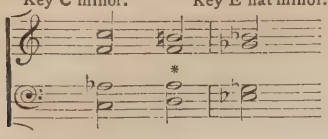
In Chapter III. Dr. Stainer lays the foundation-stone of his theory by stating that notes are combined to form chords simply "by adding thirds together, the thirds being major or minor according to their nature in the scale from which they are taken." He further derives all his chords, with one or two exceptions, either from the tonic or the dominant as a root; and by "root" he means "not that sound from the natural harmonic relations of which the chord upon it is derived, but only that note which forms the basis of a collection of sounds, as found in use, and as treated in various ways in modern music." It is here that the advocates of other systems will join issue with our author. Richter, for instance, in his Treatise on Harmony, agrees with Dr. Stainer as to making his chords by the super-position of thirds; but instead of confining his series to the tonic and dominant, he puts common chords and chords of the seventh upon every degree of the major and minor scale. The results arrived at are of course ultimately the same, but the processes passed through, and the views held with regard to the chords are widely different. Take for instance the diminished seventh, B, D, F, A♭. Dr. Stainer calls this the first inversion of the chord of the minor ninth on the dominant of the key of C minor, with the root omitted. Richter calls it the chord of the seventh on the seventh degree of the scale of the same key. Or take again the "imperfect common chord" B, D, F, in the key of C major. Dr. Stainer calls this the first inversion of the dominant seventh with the root omitted. Richter calls it the (imperfect) common chord on the seventh degree of the scale. It appears to us that it would be a rash thing to say positively that one of these views is right, and the other is wrong. It is rather the old story of the gold and silver shield—the authors look at the matter from different points of view. The practical question is which will be found easier for teaching purposes; and on this, never having used Dr. Stainer's book, we are not able to offer a reliable opinion.

Our readers will pardon us for dwelling in some detail on these matters, because it seems to us that here is the very kernel of Dr. Stainer's Theory. Perhaps there is no chord which has been more a bone of contention to theorists than the so-called "added sixth." We quote Dr. Stainer's own example—the first chord of Beethoven's Sonata in E flat, Op. 31, No. 3:—

This he calls "the third inversion of the chord of the eleventh of B♭." We must confess that we consider Richter's explanation simpler. He would define it as "the first inversion of the chord of the secondary seventh on the second degree of the scale." We are inclined to think that on Dr. Stainer's theory some of the higher inversions of the chords of the eleventh and thirteenth would be found decidedly difficult to analyze by average pupils. On the other hand, it is only fair to say that this system simplifies, by doing away with altogether, the subjects of Suspensions, Retardations, Added Discords, Fundamental Discords, and Primary and Secondary Chords. We are disposed, on the whole, to think that the advantages of this system outweigh its inconveniences; but on this matter it is impossible, without practically testing it, to pronounce a decided opinion.

The remarks on "doubtful tonality" are excellent, as also the whole treatment of the question of modulation. Dr. Stainer, however, seems to make no distinction between an enharmonic change of notation, and an enharmonic modulation, since he defines the latter "a modulation by means of altered notation." With all deference for the Doctor's opinion, we cannot think this definition a satisfactory one. For example, in the following:—

we have an enharmonic change of notation; but the modulation is simply from B♮ major to D♯ major, the third above, by means of common chords, and the flats are merely written to facilitate the reading and to avoid the double sharps. Chopin, who was particularly averse to the use of the enharmonic change, has in his first concerto actually written a similar modulation in the key of D♯ major (with F𝄪 and C𝄪) throughout. Besides, if the above example be transposed a semitone higher, it will simply be the ordinary modulation from C to E major through the chord of A minor, and we do not think it can be called an enharmonic modulation in the one case, and not in the other. We should define it simply as an enharmonic change. A true example of enharmonic modulation we should consider to be the following:—



In this example we enter the chord marked * from C minor, as the "second inversion of the minor ninth of G" (to define it on Dr. Stainer's system); but we give it the resolution, not of that chord but of the first inversion of the minor ninth of B♭, the dominant of E♭ minor, the B♮ being changed to C♭. We should rather define an enharmonic modulation as one in which the modulation itself is actually altered by the change of notation, either written down or implied. Here the resolution of the B♮ would be upwards; it is only by mentally changing it to C♭ that we can bring it down to B♭ in the following chord. We are aware that the distinction we have drawn here is overlooked, or ignored, by many theorists; but we cannot help thinking that it exists.

We must not dwell on the subject of "consecutive fifths" and "false relations," both of which are admirably treated by Dr. Stainer; we will only remark that many readers will probably be surprised at the number of consecutive fifths that the author has hunted up in the standard works of such composers as Bach, Handel, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven and Mendelssohn. And this leads to the observation that throughout the whole book the examples are most excellent, always judiciously chosen and to the point, and showing very extensive reading, and a large acquaintance with the masterpieces of various schools, such as might be expected from a musician of Dr. Stainer's acquirements. Occasionally, through a printer's oversight, the * marking the special chord under notice has been omitted; we point out three such, which we have observed, that they may be corrected in the next edition. They are to be found in Ex. 8, p. 25, Ex. 32, p. 34, and Ex. 11, p. 108. In all cases, a teacher would have no difficulty in supplying them for his pupils, but for the sake of those who are studying alone, it is well that they should be inserted. We will also suggest to Dr. Stainer an important example which has perhaps escaped his notice. In the treatment of the "tonic minor thirteenth" (pp. 67 and 99), he mentions the "very rare" occurrence of the complete form of this chord, but gives no example of it. He will find one (in the first inversion, but in a complete shape), in the finale of Beethoven's Choral Symphony, just before the entry of the baritone solo (p. 195 of Breitkopf and Härtel's score, in their complete edition of Beethoven). It is this chord which has been much discussed by musicians, but which, on Dr. Stainer's system, is capable of clear and satisfactory explanation. It is as well also here to call attention to a slip of the pen on p. 74, in which ex. 110 is quoted as from Tannhäuser; it is really from Lohengrin, and will be found on p. 44 of Novello's octavo edition.

At the end of the book are given a series of questions for examination, and a set of sixty exercises. The former are all that could be wished; but we think that the latter advance too rapidly in difficulty. Our own experience in teaching harmony is that for the first stages of the pupil's progress the exercises can hardly be too simple. The mistakes, to say nothing of mere awkwardness, in the first attempts of beginners are such as would hardly be credited by those who have not taught an elementary class. Matters that appear perfectly simple to the teacher are almost hopeless stumbling-blocks at first; and we cannot help fancying that such an exercise as No. 4, containing several modulations (simple ones, it is true), should have been preceded by a larger number of easier ones. On this point, however, we again speak with diffidence, not having used the book for teaching purposes. Dr. Stainer's experience with pupils may be more favourable than our own.

Although we do not agree fully with everything contained in the present work, and have not hesitated to express our difference of opinion where it existed, we can, in taking leave of it, warmly recommend it to musicians. It is throughout perfectly clear, and always self-consistent; and without necessarily pledging ourselves to acceptance of all Dr. Stainer's views, we can at least honestly thank him for an interesting and valuable addition to our theoretical works.

The Ruins of Athens. A Dramatic Masque. Composed by Louis Van Beethoven. The English adaptation by W. Bartholomew.

By the publication of this work in the octavo form there may be some hope of its manifold beauties becoming extensively known. The Duet, "Faultless, yet hated," the March and Chorus, "Twine ye the garlands," and the highly dramatic Chorus of Dervishes, are really the only pieces familiar even to the majority of amateur vocalists; but those who possess themselves of the whole of the music will find many other portions equally deserving of attention, amongst which we may mention the bass solo, "Deign, great Apollo," and the opening Chorus, "Daughter of high-throned Jove." The performance of this composition, in its entirety, was one of the features of the secular concerts at the Worcester Festival of 1872, the Dervish Chorus eliciting the usual amount of enthusiasm, and being, of course, redemanded. Choral Societies would do well to include the work in their programmes for the coming season, for the music is sufficiently interesting without the recitation of the words, which, by the way, are excellently adapted by Mr. Bartholomew. It is almost needless to say that this popular edition is clearly printed and has been carefully revised.

Benedictus, Gloria Tibi, Gratias, and Sursum Corda, set to music in the key of F, for four voices, by Berthold Tours.
Ditto, for voices in unison and Organ, by the same.

The above are two different arrangements of the same work, and form the completion of Mr. Tours's Morning, Communion, and Evening Service in F, published some time since. The smaller pieces (Gloria, &c.) being mere musical sentences of four bars each, call for no comment; but the "Benedictus" is a somewhat developed piece of music which deserves a more detailed notice. Of late there has been a tendency among composers for the Church to forsake the cut-and-dried harmonies of the old cathedral style, and to endeavour to meet the requirements of a more modern taste. Such an endeavour (and, let us say at once, a most successful one) is the present "Benedictus." Without the slightest approach to a secular tone, there is a life and spirit in Mr. Tours's music, and a freedom and variety in the harmony, which are worthy of all commendation. In only two small points does it appear to us capable of improvement. The arpeggio of the chord of the diminished seventh (D, B♮, G♯, E♯, D) for alto and bass voices, at the end of p. 17, will, we think, be found rather difficult to sing well in tune—at least by average church choirs; and at the commencement of the short fugato to the words "As it was in the beginning" the entry of the tenor in C minor seems to lead the music rather too far away from the original key for a movement so little developed. These, however, are but very slight blemishes, if blemishes they can be called; and the work as a whole can be warmly recommended to "choirs and places where they sing." The unison arrangement of the same work will be found useful in those churches where unison singing, in preference to harmonised, is in vogue.

A Collection of Kyries, Glorias, Chants, &c., &c. Compiled, composed or arranged by W. T. Freemantle. Book 2.

It is difficult to do more with regard to this second book of Kyries than repeat what was said in these columns with regard to the first at the time of its appearance. The Responses to the Commandments offer so little scope to the composer that it is by no means surprising that there should be a considerable family likeness between most of the twenty numbers which this book contains. In one respect the present issue is an improvement on its predecessor. The only arrangement in it is one to which no objection can be made on the score of inappropriateness, as it is from the "Kyrie" of Weber's Mass in E flat. We confess to not liking these mutilated excerpts at all; but at least the present stands on a different footing from the "Rosamunde" extract to which we took exception on a former occasion. It is only needful to add that the composers of the twenty Kyries in the present book are Messrs. J. Varley Roberts, A. S. Cooper, E. C. Owston, Dr. Bennett Gilbert, A. C. Bartrum, E. L. Hime, G. E. Blunden, Scotson Clark, Walter Macfarren, T. Pettit, Dr. Chard, Jesse Minns, Charles Salaman, W. H. Cummings, John Travers, Dr. C. S. Heap, and the editor. Though there are one or two settings which are not much to our taste, the collection as a whole is a very good one.

I heard the voice of Jesus say. Sacred Song. Words by Horatius Bonar, D.D.

A Song of Praise. Words by the Rev. W. Pennefather. Composed by Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew.

The first of these songs is something more than a mere musicianlike setting of the text; for in addition to the fidelity of colouring which might reasonably be expected from so accomplished an artist, there is a coherence of design in the composition which makes it stand quite apart from the so-called "sacred" songs of the day. The accompaniment has but little independent character; but the appropriately beautiful harmonies which move with the voice will charm all musical ears. In a foot-note on the first-page of the second song, Mrs. Bartholomew says: "Should anyone think this pianoforte part is too florid for a sacred song, the composer suggests that the stupendous Prayer, 'Vater, Ich rufe Dich,' of Weber, with its demisemiquaver accompaniment, be referred to." We scarcely think it a good principle for a composer to refer to precedents for any novelty of design which may be found in her work. If she believe it to be good, that is sufficient, and she should stand or fall by the result. In the present case, though we certainly think the voice-part somewhat crushed under the weight of the accompaniment, there is no patchiness in the effect; and if a good pianist be united with the vocalist, the song cannot fail to be successful.

The Recall. Song. The words by Barry Cornwall. Composed by C. A. Macirone.

A very charming song written by an artist for artists; for although it is true that no formidable vocal or instrumental difficulties will be encountered in its performance, the poetical feeling which pervades it is by no means a characteristic of the ordinary drawing-room singer. The theme, in A minor—from which key indeed the song rarely wanders—is extremely sympathetic with the words; and the independent pianoforte part gives an importance to the composition which will ensure it a cordial welcome amongst really musical listeners. At the transition into the tonic major, the sustaining of the F sharp in the voice part, against the harmony of A major, in its second inversion, has a peculiar effect, and if harshly given will defeat the composer's intention, even when it drops to E; but, as we have already said, the composition is not designed for tyros, and the fact of its being dedicated to and sung by Madame Clara Novello, is a proof of the estimation in which it is held by those competent to judge. We should much like to hear this song at a concert in which first-class vocal pieces only are admitted.

The Sun and the Flower. Song. Poetry by Richard Yates Sturges. Music by Stephen S. Stratton.

There is much musical feeling in this song; but it disappoints us in parts from what seems a want of coherence in the design. We like the opening theme, and the point in the accompaniment; but scarcely know what to make of it when it wanders into G minor at page 3, and the first vocal phrase (clearly in that key) is harmonised with the triad on G, chord of the sixth on F natural, and triad of E flat. We will presume that the A, in the eleventh bar of page 2, should be flat in the left-hand part; but there are some other harmonies which we cannot reconcile ourselves to.

Stanley Lucas, Weber and Co.

When Twilight Dews. Trio, for Alto, Tenor and Bass. Composed by Stephen Jarvis.

The name of this composer is new to us, but he writes melodiously, and generally harmonises well. Smoothly sung, and without accompaniment, we think the Trio would be effective. In justification of our qualified remark respecting the harmony, we may instance the second note in the sixth bar, E, which is accompanied with a bare fourth and octave: musical ears can scarcely satisfactorily dispense with the leading-note, C♯.

Blackie and Son.

A Trip to Music-Land. A Fairy Tale. Forming an Allegorical and Pictorial Exposition of the Elements of Music. By Emma L. Shedlock. With twenty full-page illustrations, by J. King James.

It may be accepted as an axiom that a child who receives no pleasure from its lessons will receive no lessons from its pleasure; and although good little scholars may be found who accept with readiness "instructive toys," we much question whether they would not gain more solid knowledge and be infinitely happier if the work and the play were separated. Miss Shedlock thinks differently, and has constructed a Fairy Tale by means of which young people are presumed to acquire a clear idea of the elements of music. Now if our authoress had believed with us that the rudiments of music can be so carefully and agreeably taught to a child that it longs for the time when the teacher arrives, she would probably never have written this book; but she has to make out her case, and accordingly the story opens in a room where sits a little girl doomed to spend all her half-holidays practising "scales and five-finger exercises," whilst her more fortunate brothers are enjoying themselves by playing croquet on the lawn. Those who imagine that such cruelty as this is a necessary portion of musical education will of course be glad to find that all the knowledge obtained by such means can be acquired by merely reading a fairy tale; but persons who agree with us that such teachers should be replaced by others with more human feelings, whilst ignoring the necessity of criticising Miss Shedlock's book as a means of instructing, will warmly welcome it as a means of amusement. Viewed then solely as an ingeniously constructed allegorical fairy tale, we are disposed to accord the sincerest praise to the authoress, and can promise that a "Trip to Music-Land," undertaken merely as a holiday, will be an exceedingly agreeable one. There is a large amount of literary merit displayed in the conduct of the story. The character of King Harmony, who, like many other monarchs, yields to reforms only when the pressure from without becomes almost too formidable to resist, is most ably drawn. The various personages, too, who arrive at the Court, each armed with a mission in furtherance of the cause of the art, are sketched with a delicacy in the highest degree to be commended, where the temptation to caricature was so difficult to resist. The illustrations, by Mr. J. King James, are humorous, without being coarse, and add materially to the attraction of the volume. We can conscientiously recommend the book as a most appropriate music-prize to be read during the hours of recreation.

The Musical Directory, Annual and Almanack for 1876.

The Professor's Pocket Book, and Daily and Hourly Engagement Diary for 1876. Published under the immediate direction of Sir Julius Benedict.

The steady improvement in every portion of the "Musical Directory" is a proof that the publishers are earnest in their endeavour, not only to gain subscribers, but to keep them; and in this, the twenty-fourth issue of the work, there is but little alteration that we would suggest. Such little however, in the interest of the undertaking, we frankly state. Certainly events of importance to the musician in the Almanac have gradually replaced those which he cares nothing about; but why, for example, should the birth of Gottfried Weber (announced in the "Directory" for last year) be taken out in order to inform us that the first of March is "St. David's Day?"

Again, in the article headed "Events of the Past Year," will it not appear strange to persons who believe in music past and present, as well as "future," that the whole paper should be devoted to an account of the production of "Lohengrin"? Assuredly this is one of the "events," but not the only one. The "Professor's Pocket Book" we may again confidently recommend as exceedingly useful both for jotting down engagements and for reference, the principal concerts of the year being carefully recorded throughout.

Praise the Lord, O my Soul. A Festival Anthem for four voices, by Humphrey J. Stark, Mus. Bac., Oxon., and F.C.O.

This is a really good specimen of modern church music, being throughout well written, and in point of ideas above the average of merit. It opens with a bold chorus in C major, full of spirit and well put together, though Mr. Stark has made one little slip in his harmony at the top of the fourth page. The chorus is followed by a very graceful quartett in G, "The Lord is merciful," containing some well-managed modulations, and a decidedly original, but by no means unpleasing close. A short choral recitative for tenors and basses in unison, "He turneth the wilderness into a standing water," leads to the final chorus, "O that men would therefore praise the Lord," which is perhaps on the whole the best portion of the work. The chromatic passages on the last page will require neat and careful singing; but the anthem as a whole is by no means difficult, and can be safely recommended as suitable for choral festivals. It is not only good, but thoroughly pleasing.

Ten Daily Studies, for the Pianoforte. Composed by Carl Krebs.

We can scarcely imagine why, out of ten numbers of these Studies, only two (Nos 6 and 7) are sent to us. The name of Carl Krebs may, however, be accepted as a guarantee that those which we have not seen are as good as those which we have; and we are, therefore, warranted in believing them to be valuable additions to the stock of pianoforte exercises for which we are especially indebted to the German composers. No. 6, in D minor, is for the practice of thirds, and we have also, in the last page, a chromatic passage of sixths, the whole forming an excellent study for the acquisition of clear articulation. No. 7, in the same key, is for crossing the hands. The fingering is quite modern, a free use being made of the thumb upon the black keys—a method in which we cordially agree. Provided pianists will justify the title of these compositions by making them "daily" Studies, there can be little doubt that they will prove highly beneficial.

Six Songs. Composed by Frank Mori.

1. Hark! the vesper hymn. Poetry by T. Moore.
2. Now sleeps the crimson petal. Poetry by Alfred Tennyson.
3. My soul is an enchanted boat. Poetry by P. B. Shelley.
4. A Reverie. Poetry by Leigh Hunt.
5. The Indian Chieftain's Daughter. Poetry by G. P. Morris.
6. The Deceived. Poetry by Shakspeare.

These songs, although unequal in merit, will be found extremely melodious, vocal, and harmonized throughout with the skill of a practised musician. In No. 1 the symphony, with the dominant and key-note pedals, well expresses the subject of the song. The choral accompaniment to the soprano solo is sufficiently simple to be sung by amateur vocalists; and in the principal part, even, there are no difficulties to overcome. The dying off of the melody at the conclusion is highly effective. No. 2 is a graceful serenade; but No. 3 has a character in the accompaniment which lifts it above the ordinary ballad. The swinging rhythm is carefully preserved, and Shelley's poetry has been studied with commendable care. We especially admire the phrase commencing "And thine doth like an angel sit;" and the repetition of the lines, "I float down around," at the end, is a point worthy of mention. No. 4, with a lengthy prelude, is somewhat more conventional; but there is dramatic feeling in No. 5, although we have perhaps too much of mere word-painting. No. 6 may be safely recommended to all who wish for an unpretending song, quietly but appropriately accompanied. It is a setting of Shakspeare's well-known words, "Take, oh take those lips away;" and is worthy to rank amongst the many musical illustrations of these verses which have from time to time come before us.

James F. Pettit.

Simple Studies for the Pianoforte. Introductory Exercises. Composed by William H. Hunt.

We have already made favourable mention of the two numbers of these "Simple Studies" (Nos. 2 and 3), which were forwarded to us; and now that we have all that are published before us, we are inclined to accord even more praise to Mr. Hunt's efforts than we could possibly do when only a portion of his plan was submitted for review. In No. 1, in addition to the very excellent exercises for beginners, some remarks on counting time are given, which have the double merit of being true, and clearly expressed. We wish that all teachers would inculcate the notion that what is absurdly termed "Compound" time is nothing but moving in divisions of three, and, therefore, should be called "triplet time." It would be good also if the equally ridiculous words "Common Time" were banished from Instruction Books, and it is to the credit of Mr. Hunt that he utterly ignores any such name. All the "Studies" prove that the author is working on a definite system; and although, as we have said in our former notice, we do not quite agree with some of the fingering, this, of course, must merely be accepted as an opinion, and we know how differently masters think upon this matter. We especially admire the "Gavotte," and the "Air with variations," the latter indeed being a capital little piece for the practice of children.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

RIGHT OF REPRESENTATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Will you allow me to draw the attention of the musical profession to the following case? On the 19th November last I gave a concert here, when Miss Clelland was one of my artists. Among the songs she selected was "My long hair is braided," from Wallace's Amber Witch. On Friday, December 31st, I received a letter from the "Authors', Composers', and Artists' Copyright and Performing-right Protection Office," 8, Colebrooke-row, Islington, in which the writer, Mr. Harry Wall, applied to me for payment of the sum of £2, as statutory penalty incurred by me, for having "caused or permitted" the performance of the above song, "without permission in writing first had and obtained." I was requested to furnish a "satisfactory reply" on or before the following day, otherwise the matter would be placed in the solicitor's hands. I was referred to a report of a case heard at the Clerkenwell County Court on November 25th, when the proprietor of the Raglan Music Hall was fined £4 and costs for having "innocently, ignorantly, and unknowingly" committed a similar offence, by permitting two airs from Maritana to be performed. In reply to some questions, I had a letter from Mr. Wall on Monday evening, January 3rd, in which I was told that "nothing less than the full penalty would be taken," and that a "satisfactory reply" must be forthcoming on Tuesday, the 4th instant, but, as I wrote to say that I had consulted a solicitor, the day of grace was extended to Thursday.

I must add here that the penalty was demanded under the statutes 3rd and 4th William IV., cap. 15, secs. 1 and 2, which protect the proprietor of the right of representation of an opera or "any part thereof" in any "place of dramatic entertainment." The 5th and 6th Victoria, cap. 45, secs. 20 and 21, extend the protection to any "musical composition." In the case of the Raglan Music Hall, where Mr. Wall obtained a verdict for the amount he claimed, it was proved that though not so licensed, the Hall had, by the nature of the performances on the night in question, been rendered a "place of dramatic entertainment" for the time being. As my concert was simply a miscellaneous one in an ordinary concert-room, I am advised that it does not come under the Act. To avoid trouble, however, I authorised a legal friend in London to pay the fine on being satisfied as to Mr. Wall's title to the right he claims. As I have heard nothing since, I am unable to give the issue of the case. In the meantime, as a matter of precaution, I would advise all concert-givers to leave out Wallace's name from their programmes.

Yours faithfully,

T. Backhouse.

Bideford, Devon, Jan. 20.

P.S.—As the offence is the same whether done knowingly or not, and as the Act does not require notice to be given of any restrictions, how are we to be safe in future?

WORDS VERSUS MUSIC.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Will you allow me to protest against a very common practice with modern church composers, I mean, that of not copying exactly the words of the Bible. The musically beautiful offertory sentences by Mr. Calkin in your January number are marred by the omission of the words "from him" in one sentence, and "Man, and" in the other. As another instance take Dr. Hiles' Anthem, "The Lord is my Light." Why should the first verse of Psalm xxvii. with its grand rhythm be hacked to pieces as is there done? Mr. Calkin's Anthem, "Behold, now praise [ye] the Lord," and Dr. Gauntlett's "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace," furnish other instances.

And while I am protesting, may I protest against another common habit, that of stringing together isolated sentences, from all parts of the Bible, which have no mutual connection. Even where no violation is done to their original meaning, the effect is "patchy" (to coin a word), though very often the result is a great deal worse than this. For instance, in Professor G. A. Macfarren's Anthem, "God said, Behold, I have given you every herb," this sentence, narrating the gift of the fruits of the earth to unfallen man, is joined to a part of the removal of the curse after the Flood; and their collocation, seeing they are not contrasted but united by the music, is anything but pleasant to those who think of the context of the words as well as the form of the music. But perhaps one of the most flagrant instances of the kind is to be found in the same composer's "John the Baptist." No. 13 of that Oratorio is a chorus compiled from the following sources:—1, The Queen-Mother's address to Belshazzar (Daniel, v. 10); 2, One of David's Psalms in a time of deep affliction (Psalm cxxxii. 19); and 3, The grand Processional Hymn of the Israelites in the wilderness; and this strange medley is transformed into the utterance of a set of licentious nobles at a drinking bout and ballet-dancing addressed to a king like Herod Antipas. The effect of using the two last extracts of the three (words addressed to God Almighty under the most solemn circumstances) in such a relation is painful in the extreme. In the final chorus, too, of the same Oratorio, the words "He was a burning and a shining light" (John, v. 35), which do refer to John the Baptist, are joined to the words, "A light shining in a dark place," &c. (2 Peter, i. 19), which refer to quite another subject. So again in Mr. Sullivan's "Light of the World," at No. 19 occur the words, "Weep ye not for the dead, neither bemoan him, and sorrow not even as others which have no hope," where S. Paul's soothing exhortation to Christian mourners is tacked on to a fragment of the Prophet Jeremiah's terrible threat of impending captivity and exile—of times when it would be better to die than live—to the utter discomfort of hearers who mentally associate the words with their respective contexts.

If words are to be the mere vehicle for musical sounds, it would be better if composers did not go to the Bible for them. If music is to be a teaching power in religion as well as art, surely it ought not to teach false doctrine or suggest incongruous thoughts. We can hardly expect musicians to be also deep theologians or expert Biblical scholars, but they should be careful in their selection and use of sacred words, with which our tenderest associations and best feelings are deeply interwoven.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

Bangor.—The Choral Society gave a performance of Haydn's Creation on the 28th December, and of Handel's Messiah on the 29th, before crowded and appreciative audiences. The principal vocalists were Madame Billinie Porter, Miss Wynne Jones, Mr. J. Verney Binns, and Mr. Hudson Lister. The choruses were admirably given; and great credit is due to the conductor, Mr. Wm. Williams. Mr. E. W. Thomas presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. Wm. Williams, jun., at the harmonium.

Brighton.—On December 31st, Messrs. J. B. Cramer and Co. gave a performance of Handel's Messiah, for the benefit of the local charities. Mr. Frederick Kingsbury was the conductor, and the principal vocalists were Madame Edith Wynne, Madame Patey, Messrs. Edward Lloyd and Lewis Thomas.——At the Aquarium there have been daily Concerts, under the direction of Mr. Reyloff, but, as an additional attraction, on New Year's Day recitals of Maritana and Il Trovatore were given, the principal parts being sustained by Madame A. Smythe, Madame Osborne Williams, Mr. George Perren, and Mr. Geo. Fox. On the 5th and 6th ult., a choir, under the direction of Mr. Worsley Staniforth, gave popular glees and madrigals, and Haydn's Toy Symphony had a prominent place in the programmes. On the 8th, a miscellaneous Concert was given by Madame Edna Hall, Miss Butterworth, Mr. Henry Guy, and Signor Federici. On the 15th Madame Edith Wynne was the vocalist.——On Tuesday, the 25th ult., Miss Alice S. Burrett, the young Australian pianist, gave a most successful Concert in the Music Room of the Pavilion. She was assisted, amongst others, by Mr. Lindsay Sloper, Mr. Edouard de Paris, Mr. Frank d'Alquen, and Miss Amy Sedgwick, who gave a couple of readings. Miss Burrett's performances appeared to give great satisfaction to a large and critical audience.

Brisbane.—At the concert given by the Musical Union on the 2nd November, the works chosen were Barnett's Ancient Mariner and the Men of Merrie Sherwood. In the former work Mrs. Wilkie was highly effective in the soprano solos. The choruses were exceedingly well sung, and the accompaniments, by the orchestra, rendered in a most satisfactory manner. Madame Mallalieu presided at the pianoforte.

Bristol.—On Friday, the 7th ult., an Evening Concert was given at the Colston Hall by Mr. James C. Daniel. The artists included Madame Campobello-Sinico, Mdlle. Maria Mariani, Madame Demeric-Lablache, Signor Urio, Signor Monari Rocca, and Signor Campobello as vocalists; Mons. Claude Jaquinot, solo violin; and Signor Romano, conductor. The concert was in every respect a success.——Mr. A. Simmons' Annual Concert took place at St. Joseph's Hall, on the 25th ult. The programme comprised solos, choruses, trios, &c., interspersed with which were several organ solos by Mr. Simmons, and violin solos by Mr. George Chapman. The performance opened with the "Chough and Crow," well rendered by Mrs.

Barker, Miss Hibbins, and Mr. Higgs. Mr. A. J. Searle, in "Once again," and "Let me like a soldier fall," Miss Annie Poole in Ganz's "The Nightingale's trill" and "The Cantineer," and Mrs. R. Barker in "Did'st thou but know" and "Savourneen Deelish," were all highly successful. Mr. Simmons played Hewlett's "Offertoire," and a Scotch march, with imitation of bagpipes, in a way that thoroughly evinced his skill as an organist, and Mr. George Chapman won much applause for his violin solo, "Theme con varié." Several buffo songs by Messrs. Hare, Higgs, and O'Donnel; the song, "Lo, here the gentle lark," by Miss F. Clements, and a selection of Moore's Irish Melodies, sung by a carefully trained chorus of fifty voices, accompanied by the organ, completed the entertainment.

BUXTON.—The ceremony of laying the foundation stone of a new Concert Hall in connection with the Pavilion and grounds belonging to the Buxton Improvement Company, took place on the 30th Dec., in the presence of a large and influential assemblage. The luncheon, given in the Central Hall of the Pavilion, was presided over by Dr. Robertson, the Chairman of the Company, and in proposing the health of Mr. Julian Adams and the excellent bands of the Company, the highest compliments were paid to the indefatigable conductor. Mr. Adams, in responding, pointed out that Buxton had made great progress during the past few years, and urged the advisability of augmenting the numbers of the bands.

CHRISTCHURCH, NEW ZEALAND.—The Concert of the Misses Taylor at the Odd-Fellows' Hall, on the 14th Oct. last, was attended by an appreciative audience. The concertina performance of Miss Taylor, and the singing of Miss Ada S. Taylor, were the chief attractions of the evening, the flexibility of voice and clearness of articulation displayed by the latter in the three songs allotted to her eliciting well-deserved applause. The concert-givers were assisted by several talented artists, and the performance was in every respect highly satisfactory.

CLIFTON.—The Ladies' Night of the Bristol Madrigal Society took place on the 13th ult., and was well worthy of the high reputation the Society has obtained. The programme contained an excellent selection of madrigals and part-songs. The choir consisted of 102 voices, and the Conductor was, as usual, Mr. D. Rootham.

DERBY.—On Tuesday, the 28th December, the annual performance of the Messiah was given by the Choral Union, conducted by Mr. Woodward. The majority of the choruses were rendered with power and unity of effect, especially "Glory to God," "Lift up your heads," "Worthy is the lamb," "Let us break their bonds," and the "Hallelujah." Mr. Tallis Trimnell presided at the organ. The solos were well sung by Miss Carina Clelland, Miss Alice Fairman, Mr. Bywater, and Mr. Robert Hilton.

EALING.—The Choral Association gave its first concert of the season on Monday evening, the 10th ult, when Cowen's "Rose Maiden" was most successfully performed. The solos were sung by Miss Matilda Scott, Miss Dones, Mr. Stedman, and Mr. Geo. Fox, all of whom were warmly appreciated. This being the second performance, the choir was familiar with the music, and sang with capital effect. The second part of the concert consisted of a good selection of ballads and part-songs; among the latter we may particularise a well-written quartett by Mr. Geo. Fox, "How dear to me the hour." The Rev. Julius Summerhayes conducted carefully, and the accompaniments were artistically played by Mr. Henry Parker.

EDINBURGH.—Professor Oakeley gave an organ recital to a large number of students in the Music Class-room on the 13th ult. The excellently drawn-up and illustrated programme, with the judicious annotations and illustrations, gave an additional interest to the works performed. An historical feature was introduced by the age in which the different composers flourished being appended to their names. Bach's Prelude and Fugue, with which the recital began, were most skilfully played and loudly applauded; and the brilliant rendering of the concluding variation in Haydn's Andante drew forth a hearty (though declined) encore. Hummel's Romanza, from Op. 108, evoked such an irresistible storm of applause that the piece was repeated.

ERITH.—On Monday evening, the 24th ult., Mr. Lemaire gave his Annual Concert at the Public Hall. The artists were Miss Annie Sinclair, Madame Osborne Williams, Mr. Stedman, Mr. Thurley Beale, and Mr. Michael Watson. A well-selected programme was very successfully performed, and each of the singers favoured with encores by an audience evidently highly gratified.

GIRLINGTON, BRADFORD.—On Tuesday evening, the 4th ult., a Concert was given in the Templars' Hall by Mr. A. Padfield, assisted by Miss Wright, Miss Hodgson, Mr. Mellor, Mr. D. Sloane, and a chorus of 30 voices. The first part of the Concert consisted of sacred, and the second part of secular music; a great feature of the evening being the excellent pianoforte playing of Mr. J. H. Rooks, of Richmond, who performed selections from Bach and Sir Sterndale Bennett. The vocal portions were effectively given, the part-singing being especially good. Mr. Padfield conducted, and the accompaniments were played by Mr. Widdop and Mr. Rooks on the pianoforte and harmonium respectively.

HALSTEAD.—The Musical Society gave the first Concert of the season on the 13th ult. The programme consisted of Handel's "The king shall rejoice," Mendelssohn's 13th Psalm, Gounod's "O sing to God," and a miscellaneous selection. The principal vocalists were Miss M. Lyne, Miss Ada Garée, and the Rev. H. Stewart, who also conducted the concert. Mr. W. Nicholson presided at the pianoforte.

HECKMONDWIKE.—On Thursday, the 6th ult., E. H. Turpin, Esq., of St. George's, Bloomsbury, gave a Recital on the new organ erected by Mr. Alfred Kirkland, of Wakefield, in the Moravian Chapel. The pieces were played in a masterly style, the organist bringing out the fine qualities of the instrument in a manner which was fully appreciated by the audience. Addresses were given by the resident and neighbouring ministers. Henry Oates, Esq., was in the chair.

HEMEL HEMPSTEAD.—On Tuesday evening, the 11th ult., Mr. A. J. Parsons gave his Annual Concert. The artists were Miss Marie Duval, Miss Lucie Hann, Mr. Stedman, and Mr. Thurley Beale. There was a good and varied selection of music, which was well performed to a highly appreciative audience. Mr. Parsons contributed a pianoforte solo, which was very favourably received.

HULL.—On Thursday evening, the 13th ult., Miss Bolingbroke, of this town, and Parepa-Rosa scholar at the Royal Academy of Music, gave her fourth Annual Concert at the Artillery Barracks. The programme was miscellaneous, and included many instrumental solos. Miss Bolingbroke took part in a trio, duet and quartett, and also sang a ballad entitled, "O, that we two were maying," which was encored. Mr. Henry Guy was encored in both his solos. Miss Marie Duval was also very successful; and the same may be said of Mr. Wadmore. The clarionet solos by Mr. Lazarus were finely played; Miss Annie Martin contributed a solo on the pianoforte, and Mr. Hudson, an amateur, performed a violoncello solo. Mr. Arthur Jackson, Professor R.A.M., conducted, and assisted Miss Martin with the accompaniments.

LAUGHTON.—The Choral Society gave the first Concert of the season on the 4th ult., before a large audience. The members were assisted by Mr. J. H. Eyre, Choirmaster of Doncaster Parish Church, and by Masters Thornsby and Browne, from the same choir. The concert was most successful, the part-singing being very good, and reflecting great credit on the conductor, Mr. Clarkson. Mrs. Hartley presided at the pianoforte.

LINCOLN.—The members of the Amateur Vocal Society, assisted by several eminent artists, gave a Concert in the Assembly Rooms on Thursday evening, the 30th December. The works selected for performance were J. F. Barnett's Cantata, Paradise and the Peri, and Haydn's Third or "Imperial" Mass. The principal vocalists were Miss Jessie Royd (soprano), Madame Osborne Williams (contralto), Mr. Edward Dunkerton (tenor), and Mr. Robert Hilton (bass). Mrs. Runton presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. W. Lawrence, jun., at the harmonium. Mr. F. Marshall Ward conducted.

MENAI BRIDGE.—A Concert, in aid of the National Schools, was held on Friday, the 7th ult., under the presidency of Lord Clarence Paget. The attendance was very numerous. Among the amateurs who acquitted themselves most creditably were Lord Clarence Paget, the Misses Paget, Miss Wynne Jones, Miss Murdock, Mrs. White Griffith, Mrs. Jeffers, Mr. Ellis, and Mr. Gordon Thomas. The music included selections from the works of Mendelssohn, Chopin, Brahms, Brinley Richards, &c. Mr. Richards's national hymn, "God bless the Prince of Wales," having been most effectively rendered by the audience, the vicar proposed, in appropriate terms, a vote of thanks to Lord Clarence Paget, and to all the ladies and gentlemen who had so kindly rendered assistance. His lordship, in returning thanks, alluded particularly to Mr. Brinley Richards, who had attended specially, and who was always so ready to render his professional services gratuitously to every deserving object.

MONTREAL, CANADA.—A Concert of sacred music, for the benefit of the Protestant Indians of Oka (a small village on the Ottawa), was given in the Wesleyan Methodist Church, St. James's-street, on the 20th December. The choral portion of the programme included a selection from Mozart's Twelfth Mass, by the choir of the church. A bass song, "I've gathered them in," by Weiss, was given by Mr. Washburne with taste and feeling. Mr. Millar sang "How willing my paternal love," Handel, with good effect. Mr. Edward Hilton, organist of the church, presided with great ability, and played several voluntaries in a masterly style. The large building was filled to overflowing, upwards of 2,000 persons being present, including a number of the Indians in their gay native costume, the whole presenting a wonderfully imposing scene. The proceeds of the concert amounted to nearly 2,000 dols. The concert closed by the immense audience singing "God save the Queen."

NEWARK.—The first Concert of the Vocal Society was given on the 4th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. Reay, organist of the parish church. Cowen's Cantata, the Rose Maiden, was the work selected for the first part of the programme, the second being miscellaneous. The solos were effectively rendered by Mrs. Daglish, Miss Chatterton, Mr. G. Sheppard, Mr. Ward, and Mr. Greenwood. Mr. H. P. Dickenson presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. Reay at the harmonium.

NEWMARKET.—On Thursday afternoon, the 6th ult., Mr. W. F. W. Jackson gave his second Organ Recital at St. Mary's Church, which was attended by many of the principal inhabitants. The programme was chiefly composed of classical pieces, all of which were well performed. The recital was repeated on the following evening, to enable persons engaged in business to attend.

NORTHAMPTON.—The Choral Society gave a performance of the Messiah, at the Corn Exchange, on Thursday evening, the 6th ult. The Rev. C. J. Langley presided at the organ, and Mr. C. McKorkell conducted. The solo vocalists were Miss Larkcom, Miss Helen Arnim, and Mr. Alfred Kenningham.

PENISTONE.—The twelfth series of Annual Parochial Gatherings was held in the National School-Rooms on December 28th and 29th. On the latter day a concert was given at which the Sheffield Orpheus Quartett, Mrs. House, and Messrs. Berresford, Wilson, and Makin, were the vocalists engaged. Miss Widdowson accompanied, and in her pianoforte solos was well received. During the interval, and at the conclusion of the concert, the Penistone hand-bell ringers contributed materially to the pleasures of the evening.

PRESTON, LANCASHIRE.—On the 27th December, the Choral Society gave a performance of the Messiah in the Guildhall. The solo vocalists were Miss Katherine Poyntz, Miss Palmer, Mr. Henry Guy, and Mr. J. L. Wadmore. Signor Risegari led, Mr. Greaves presided at the organ, and Mr. Yates conducted. Mr. Joseph Wood played the trumpet obbligato to "The trumpet shall sound." The solos were well rendered and the choruses given with great precision.

RICHMOND.—Haydn's Creation was performed at the Star and Garter Hotel on the 10th ult. before a large audience. Madame Lemmens-Sherrington gained frequent marks of approval for her highly finished singing, especially in "The marvellous work" and "With verdure clad." Mr. A. L. Fryer sang the tenor music with great taste, receiving well-merited applause for his delivery of "In native worth." Signor Foli met with hearty applause for his admirable rendering of "Rolling in foaming billows," "Now heaven in fullest glory," &c. The choruses were very fairly given. Mr. W. Carter conducted, and Mr. Bending presided at the pianoforte.

ROSS.—On Thursday evening, the 6th ult., the members of the Vocal Union, in conjunction with Miss Annie Francis (soprano), Mr. Videon Harding (tenor), and Mr. Charlesworth (baritone), gave a concert in the Corn Exchange. The first part of the programme consisted of an Ode entitled "Christmas," written by W. T. S. Hewett, Esq., and set to music by J. Squire, Esq. At the conclusion of the Ode hearty applause greeted composer and performers. After a miscellaneous selection, Mr. Edwin Aspa's Cantata, The Villagers, brought the concert to a successful termination.

SHANKLIN, ISLE OF WIGHT.—On Tuesday, the 11th ult., a Concert was given in the new School-Room adjoining the Church of S. Saviour-on-the-Cliff, by the Choir and Members of the S. Saviour's Musical Association, numbering upwards of 50 voices. Miss Anson accompanied, and Mr. F. G. Baker, the organist and choirmaster, conducted. The room was crowded, and the concert a great success.

SHEFFIELD.—On Christmas Day the Choral Society gave the Messiah, in the Music Hall, Surrey-street, on which occasion Miss Smythe (soprano), Miss Edith Clelland (contralto), Mr. Guy (tenor), and Mr. Dodds (bass), were the principal singers. Mr. J. C. Walker conducted. Much praise is due to the members, for the manner in which the choruses were given. Mr. Guy sang with his usual ability. Mr. J. W. Phillips presided at the organ; Herr Scholhaumer was leader of the band, and Mr. Robinson trumpeter. On the same day the Messiah was given in the Albert Hall; vocalists, Madame Helena Walker, Miss Bolingbroke, Mr. Kenningham, and Mr. Brandon. Mr. S. Hadfield conducted, and Mr. Kirk presided at the organ.

STAFFORD.—On Sunday, the 2nd ult., the new choir of Christ Church appeared for the first time in surplices. The organist, Mr. W. A. Marson, has successfully trained a very excellent choir of 24 men and boys, and the result is warmly appreciated by a large majority of the congregation. A new hymn book has been substituted for the old one of Kemble's, and the services now are conducted in a very praiseworthy manner.

WENTWORTH.—The annual Soirée of the Mechanics' Institute was held on the 29th December, when an excellent selection of music was performed in an admirable manner. The vocalists were Miss Jenny Smith, Miss Mellor, Mr. Sedgwick, and Mr. J. H. Eyre, Choirmaster of the Doncaster Choral Union. Miss Gertie Eyre made a most successful début as solo pianist.

WORKINGTON.—A performance of the Messiah was given at the Assembly Rooms on Monday evening, December 27th. The principal vocalists were, Miss Carina Clelland (soprano), Miss Edith Clelland (contralto), Mr. Brown, of Carlisle (tenor), and Mr. Metcalfe, Carlisle Cathedral (bass). Mr. Metcalfe, jun., and Mr. Greaves accompanied on the pianoforte and harmonium. The band and chorus were composed of the employés of Mr. W. Griffiths, Derwent Tin-plate Works, who conducted the performance. The Oratorio was performed in a highly creditable manner. An Eisteddfod was held in the early part of the day, when prizes were given for singing, instrumental playing, reciting, and reading. Mr. Metcalfe and Mr. Thompson were the adjudicators.

WOODFORD.—A successful performance of the Messiah was given at the Lecture Hall, on the 20th ult. The solos were well sustained by Miss Smellie (soprano), Misses Carson and Gadsden (contralto), Messrs. A. E. Hooper and Nicoll (tenor), and Messrs. A TRIP TO MUSIC-LAND: a Fairy Tale, forming an Allegorical and Pictorial Exposition of the Elements of Music. By EMMA L. SHEDLOCK. Illustrated by 20 full-page Pictures of a highly amusing character, from designs by J. King James.

"Miss Shedlock's charming book, with its admirable illustrations."—Figaro.

"A great novelty, and written in a clever and amusing style. It cannot be praised too much."—Court Journal.

New Octavo Edition.

BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS. Edited and Fingered by AGNES ZIMMERMANN. Paper Covers, 5s.; Cloth, gilt, 7s. 6d.

"Of all the small editions yet issued we must certainly give the palm to that before us, which is a very careful reprint of the full-size publication edited by Miss Agnes Zimmermann, of which we spoke in the highest terms when it first appeared a year or two since. This volume is not only the best engraved, printed, and bound that we have seen—it is far and away the most carefully edited; so that, look where we will, and with whatsoever keenness we may, it is imposible to discover a mistake. The accomplished editress—one of the most distinguished of the later pupils of the Royal Academy of Music—has evinced sound judgment in her treatment of questionable matters, and has earned the gratitude of future art-students by the patient care she has bestowed upon the fingering of this mass of music—no light task when its extent and (in some instances) complicated character are borne in mind; and, by her interpolated marks of phrasing, she has done much towards rendering the least intelligible of Beethoven's intricacies clear and appreciable. All honour, then, to Miss Zimmermann, who has accomplished her difficult and responsible duty to Beethoven's memory, and to the public in a manner above all praise, and has presented to the world one of the greatest products of the human mind with a completeness and thoroughness worthy its immortal author."—The Queen, Oct. 15.

In publishing the above, Chappell and Co. feel they are supplying a want long felt by Amateur Organists, as this work removes the difficulty amateurs experience in performing Handel's songs from the scores. Being published in three lines, the solo parts and accompaniments are easily and effectively distributed.

The words of each song being printed upon the top line will be found of great service to the performer in giving proper expression to the songs.

NEW WORK FOR SINGING CLASSES.

CHAPPELL'S PENNY OPERATIC PART-SONGS.

For Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass.

The present collection of Part-Songs is entirely new, being selected and adapted from the most striking and popular Choruses in the Favourite Foreign Operas. The Arrangement is purely Vocal, such Choruses only being chosen as can be sung without the aid of an Instrumental Accompaniment. TREASURER.

J. W. BARNES, Esq., Bank, Durham.

By the lamented death of the Rev. Dr. DYKES, late Vicar of St. Oswald's, Durham, Minor Canon, and formerly Precentor of Durham, his widow and five of his six children (four daughters and a boy of 12) have been left in very straitened circumstances, their entire income not exceeding £40 a year. Dr. Dykes endeavoured more than once to insure his life, but was never able to obtain the necessary medical certificates. The bringing up of a large family, the claims of an extensive town parish, and calls of a private nature, prevented his effecting any savings out of his annual income.

The nucleus of a committee has accordingly been formed for the purpose of collecting a Memorial Fund, a small portion of which it is proposed to expend in placing a simple stone over his grave in St. Oswald's Churchyard. It is the intention of the Committee to invest the remainder in trust for the permanent benefit of his widow and family.

The Bishop of Durham has expressed his sympathy with the movement, and has already offered a handsome subscription.

The Committee need hardly say how much Dr. DYKES was respected and beloved by all who knew him, and especially by those who, whether as parishioners or as friends, were in a position to estimate justly the devotion of his life, and the gentleness and beauty of his character. But they feel that it is as a composer of Church music, and particularly of hymn tunes, that his name is most widely known; and it is on this that they mainly rest their claim in appealing to the general public for support. Indeed it may be said, without injustice to other composers, that it is to his original mode of treating hymnody that the present wonderful revival of congregational singing is greatly due. The very extensive circulation of "Hymns Ancient and Modern," of which Dr. DYKES was joint editor, must have made his gracefully conceived tunes familiar to thousands who, they believe, would gladly contribute to this fund, in thankful memory of one whose compositions have often attuned their hearts to praise and devotion, both "secretly among the faithful and in the congregation."

Subscriptions may be paid to the Treasurer, J. W. Barnes, Esq., Bank, Durham, or to any of the Secretaries.

S. ANNE'S, SOHO.—There are a few VACANCIES in the Voluntary Choir at this Church for TENOR and BASS VOICES. Application should be made to the Secretary after either of the Services on Sunday.

W. HATTERSLEY & CO.'S CELEBRATED ORGAN-TONED HARMONIUMS, which for Durability, Sweetness of Tone, and Rapidity of Touch, are unequalled by any other maker.

These splendid instruments are manufactured only by W. Hattersley & Co., with improved sound board, in double veneered cases, and from well-seasoned material, and have been tried side by side with the best English, American, French, and German Harmoniums, and have been pronounced to be far better both in quality of tone, variety in the stops, repetition in touch, and predominance of the treble over the bass. The large instruments, with double action, and several other improvements, are nearer to the organ than anything yet made.

W. H. & Co. have now enlarged their Manufactory and increased their hands, so that they may be able to keep up to the demand, which has been so pressing of late.

HANDEL'S CHANDOS ANTHEMS.

BY EBENEZER PROUT, B.A.

THE recent revival, at the Crystal Palace, of Handel's great "Chandos Te Deum" in B flat (noticed in another column) has suggested the thought that probably some account of the music which the great composer wrote for the Duke of Chandos may not be without interest to the readers of this paper; the more so as there are few of Handel's works which are less known to the majority, even of professional musicians, than the so-called "Chandos anthems." The object of the present article is, therefore, to give a few details about the composition of these pieces, and short analytical notes on such points as present special features of interest in connection with them.

The Duke of Chandos, who had been formerly Paymaster-General to Queen Anne's army, had built for himself a magnificent mansion at Cannons, near Edgware, which, with its fittings, is said to have cost £230,000, and where he lived in a style of splendour suitable to his rank and fortune. He had built a private chapel, and here he had not only a choir, but a small orchestra. His first music-director was Dr. Pepusch; but, in the year 1717—the exact date appears to be unknown,—the post was offered to, and accepted by, Handel. To this circumstance we are probably indebted for much of his subsequent greatness as an oratorio writer.

Up to this time, Handel had done comparatively little in choral music. The operas, the composition of which had been his chief employment, seldom contained more than one short chorus, and sometimes none at all; in his two German settings of the Passion music, The Passion according to John (1704), and The Passion of Christ (1716), the choruses, though numerous, are mostly short; and his only important efforts in this direction are to be found in some of his early Latin Church music, written at Rome about 1707, and his Utrecht "Te Deum" and "Jubilate," composed in 1713. Even in the Latin music, especially in the great Psalm "Dixit Dominus," we find unmistakable foreshadowings of his future grandeur; and this is still more the case with the "Te Deum" and "Jubilate;" but it is, in all probability, to his practice in the composition of sacred music, while chapel-master at Cannons, that we owe the subsequent oratorios.

The works written for the Duke of Chandos, between the years 1717 and 1720, were, in all, fourteen in number—eleven anthems, one "Te Deum" (in B flat), one Oratorio (Esther), and the Serenata, Acis and Galatea. The last-named work is too well known to need a word of comment; Esther and the "Te Deum" have also been recently reviewed in these columns; the present notice will, therefore, be confined to the eleven anthems.

It is difficult to fix with accuracy the exact chronological order of these works; but that given by Dr. Chrysander, in the German Handel Society's edition, is, in all probability, reliable. As will be seen presently, there is strong internal evidence for assuming at least its general correctness. The order he gives is as follows:—

(a) Three-part Anthems—
1. "O be joyful in the Lord."
2. "In the Lord put I my trust."
3. "Have mercy upon me, O God."
4. "O sing unto the Lord a new song."
5. "I will magnify Thee, O God."
6. "As pants the hart."

(b) Four-part Anthems—
7. "My song shall be alway."
8. "O come, let us sing unto the Lord."
9. "O praise the Lord with one consent."
10. "Let God arise" (in B flat).

(c) Five-part Anthem—
11 "The Lord is my Light."

Those who are acquainted with Arnold's edition of Handel will see that the above list differs both as to the order of the pieces, and to the works themselves, from that adopted by him. It contains one anthem—the arrangement of the Utrecht "Jubilate" (No 1)—not to be found in his edition, and omits two which he has included among the Chandos anthems, viz., the setting of "Let God arise," in A, and the anthem, "O praise the Lord, ye angels of His," in D. Arnold's omission of the "Jubilate" is not surprising, because his edition of Handel is frequently incomplete. Why the other two anthems cannot be considered as "Chandos anthems" will be seen presently. Moreover, the order adopted by Arnold, in which three, four, and five-part anthems are mixed up promiscuously, seems quite arbitrary; there is, on the contrary, much reason for believing Dr. Chrysander's to be approximately correct.

It would be very interesting to know the exact strength of the Duke's choir and orchestra, but this seems impossible; at least, in Chrysander's "Life of Handel" no information is given on the subject. It appears, however, highly probable that it was at first very small, and that the three-part anthems were the first composed; and this probability is heightened by the fact that they are, on the whole, less mature works than those in four and five parts. Most likely, the Duke, finding he had such a composer for his church, thought it worth while to increase his choir by engaging more men, so as to give Handel two, or even three tenor parts, instead of the one with which at first he had to content himself. On this point, we learn a curious fact from Dr. Chrysander. It was Handel's habit frequently to write in his scores, instead of the class of voice, the name of the singers to whom that particular part was allotted. He had done this with some of the later Chandos anthems, and the names found are those of the principal singers of the Chapel Royal. It thus appears that the Duke increased the strength of his choir, not by engaging new members, but by obtaining the assistance of the King's choristers.

An enquiry of perhaps even more interest, but one in which much is unfortunately left to conjecture, would be the exact strength of the Duke's orchestra. That it was small may be safely assumed from the fact that it had no violas. Nowhere, in any of the music composed for the Duke of Chandos, whether the anthems, the "Te Deums," Esther, or Acis and Galatea, do we find any viola part. It is true, we meet with it in the published scores, both of Esther ("He cometh to end our woes") and Acis and Galatea ("Happy we,") but these were numbers added on later revision of the works; and it is inconceivable that if the Duke's orchestra had contained these instruments, Handel should not have employed them in the larger anthems or the "Te Deum," especially as there are many places in which he has had to leave the accompaniment incomplete for want of them, and he was well acquainted with their use, for we find them even in his first opera, Almira. This fact is conclusive against the including of the Anthem "Let God arise" (Second Version, in A), and "O praise the Lord, ye angels of His," and also of the short "Te Deum," in A, among the Chandos music, since all of these works contain viola parts. They were, in all probability, written some years later for the Chapel Royal.

So far as can be judged from the internal evidence of the score of these works, the wind instruments in the Duke's orchestra appear to have consisted usually of one oboe and one bassoon. The oboe is found in all the anthems without exception; the bassoon (which is occasionally obbligato) in eight out of the eleven. It is at least probable that it was also used in the other three, but that (in accordance with Handel's frequent custom) it in these simply doubled the bass part. It would seem as if the Duke somewhat increased his orchestra when he added to his chorus, as in two of the later anthems ("O come, let us sing" and "The Lord is my light") we find parts for two flutes. The Chandos "Te Deum," in B flat, also contains a part for one flute (in "Vouchsafe, O Lord"); and, as the oboe is subsequently written upon the same stave, it is just possible that the same player did double duty, as is known to have been the case with Bach's orchestra. The same "Te Deum" also contains a part for one trumpet in the chorus "Day by day," this being the only instance of the employment of that instrument in the whole of the Chandos music. Neither horns nor drums are used throughout.

Handel's habit of borrowing from himself is well known. In these anthems, however, we find but little taken from his earlier works; on the other hand, the value he sets upon the music may be inferred from the large use he subsequently made of it in his oratorios. All instances of this, so far as the present writer has noticed them, will be mentioned in the remarks on the separate anthems which will now conclude this article.

1. "O be joyful in the Lord."—This reduction for a three-part chorus and small orchestra of the well-known Utrecht "Jubilate," was published for the first time in 1871 in the German Handel Society's edition of Handel's works, Part 34. The comparison of the two scores is full of interest, especially as regards the alteration in the voice parts. It is impossible, however, to enter into details here on this subject; and they would be unintelligible without the aid of copious quotations. Not a bar of the music is changed, but the whole arrangement of the score is different; and the anthem is here preceded (like all the others, excepting "O praise the Lord with one consent") by an instrumental overture, or "Sonata."

2. "In the Lord put I my trust."—The "Sonata" for orchestra, with which this anthem commences, is in Handel's usual form of an introduction and fugue. The subjects of the fugue in D minor are identical with those of the fugue in F sharp minor, in No. 6 of the first set of the "Suites de Pièces pour le Clavecin." The chief characteristic of this anthem is the massiveness of its choral effects. The first chorus in D minor is very bold in style, and ends with merely a half-cadence on the dominant, leading into the first air for tenor, "God is a constant sure defence," the theme of which was taken from a chamber-duet, "Se tu non lasci amore," and was subsequently used for the duet "O death, where is thy sting?" in the Messiah. Here, as in most of the anthems, the solo music is inferior in interest to the choral portion of the work. Two other very fine choruses in this work should be mentioned—"Behold the wicked bend their bow," and "Snares, fire, and brimstone." The latter is especially remarkable. The opening was borrowed from the chorus, "Alas, they bind Him fast," in the Passion of Christ, and was afterwards used in Deborah as "O blast with thy tremendous brow." The concluding fugue in D minor, though thoroughly good church music, is not specially striking.

3. "Have mercy upon me, O God."—I am inclined to consider this piece, and "As pants the hart" (No. 6), the finest of the three-part anthems. The first chorus is an admirable specimen of Handel's pathetic style. Both its chief subjects were introduced afterwards into Deborah, which, by th way, is the most pasticcio-like (if such a hybrid term may be allowed) of all Handel's oratorios, containing at least five-and-twenty numbers from his earlier works. The first subject of this chorus is found, slightly altered, in "For ever to the voice of prayer;" while the theme of "According to the multitude of Thy mercies" will be met with in "O hear Thy lowly servant's prayer." The beautiful duet for soprano and tenor which follows, "Wash me throughly from mine offences," is quite in the old English cathedral style. A fine tenor song, "Against Thee only have I sinned," with an interesting oboe accompaniment, leads to the fugue, "Thou shalt make me hear of joy and gladness." The first part of this chorus is taken from "Thou art the King of Glory," in the Utrecht "Te Deum;" and the second part, "That the bones which Thou hast broken may rejoice," was used long afterwards for the chorus "Bel boweth down," in Belshazzar. The soprano air, "Make me a clean heart," is also taken from the Utrecht "Te Deum," at least as regards its subject, which is identical with that of "When Thou tookest upon Thee to deliver man," though the music is here much more developed. The anthem concludes with one of Handel's most masterly fugues, "Then shall I teach Thy ways unto the wicked," the subject of which is simply the descending scale of C minor, with which a counter subject of a totally different character is combined. The full effect obtained here, with only a three-part chorus, is very striking. Forty years later, Handel introduced this movement into the third part of the English version of the Triumph of Time and Truth.

4. "O sing unto the Lord a new song."—This rather short anthem is, as regards the power of its choral writing, one of the finest of the entire series; one of those in which are to be found the most distinct traces of the future composer of Israel. After the customary "Sonata," which here, as in most of the anthems, is of no particular interest, the vocal portion of the work commences with a soprano solo, which is, so to speak, continued by the chorus. This movement is broad and diatonic, and in what may be termed Handel's "tonic and dominant" manner. It is succeeded by a most magnificent fugue, "Declare His honour unto the heathen," which, though quite short (only forty-three bars in all), is a masterpiece of contrapuntal skill. Though it has only three voice parts, there is no thinness about it, as the instruments are in places independent of the voices. A very fine effect is produced in the course of the movement by the inversion of both the subject and counter-subject of the fugue. A peculiarly Handelian "Grave" movement on the words "For the Lord is great and cannot worthily be praised:

He is more to be feared than all gods" follows the fugue. This short piece is similar in style to such numbers as "Thou art my God," or "Who is like unto Thee, O Lord," in Israel. A fine point is made at the close by a pause on the full chord of E flat, succeeded immediately by a cadence in F. The same progression is to be found in the Utrecht "Te Deum" at the words "full of the majesty of Thy glory." The following tenor air, "The waves of the sea rage horribly," is the first example of imitative music to be met with in these anthems. The vocal part is of a bold and declamatory character, while the accompaniment, with its almost ceaseless semiquaver passages and the occasional wide skips in the violins, bears some analogy to the opening symphony of "Rolling in foaming billows," in the Creation. It is not probable that Haydn knew tbe present piece; the resemblance is, therefore, the more interesting, as showing how the same subject suggested similar ideas to two great composers. The duet, "O worship the Lord," for soprano and tenor, is a companion piece to "Wash me throughly," in No. 3, to which it bears a strong family likeness,—so much so, indeed, that one can hardly doubt that the first duet was so liked, as to induce the composer to try to repeat its success with a similar number in his next work. The short chorus, "Let the whole earth stand in awe of Him," is another genuine Handelian inspiration, one of those pieces about whose authorship no connoisseur could be in doubt for a moment. It is followed by the final chorus, "Let the heavens rejoice"—a fine movement, one of the subjects of which was afterwards used for the chorus in Athalia, "O Judah, boast His matchless law."

5. "I will magnify Thee, O God my King."—Of this work there exists two versions. The earlier, which was written for the Duke of Chandos, is, on the whole, the weakest of the series. It abounds in long-winded airs; and of the choruses, only the last is in its composer's best style. Handel himself evidently felt its weakness, as he subsequently entirely re-wrote the work, cutting out all the songs, and introducing movements from other works—among others, the duet, "O worship the Lord," from No. 4. This second setting of the anthem, which is far supèrior to the first, is certainly not a "Chandos" anthem, as the score contains a viola part. It was published for the first time by Dr. Chrysander, in the German Handel Society's edition; and it is two movements from this later version—the first and the last—which Handel used, with a few very slight alterations, as the finale for Belshazzar.

6. "As pants the hart."—Of this anthem, no less than four versions exist, all of which have been published by Dr. Chrysander. We have only to do with the earliest form of the work, as written for Cannons. In its general style, this anthem bears some affinity with No. 3. The opening chorus is especially beautiful, and interesting also in its scoring. As Handel required here a full four-part harmony from the strings, and had no violas, he has given what would, no doubt, have been the viola part to the violoncellos, separating them from the double basses (as he rarely, if ever, does elsewhere), and reinforcing these latter instruments with the bassoon and the bass of the organ. The song, "Tears are my daily food," has interesting obbligato accompaniments for oboe and bassoon, and is, in itself, of a plaintive and melodious character, which gives it a high place among Handel's songs. Among other fine points of this work, we have only space to mention the two fugued choruses, "In the voice of praise" and "Put thy trust in God."

7. "My song shall be alway."—This is the first of the four-part anthems, containing, in the choruses, two tenor parts instead of one. The first tenor part in all these later anthems lies high, and rather corresponds to a male alto part than to an ordinary tenor; indeed, in some cases, Handel has written the part in the alto clef. In the present work, more than in any other of these anthems, the composer used old material. The subject of the opening symphony is borrowed from the Ode for Queen Anne's Birthday, and the movement in the form in which we find it here is identical with the first movement of the third oboe concerto. The commencement of the first chorus is taken from the Passion of Christ, and the phrase, "The heavens shall praise Thy wondrous works," is nothing more than "the heavens and all the powers therein," of the Utrecht "Te Deum." The subject of the last chorus is also taken from the same work. The finest part of this anthem is the choral writing. The second chorus, "Righteousness and equity," is the best number, and seems to have furnished the composer with some suggestions for the chorus, "Thou hast prevented him," in the Coronation anthem, "The king shall rejoice." Excepting the trio, "Thou rulest the raging of the sea," the solo pieces are not in Handel's best manner; and, on the whole, this will hardly be considered one of the finest anthems of the series.

8. "O come, let us sing unto the Lord."—This is again a somewhat unequal work. It contains some of Handel's greatest choral writing; the opening chorus, founded on the fifth Gregorian tone, is splendid throughout; and the third chorus, "Tell it out among the heathen" (part of which he subsequently re-arranged for Belshazzar), is one of those wonderful movements in which the old master has never been approached. In saying this, reference is more especially made to the second part of the chorus, "and that He made the world so fast that it cannot be moved," where the grand employment of one repeated note produces a no less fine effect than in "For the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it," in the Messiah, or "The floods stood upright as a heap," in Israel. The lovely tenor song, "O come, let us worship," with two flutes doubling the violins in the octave above, is also fully worthy of Handel. This song, by the way, was taken from his opera, Silla, where it is to be found with the same orchestration. The other pieces of this anthem are by no means equal to those already named, the songs especially being, to our modern tastes, decidedly tedious.

9. "O praise the Lord with one consent."—We here find, emphatically, one of the finest anthems of the series. This is the only one which is not preceded by a separate instrumental movement. An orchestral prelude of thirty-six bars opens the first chorus, which has for its chief theme the first line of the psalm-tune, "St. Ann's." A long and jubilant introduction for the chorus leads to a masterly fugue, "Let all the servants of the Lord," the subjects of which are almost identical with those of the second of the "Six Fugues for the Harpsichord." After this chorus, we find three songs, all of which were used afterwards for Deborah. "Praise Him, all ye that in His house," became "No more disconsolate;" "For this our truest interest" was used as "Our fears are now for ever fled;" while "That God is great" is found (considerably modified) as "Awake the ardour of thy breast." We next come to another most magnificent chorus, "With cheerful notes let all the earth." It is difficult, without exposing oneself to the charge of exaggeration to convey an adequate idea of the impression produced by such choruses as those in this anthem, or in "Let God arise," to be next noticed. Suffice it to say that they are in Handel's grandest manner, and that he never surpassed them, even in his oratorios. The following song, "God's tender mercy knows no bounds," is found in Deborah, as "Now sweetly smiling peace descends." The final chorus, in two movements, "Ye boundless realms of joy," is one of the finest existing specimens of the union of science with melodic charm; and, in all respects, fully worthy of the choruses that have preceded it.

10. "Let God arise."—Another splendid piece of choral writing. Except the long, and not very interesting, opening symphony, and the two songs, "Like as the smoke vanisheth" (which is very fine), and "Let the righteous be glad" (which is very tedious), this anthem consists entirely of choruses. The first of these, "Let God arise," is a magnificent piece of descriptive music. The rapid enunciation of the words "let His enemies be scattered" by all the voices in semiquavers, alternated with the broad declamatory chords to "Let God arise," produces a most powerful effect. It was doubtless the association of ideas which led the composer to introduce a portion of this chorus into the "Immortal Lord," of Deborah, at the words, "to swift perdition dooms thy foes." The second movement, in triple time, "Let them also that hate Him" is quite as fine as the preceding number, and contains a remarkable anticipation of modern effects in the combination of common-time rhythms in 3-4 time. The long chorus, "O sing unto God," is less striking; but with the text, "At Thy rebuke, O God," is to be found another most masterly number. Here, again, we find an instance of the association of ideas in the composer's mind. When writing Deborah, thirteen years later, in the chorus, "Now the proud insulting foe," the lines, evidently suggested the passage in this movement "both the chariot and horse are fallen," for the theme is identical in both pieces, and the treatment very similar. The finale of the present work, "Blessed be God," is remarkable for commencing with the theme of "I will sing unto the Lord," in Israel. There is also a certain resemblance in the treatment; so that this fine number may perhaps be looked upon as the first sketch of the later and better known piece.

"Broken chariots, hills of slain Strew the wide extended plain,"

11. "The Lord is my light," being the only anthem in which a five-part chorus is found, may probably for that reason be looked upon as the latest in point of date, and was probably produced about the same time as the great "Te Deum," in B flat, which also contains five voice parts. This is the longest of all the anthems, having, in all, eleven movements. Except in one or two numbers, it is hardly one of the finest. We find in it, however, one chorus, "For who is God but the Lord," which alone would save the work from oblivion. The passage, "The earth trembled and quaked," is in Handel's own inimitable manner. He subsequently used it (heightening its effect by changing it from the major to the minor mode) in "The nations tremble," in Joshua. The other parts of this anthem subsequently used were the chorus, "O praise the Lord with me," which was arranged for orchestra alone, as the third movement of the overture to Deborah; the song, "It is the Lord that ruleth the sea," which furnished the material (the association of ideas should again be noticed) for the chorus, "But the waters overwhelmed their enemies," in Israel; and the chorus, "I will remember Thy name," the subject of which, differently treated, was used in Susanna for "With Thine own ardours bless the youth."

From what has been said, it will be seen that the chief interest of the Chandos anthems lies in the choruses. A large proportion of the solos are now antiquated; indeed the same thing may be said of many of the songs in the oratorios; but, with very few exceptions, the choral numbers are in Handel's finest manner, and would, had he written nothing else, have sufficed to place him in the first rank among composers of sacred music. It is to be regretted that, at present, these anthems are, with a few exceptions, only to be had in the score editions of Arnold and the German Handel Society; it is much to be desired that their publication, in a cheap and convenient form, may soon render them more generally accessible.

THE "AUTHORS,' COMPOSERS,' AND ARTISTS' COPYRIGHT AND PERFORMING RIGHT PROTECTION SOCIETY."

BY HENRY C. LUNN.

It has often been said, and with truth, that man may study the habits of many insects with infinite advantage; and, that, indeed, much of his success in the world will depend upon observing and imitating the admirable manner in which they use the powers which they possess for their own benefit. The well-known line, "How doth the little busy bee," commences a poem which forcibly inculcates this moral; and the "sluggard," who is called upon to "go to the ant," as a model of industry and perseverance, will feel ashamed of himself when he sees a community of these tiny creatures diligently storing up the good things of this life without any capitalist to set them in motion. But there is one insect which is not usually held up as a pattern for us to shape our actions by, and that is the spider. It is true that he is guided by his instincts, like the rest of his species; but he secures his prey without a large amount of labour. He is often called cruel; and yet he uses no force, nor does he even attempt to attract the unsuspecting fly into his toils; he merely spins his web, and watches.

Now the principle acted upon by the Society, the formidable title of which stands at the head of this article, is so precisely that adopted by the spider, that, looking at its doings abstractedly, we should be disposed to apply some very harsh epithets to all those connected with it; but it must be allowed that, admitting its strictly legal right—which we have no reason to doubt—we have only to ignore the necessity of putting any person on his guard before enforcing this right, and there will be very little to complain of. Before entering upon these questions, however, let us name a few instances of the operations of the Society which have come to our knowledge.

The first intimation of the existence of this Association was conveyed to us in a letter from Mr. T. Backhouse, which appeared in our last number, in which the writer apprised us of his having been applied to for the payment of £2, for permitting a song from Wallace's Amber Witch to be sung at his concert. Mr. Harry Wall, who signed this application on behalf of the Society, in order, we presume, to show that the law was on his side, referred Mr. Backhouse to a case heard at the Clerkenwell County Court, when the proprietor of the Raglan Music Hall was fined

£4 for allowing two airs from Wallace's Maritana to be performed. Next we hear of a tenor vocalist who has been compelled to pay £2 for having sung the ballad, "There is a flower that bloometh," from the last-named Opera; all these compositions it is, of course, needless to say, having been given hundreds of times, both in and out of the metropolis, without remuneration, before the terrible name of Harry Wall had burst upon the world, although it is obvious that the right of extorting payment for such works has not been recently created. But we have not yet told the whole extent of the liability of concert-givers and performers, for we are credibly informed that a penalty is incurred by each person who sings in a trio, for instance; and that all the members of a choir can be sued for payment when a choral work belonging to the Society is given in public, although it may be presumed that, on such an occasion, the usual principle of trade would be adopted, and "an allowance made for a quantity."

Granting, now, that the power of preventing copyright musical works from being sung or played in public without either payment or permission exists, what can be thought of the conduct of the Society in utterly disregarding the fact that, so far from executive artists being called upon to remunerate composers and publishers for the right of performance, it has long been the custom for composers and publishers, under what is known as the "Royalty" system, to largely remunerate the executive artists? We do not uphold this method, so universally adopted, but merely state the truth, which, of course, is as well known to the Society as to ourselves. Yet, this is not all; for, although perfectly aware that concert-givers fancied themselves secure in permitting certain works to be performed, the Society does not issue any list of compositions which must be paid for, but remains passive until the songs or pieces have been given in public, and then writes a demand for payment, with an intimation that the matter will be placed in the hands of a solicitor, unless the money is immediately forthcoming.

We do not wish to insert anything which cannot be proved; and as our readers may doubt the possibility of thus extorting payment without any intimation of such intention being previously given, we beg to say that, not only is this done, but that the list of copyright works, even when asked for, is absolutely withheld. In confirmation of this, we may state that one vocalist who had incurred the fine, applied for the names of songs placed upon the Society's list, and was told that if he would pay £21, a year's subscription, he should receive the desired information; but that, as he appeared to sing only for charities, "the subscription of £21 might be reduced." We have also heard that a similar application from one of the highest of our musical institutions has been refused. Whispers, however, have reached us that freedom from the Society's clutches may be obtained by those who kindly supply information of copyright works being placed in programmes; so we counsel those concerned to take care that they are not daily surrounded by informers.

But it may be said that the "Dramatic Authors' Society" insists upon receiving remuneration for acting the works of its members; but then this law is universally known, and no theatrical manager puts a piece upon his stage without ascertaining exactly what he shall have to pay for it. It is also true that the published book of an English author cannot be seized upon and translated into a foreign language without his permission; but the line upon the title-page that "the right of translation is reserved" announces the fact to all who can read, and no person, therefore, can violate this law unconsciously. We could, of course, multiply instances to prove that, not only in this country, but in all others, whatever rights may belong either to authors or publishers are clearly laid down, if people will only take the trouble to understand them, and that this new Protection Association, therefore, has hitherto proceeded upon a principle which, whilst it undoubtedly has abstract right to back it up, is utterly opposed to that open and candid method of dealing of which Englishmen are justly proud.

As the Society, then, holds itself aloof from concert-givers and performers, let us earnestly advise concert-givers and performers to hold themselves aloof from the Society, by excluding all pieces from their programmes which are in the slightest degree doubtful. If, in future, a composer or publisher freely courts publicity for his compositions through the medium of the talents of an executive artist, let him state this fact upon the title-page of the works: if, on the other hand, he desires, contrary to all former precedent, that the person who thus readily advertises his property shall pay him for the right of doing so, let him intimate this by the same straightforward means, so that in either case the truth may be known. Even when a landed proprietor sets steel-traps and spring-guns in his grounds, the humane custom of announcing this to passers-by at least prevents trespassers from being taken unawares; and the most hard-hearted owner of such property would, we think, be pained to find that a harmless individual who was strolling across his fields with the full belief that they belonged to the public, had been shot by an unseen gun, or caught by the leg in a cunningly-hidden trap.

We are glad to be in a position to announce that the fund which is being raised for the widow and children of the late Rev. Dr. Dykes, is receiving very general and very hearty support, and that the committee, whose appeal to our readers will be found in another column, already feel assured of the perfect success of their efforts in this matter. This is very gratifying, and quite as it should be, for it is impossible to overrate the importance of the work of the deceased gentleman, and the mark that work made, in the cause of the Hymnody, not only of the Church of which he was a devoted member, but of the various Non-conforming bodies, to whom, as to his brother churchmen, he was ever ready to contribute his best energies, and who have found a very graceful exponent of their appreciation in the Rev. Dr. Allon, who writes to the Guardian, offering his subscription to the fund "as an expression of common gratitude for his rich and precious contributions to the worship-song of almost all English-speaking congregations." Indeed it will be universally conceded that the man who has given us such exquisite settings as, for instance, Nos. 370 (Eternal Father), 160 (Holy, Holy, Holy), 193 (Jesu, Lover of my Soul), 223 (Hark, hark my Soul), 277 (Nearer my God to Thee), 114 (O come and mourn), 234 (O Paradise!) 207 (Our blest Redeemer), and 31 (Saviour, again to Thee), of the Hymns Ancient and Modern, and the no less beautiful Nos. 73 (The day is past and over), 204 (Father of love), 495 (By the Angel's word of love), and 644 (In the hour of trial) of the Hymnary, has taken a strong and enduring hold on the affections of the congregations throughout the length and breadth of the land, and has entailed on them a deep debt of gratitude, which should, and will, we doubt not, take, at this moment, a practical and large-hearted form of acknowledgment.

It is chiefly on his Hymn-tunes, doubtless, that Dr. Dykes's fame will rest; yet he has left a considerable number of more elaborate compositions for the Service of the Church which will, in the eyes of educated musicians, stamp him as a man of very great ability and grasp of thought. Among his unpublished compositions, there exist a beautiful and touching setting of the Burial Service, for voices unaccompanied, a Communion Service in G, a Magnificat, and several anthems.

He was born in Hull, in March, 1823, and showed, from his earliest boyhood, a decided talent for music. As his grandfather was Incumbent of St. John's Church, a constant opportunity was afforded him of playing on the Organ, on which instrument he received instruction from the Organist, Mr. Skelton. This was always, in after years, one of his greatest delights; and those who heard him extemporise on the instrument, or accompany the Service in his own peculiar, delicate way, will scarcely forget the charm which he seldom failed to throw over them. He matriculated at St. Katherine's Hall, Cambridge, in October, 1843, and obtained a scholarship in the College very shortly afterwards. While at Cambridge, his time seems to have been very evenly divided between his academical studies, music, and theology, in all of which he achieved considerable distinction, for he came out in the "Senior Optimes" in 1847. He had been Conductor of the University Musical Society, and had developed a warm friendship with the Professor of Music, the late Dr. Walmisley; while his subsequent contributions to the Ecclesiastic, and other theological publications, and particularly his last pamphlet to the Bishop of Durham, bear witness to the depth and extent of his religious reading. He was ordained, in 1847, to the curacy of Malton, in Yorkshire, and this was his only curacy, for, in July, 1849, he was chosen Minor Canon and Precentor of Durham. This was a most congenial sphere of action for him, and he has left behind him abiding proofs of his singular efficiency as the head of a choral body, for he was both a disciplinarian and a spiritual guide to the chorister boys.

In 1861, the University of Durham recognised his earnest good work by conferring on him the honorary degree of Mus. Doc., and in 1862, the Dean and Chapter gave him the living of St. Oswald's, Durham. This he held, conjointly with his Minor Canonry, though without the Precentorship, till his death on the 22nd January last. He was buried in his own churchyard on the 28th January, amid a throng of sorrowing friends who had come from far and near to pay their last tribute of affection to one who was singularly rich in those friendships which are only broken by death. His successor as Minor Canon will not be elected, we believe, till September next.

We regret to have to announce the sudden death, from heart disease, of Dr. H. J. Gauntlett, on the 21st ult., in the 71st year of his age. Few, if any, musicians have done so much for Church music in this country as he whose decease we are now recording. For the last forty years Dr. Gauntlett had been engaged in composing, editing, and publishing psalm-tunes, chants, and anthems; and there is hardly an important collection of Church music published within that time in the preparation of which he was not concerned either as editor or contributor. Among the more important of his works may be named "The Church Hymn and Tune Book" (edited in conjunction with the Rev. W. J. Blew,) the "Comprehensive Tune Book" (in two volumes), "The Hallelujah" (in four volumes, with the Rev. J. J. Waite), "The Congregational Psalmist" (with the Rev. Dr. Allon), various Psalters, &c. Many of his anthems are of real musical value; but it is as a composer of psalm-tunes that he will be best remembered hereafter. Such tunes as "St. Alphege" and "St. George" in "Hymns Ancient and Modern," and Nos. 169, 197, 329, 426 and 554 in "The Hymnary," are among the best modern compositions for Church use that have been produced. But Dr. Gauntlett was not merely a composer; he also possessed considerable literary qualifications. His contributions to the "Musical World," when that periodical was originally established, and more recently to the "Orchestra," were not merely full of information, but written frequently in a very amusing, though at times slightly eccentric, style. He was, moreover, in his day an organist of high attainments, though of late he had been but seldom heard in public. He was one of the first and most persistent advocates in this country of the German system of organ-building; and some of the finest instruments in England were constructed under his direction. He was for many years organist at St. Olave's, Southwark, and subsequently at Dr. Allon's chapel at Islington; and the high reputation which the latter place deservedly enjoys for congregational singing is largely due to his exertions during the thirteen years he directed the musical portion of the services there.

We are glad to find that, at the meeting in connection with the National Training School for Music, held at the Mansion House on the 23rd ult. the Duke of Edinburgh publicly announced that there was no intention, in founding this Institution, of interfering with the operations of the Royal Academy of Music; and that many other speakers, including Sir Julius Benedict, expressed their intention of supporting the new school as an ally, and not as a rival, of the older one. Seeing that at the Royal Academy of Music every effort has been made to found free scholarships, that many already exist there, and that one more has just been presented to the Institution by Sir Francis Goldsmid, we are at a loss to understand why it was said by the Duke of Edinburgh that the "modes of proceeding" in the two Academies are "perfectly distinct." With a firm reliance, however, that there is ample room in the metropolis for both schools, it is satisfactory to find that a bond of union has been established between them by the appointment of an artist, as Principal, at South Kensington, who has so deep an interest in the welfare of what may be termed the parent Institution in Tenterden Street.

Notwithstanding the unanimity of feeling shown when Mr. Turle recently invited public attention to the state of the Latin inscription upon the tomb of Purcell, in Westminster Abbey, it is remarkable how little is really known of his compositions in this country. True, he is always spoken of with reverence, and two or three of his songs are occasionally introduced by our most classically-inclined vocalists; but beyond these tributes to his memory, his fame is almost buried with his works. This state of things is likely to be speedily remedied, for Mr. W. H. Cummings, a most zealous musical antiquarian, as well as an excellent singer, has broached the idea of founding a Society for the publication and performance of our great English writer's compositions, and a meeting has already taken place in furtherance of this object. We need scarcely say that the good wishes of all Mr. Cummings's musical countrymen will be with him in the cause he has at heart; and we hope shortly to report that his praiseworthy efforts have been crowned with success.

The second half of the series of Saturday Popular Concerts at the Alexandra Palace, which commenced on the 19th ult., promises to be of the highest interest, not only on account of the general excellence of the works announced, but because Handel-lovers will have an opportunity of hearing this composer's much-neglected Oratorio "Susanna," portions of which only are known in this country even by many accomplished musicians. Every credit is due to the Directors of these concerts for bringing forward such unfamiliar works, and to Mr. Weist Hill more especially, on whom must fall the onerous task of preparing both band and choir for the rendering of such difficult music before a critical audience.

The gathering of professors and students in the new Concert-room of the Royal Academy of Music, on the 3rd ult., was a highly interesting event, not only because a spacious and well-ventilated hall had been at length secured for the rehearsals and performances of the pupils in the building itself, but because the growing public interest in the Academy, and the enormous increase in the number of the students, justified the supposition that, with the enlargement of premises, the Institution would commence a career of additional usefulness to art and artists. The acoustical properties of the room were most satisfactorily tested by Mr. W. H. Holmes in several pianoforte works, and by the choir in a number of well-selected vocal pieces; and when, in the committee-room, after the little impromptu concert, "success to the future of the Royal Academy of Music" was proposed, it was gratifying to see, amongst those who honoured the toast, two eminent musicians who, on the 8th of March, 1823—a fortnight before the first lesson was given—were elected on the foundation of the institution.

In the prospectus of the Philharmonic Society for the coming season, it is announced that two morning Concerts will be given, in addition to the usual eight evening performances. This system appears to be gradually gaining ground; and we have little doubt that, as the subscribers have the liberty of exchanging their evening admissions for extra tickets to either of the morning Concerts, many will avail themselves of the privilege. Amongst the many interesting works promised during the session are Hoffmann's Symphony in E flat, and Raff's Symphony in C, No. 2 (both first time of performance); and the scheme also includes Brahms's "Requiem," produced by this Society in 1873, and the late Sir Sterndale Bennett's Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor," which is still in manuscript.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The most important feature of interest in these concerts during the past month, has been the revival, on the 5th ult., of Handel's Chandos Te Deum, in B flat, which was probably heard on this occasion for the first time during a period of more than a century and a half. This grand work was noticed in our review columns exactly a twelvemonth since in such detail that it is needless to repeat here the remarks made on that occasion; we shall, therefore, confine ourselves now to the performance. Of this, on the whole, we can speak very favourably. It would be untrue to say that the Crystal Palace Choir is, in general, at all on a par with its magnificent orchestra; but Handel's music is so familiar in style to all English choristers, that the Te Deum laboured under far less disadvantages than would one of Bach's church Cantatas, or a choral work of the modern German school. The choruses were sung correctly throughout, but with a certain amount of coldness and want of spirit which prevented some of the finest numbers from realising their full effect. The solo parts were excellently given by Madame Blanche Cole, Madame Patey, Mr. Henry Guy, and Mr. Patey. The charming soprano air, "When Thou tookest upon Thee," which, in feeling, is curiously like the setting of the same words in the "Dettingen Te Deum," produced a great effect, as also did Mr. Henry Guy's singing of the "Vouchsafe, O Lord." As the original score of the work is unusually thin, even for Handel—nearly the whole of it being instrumented only for two violins, one oboe, basses, and organ—additional accompaniments were written by Mr. Ebenezer Prout for this performance. Mr. Prout has, throughout the whole Te Deum, retained Handel's own score without a single note of alteration. One or two impracticable trumpet passages in "Day by day" have been transferred to the clarinets, as Mendelssohn and Franz have done in their arrangements of Bach's music; but Handel's text is nowhere changed; and the additions consist solely of a richer instrumentation for some of the more jubilant movements, the completion of the string quartett by adding a viola part (the Duke of Chandos had no violas in his orchestra), and the filling up the harmonies indicated by the figured bass in the numerous cases in which, according to Handel's custom, this forms the sole accompaniment to the voices. At the same concert a second novelty was Professor Oakeley's brilliant and pleasing (though somewhat Mendelssohnian) "Edinburgh March," composed for the Liverpool Musical Festival of 1874, and heard on this occasion for the first time at the Crystal Palace.

We must also mention the performance of Bach's Suite in B minor, for flute solo and stringed orchestra, at the concert on the 19th ult. This work consists of a number of movements, strung together without any positive connection, but so full of abstract beauty as to arrest the attention of the most impassive listener. The important flute part was exquisitely played by Mr. Alfred Wells, and it is needless to say how finely the stringed portion of the composition was rendered throughout. Mr. Manns deserves much credit for the introduction of this interesting composition.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

All who wish well to an institution which has done so much to spread a love for sacred music in this country will join with us in hoping that such a concert as was given by the Sacred Harmonic Society, on the 4th ult., was intended to inaugurate a system of more liberal policy than has hitherto been adopted in its councils. It is true that the first part of the programme was devoted to Handel; but, following the principle acted upon at the Crystal Palace triennial festivals, we had a "selection," embracing many of the choral gems from Oratorios which, in their entirety, are, we presume, not judged sufficiently attractive to be presented to the subscribers and the general public. As a relief to the choruses, solos were also given by Madame Nouver, Miss Julia Elton, Mr. Vernon Rigby (who, at a short notice, replaced Mr. Sims Reeves, absent from indisposition), and Mr Pearson. In consequence of the continued illness of Sir Michael Costa, the orchestra was conducted by M. Sainton, whose excellent judgment and precision were so decisively proved by the performance of the Overture to the "Occasional Oratorio," with which the concert commenced, that the disastrous results arising from variation of pitch in the "Dead March," from Saul—the only other important instrumental piece in the first part —could not, even by the most critical among the audience, be, in the remotest degree, laid to the charge of the conductor. The selection from "Saul" included the choruses, "How excellent Thy name," "Envy, eldest born of hell," and "Gird on thy sword," and the air, "O Lord, whose mercies," which was expressively given by Miss Julia Elton. From "Jephtha" was chosen the fine chorus, "When His loud voice," the recitative, "Deeper and deeper still," and air, "Waft her angels,"—the union of which, to the detriment of the composer's original intention, seems now to have been sanctioned by custom,—and the air, "Farewell, ye limpid springs," preceded by the brief recitative, "Ye sacred priests." The first of these was given by Mr. Vernon Rigby with a depth of expression and purity of intonation which left nothing to be desired; and the beautiful soprano air was rendered to perfection by Madame Nouver, who, if we may judge from this specimen of her powers, is destined to become one of the very best of our Oratorio singers. The first part was brought to a close by the chorus from "Joshua," "Glory to God," the solo well sung by Mr. Pearson, who also gave the recitative, "'Tis well," which was followed by the popular march. The second part commenced with Mendelssohn's "Reformation Symphony," the execution of which reflected the highest credit upon band and conductor. Indeed, we question whether a finer performance has ever been given in this country, where, strangely enough, it seems to have taken a firmer root than in Germany. We need scarcely say that the movement, which so many insist upon terming the "scherzo," was encored. Mendelssohn's "Lauda Sion"—in deference to Exeter Hall audiences, called "Praise Jehovah"—did not show the choir at its best; and, indeed, it may be said that a body of vocalists so constantly trained to give effect to the massive grandeur of Handel, can scarcely, perhaps, be equally successful in interpreting the more delicately shaded choral pieces of Mendelssohn. On this occasion, however, we must bring a graver charge against the singers, for, in many parts, the intonation was so flat as to cause discomfort to the listeners; and, in consequence of this, much of the best music passed almost unnoticed. Madame Nouver, Miss Julia Elton, Mr. Pearson, and Mr. O. Christian, however, gave valuable assistance in the solos; and their efforts were warmly appreciated. Handel's Coronation Anthem, "Zadok, the Priest," was the concluding piece; and the choristers here again proved their efficiency, leaving a good impression upon those who did not retire after the "Lauda Sion." The hall was crowded in every part.

The annual musical Festival at Brighton, under the direction of that enterprising artist Mr. Kuhe, commenced at the Pavilion on the 15th ult., before a large audience. The programmes selected have been of that high character which has always distinguished these concerts, the first morning performance, on the 16th ult, being especially remarkable for classicality, and the solo artists—Mdlle. Krebs (pianoforte), Mr. Lazarus (clarionet), M. Dubrucq (oboe), and Miss Adela Vernon, a young débutante with a good soprano voice—eliciting the warmest applause from a somewhat critical body of listeners. The production of Mr. J. F. Barnett's sacred Cantata, "The Good Shepherd," on the 17th ult., has undoubtedly been the great feature of the Festival. We are glad to record for the work an unqualified and deserved success, four numbers being encored, and the whole of the music being received with the most enthusiastic marks of approbation. The principal vocalists, Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Madame Sterling, Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Wadmore, were highly effective in the solo parts, and Mr. Barnett, who conducted his Cantata, received an ovation at the conclusion of the performance as spontaneous as it was general. We shall doubtless shortly hear this composition in the metropolis; and meanwhile award every praise to Mr. Kuhe for his earnest endeavours to encourage the creative talent of the country he has so long adopted.

On the 3rd ult., Mr. W. H. Starey gave one of his popular concerts, at the Angell Town Institute, Brixton, before a large audience. The most noticeable features in the programme were Mr. Alfred Burnett's solo on the violin, admirably played, and the pianoforte duets (Mr. J. Harrison and Mr. James Turle Lee). Miss Minnie Curtis was highly successful in the songs and other music allotted to her, and Miss Adeline Payel and Miss Kate Wild rendered great assistance, and were deservedly applauded. Messrs. Gerald, Gadsby, Hook, Parkins, Simons, Lee and Ellison were also well received, the glees by the last four named being given in excellent style. Miss Florence Woodville (pupil of Mr. Lindsay Sloper), assisted by Messrs. Lee and Harrison, accompanied.

On Friday Evening, the 4th ult., at the close of the Weekly Choir practice at St. Michael's, Shoreditch, a handsome time-piece was given to the Organist of the church, Mr. G. A. Sarvent, which had been subscribed for by the gentlemen of the choir. The testimonial was presented by the Rev. A. J. Micklethwaite.

Miss Marian Pocklington gave an Evening Concert at Myddelton Hall, Islington, on the 9th ult., assisted by the following artistes: Miss Annie Sinclair, Miss Grace Godolphin, Mdlle. Hélène Arnim, Miss Edith Taylor, Mr. W. A. Howells, Mr. Chaplin Henry, Miss Mary Taylor, (pianist), Miss L. Viola Trust (harpist), and Mr. W. L. Barrett (flautist). The British Vocal Quartett, Messrs. Collins, Upton, Kift, and Tremen sang several glees and part-songs. Mr. J. Turle Lee and Mr. J. Clayton Kift accompanied. A well-arranged programme was success, fully rendered.

The Concordia Choral Society gave a "Public Rehearsal"—the third of the season—on the 7th ult., at the schoolroom of the Ladies' College, Little Queen Street-Holborn, on which occasion Handel's Pastoral "Acis and Galatea" formed the programme of the evening. Among the choruses, which, on the whole, went well, we must particularly mention "Happy we" and "Mourn all ye Muses;" the latter, especially, being most impressively rendered. The numerous solos in the work afforded an opportunity to the choir to shew, in its individual members, of what excellent material it is composed. Mr. J. C. Merrick conducted with his usual ability, praise being due also to Miss Merrick for the manner in which she acquitted herself of the difficult task of accompanist at the pianoforte. The Annual Concert of the Society is announced to take place about the end of the present month.

As Mr. Walter Bache's Concert—at which Liszt's "Legend of St. Elizabeth" was performed for the first time in this country—took place on the eve of our going to press, we can only record that the work was favourably received by a large audience, and defer any critical remarks upon the composition until our next number.

The annual festival of the Royal Society of Musicians will take place at Willis's Rooms on the 22nd inst.; President of the day, the Earl of Shrewsbury. Several artists of eminence have volunteered their services on the occasion.

The three Recitals of pianoforte music given by Miss Florence May at the Beethoven Rooms, are, in every respect, entitled to the highest praise. The versatility of her powers has been successfully proved by her rendering of a selection of classical works of the most varied schools of composition; and at each performance she has elicited the highest marks of approbation. Without doubt her talents seem to have been especially directed towards the due interpretation of works requiring energy and impulse; but she is an artist of exceptional qualifications, and has worthily won her name.

At a recent meeting of the Academical Board of Trinity College, London, it was decided that at all future examinations for musical diplomas the candidates will be required to pass a preliminary examination in English grammar and composition; arithmetic; geography and English history; and, (in the case of candidates for the highest diploma), elementary Latin, or instead, a modern foreign language.

At the same meeting it was decided that the terms Licentiate and Associate in Music should be adopted, instead of the very dubious titles, "Senior Choral Fellow" and "Choral Fellow" respectively.

Sir Francis Goldsmid has presented the Royal Academy of Music with a Free Scholarship for two years, to be competed for in April next.

Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer" and a selection from the "Messiah," with full orchestra, is announced for Friday evenings, the 3rd and 24th inst., and April 7th, at St. Stephen's Church, South Kensington, under the direction of Mr. Albert Lowe.

At a meeting of the supporters of the National Training School of Music, held at the Mansion House on the 23rd ult., under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, it was stated that 93 Scholarships had been subscribed for, and that the School would commence operations at Easter.

Mr. F. A. Cowen, private secretary to the Earl of Dudley, and well known in musical and operatic circles as Treasurer of Her Majesty's Opera, died at his residence on the 22nd ult., aged 57 years.

The St. George's Glee Union gave its Monthly Concert at the Pimlico Rooms, on the 4th ult., when the choral pieces were "The Gipsy Chorus" (Weber), "In going to my lonesome bed," "Awake, sweet love" (Dowland), and "Allegiance we swear" (Bishop), the two latter being especially well received. The soloists were Miss Bessie Spear, Miss Jeanie Irons, (who made a successful first appearance), Madame Marie Belval, Mr. G. T. Carter and Mr. Theo. Distin. The pianist was Mr. G. F. Smith, R.A.M., whose brilliant playing of Raff's "Caprice" was much admired. Mr. T. Garside conducted. This Society also gave a very successful performance of "Athalie" (Mendelssohn), at the Grosvenor Hall, in aid of the St. Michael's Institute, on the 1st ult., when the solo parts were well sustained by the Misses Bessie Spear and White, and Madame Marie Belval. The accompaniments were played by the Misses Secretan and Hamilton (pianoforte), and Mr. G. F. Smith (harmonium). The remaining portion of the programme was composed entirely of compositions by Sir Sterndale Bennett, it being the anniversary of his death. The Lyrics to "Athalie" were recited by Mr. Charles Fry with excellent effect.

Mr. Henry Leslie announces for the present season (the twenty-first) of his excellent concerts, four subscription performances; but he also promises two extra concerts during this month, the first, with a strong list of vocalists, being devoted to "Gems of sacred music," and the second including Mendelssohn's music to "Antigone," with a full band and selected choir of 200 male voices, the text of the Drama to be recited by Mrs. Stirling. At the first subscription concert, at St. James's Hall, on the 17th ult., an admirable programme for the display of the best qualities of the choir was arranged. The conductor's new part-song, "We roam and rule the sea," achieved a genuine success; and mention must also be made of the charming flute-playing of Mr. Svendsen, not only in an air with variations by Demersseman, but in the obbligato to Sir J. Benedict's song, "The bird that came in spring." The Hall was well filled, and the applause most enthusiastic throughout the evening.

Mr. Duncan Finlay gave an evening concert at the Shaftesbury Park Lecture Hall, on Tuesday, the 15th ult., under the patronage of Capt. Commandant Swindlehurst, and the Officers of the 26th Surrey Rifles. The programme consisted of songs and part-songs by Handel, Mendelssohn, Weber, Sullivan, &c., the vocalists being Mdme. Mora, Miss Florence Clyde, Mdme. Talbot, Miss Maggie Montgomery, Signor Mora, Mr. G. H. Snazelle, Mr. G. I. Lachner, and Mr. Duncan Finlay. The audience was large and enthusiastic.

Miss Coyte Turner gave a concert at Myddelton Hall on the 1st ult., on which occasion she was supported by Miss Josephine Sherrington, Mr. Wilford Morgan, Mr. Edward Wharton, and Herr Wilhelm Ganz. Miss Coyte Turner sang with much success "Il segreto" (encored), "Si la stanchezza" (with Mr. Wilford Morgan), and Mendelssohn's Duet "I would that my love" (with Miss Josephine Sherrington). The pianoforte-playing of Herr Wilhelm Ganz, and the vocal pieces of the other artists, met with deserved approval, the encores being numerous.

At St. Anne's Church, Soho, the usual services, held every Friday evening during Lent, and on Good Friday afternoon, will again be marked by the introduction of Bach's Passion (according to St. John), which will be sung with orchestral accompaniment.

(Second Notice.)

A critical examination of this work so thoroughly convinces us of its value as a book of reference, that any minor suggestions we may offer will, we trust, be accepted as a proof of our desire to ensure its permanent success with all who study the subject upon which it treats. If there be any who doubt that music is in a transition state, let them recall the facts which a few years have placed before us. Men of the highest musical culture, and in positions before the public which entitle them to an impartial hearing, have published works on Harmony, all logically arranged, all carefully considered, and yet, with few exceptions, all contradicting each other. One of the most profound masters of acoustics the world has yet seen has given us an elaborate volume, the result of many years of laborious research, and another student of the science publicly declares that his teachings are based on a false foundation. The laws of Counterpoint, too, which have been taught in our music-schools since the science first assumed a definite shape, are pronounced by many as valueless, and new rules are set forth more applicable, it is presumed, to our modern views. Now the question is whether in preparing a "Dictionary of Musical Terms" it is not advisable to stand aloof from this conflict of opinions, and merely state those facts which have been generally received; for as music can never be regarded as an "exact science," it is obviously impossible, unless we rigidly pursue this method, to prevent the definition of a word being a mere statement of the convictions of the writer. We do not say that this is always the case in the book before us—indeed in many of the most elaborate essays the personality of the author is rarely obtruded—but we quote from some which we think might in a second edition be altered with advantage. At page 112 it is said "Whether a course of study in counterpoint is not more interesting to the lover of musical history than beneficial to the gifted young composer, the reader may perhaps judge for himself after reading the rules of the art and seeing the examples of its scope given below." In the article on "Intervals," after explaining a certain partially received method of naming them, we are told "That utter confusion should result from such an undigested system is absolutely inevitable; and it will be found that professors and teachers of music to this day are unable to talk intelligibly to each other on the simple subject of 'Intervals;'" and afterwards the custom of insisting upon adhering to the terms perfect fifth and perfect fourth is called an "absurd prejudice." Speaking of "Cadences," too, it is laid down as a law that "a series of cadences can be constructed by making any one of the relative chords (or its inversions) precede the final tonic chord, a relative chord being a common chord which can be made up out of the notes of any given scale;" and then for further information upon the subject we are referred to Stainer's "Theory of Harmony." Without attempting to battle with these opinions, or casting any slur upon the authority quoted, we merely affirm that many of the most eminent musicians of the day hold different views on all these subjects; and the student, therefore, having placed before him merely a history of musical investigation, should, we think, be allowed to form his own conclusions. We quite agree, for instance, with the assertion at page 305 that "it is highly desirable that a simple and consistent method of arranging chords should be generally adopted;" but scarcely believe that a "Dictionary of Musical Terms" should initiate the reform. Having now freely stated the impressions which a careful reading of the book has produced, and cleared the ground of any obstacle to the perfect enjoyment of its contents, let us at once offer the sincerest praise to the editors and all who have assisted them in their arduous duties. The article on "Temperament," by R. H. M. Bosanquet, contains some exceedingly valuable information, a great portion of it we need scarcely say requiring the very closest study, especially where the truths of the system of "Equal Temperament" are demonstrated. Mr. W. Chappell treats the subject of "Greek Music" according to the light in which his deep research justifies his viewing it: indeed the paper is abbreviated from his recently published work on the History of Music. We should counsel all desirous of acquiring a clear knowledge of the ancient scales to peruse this Essay with the utmost attention; for not only will they find the result of much earnest reading on the subject, but many of the careless statements of authors who have preceded him are proved, by undoubted facts, to have been wrong. Mr. Chappell also contributes an excellent article on the "Early Systems of Notation." "Acoustics" has been entrusted to Mr. A. E. Donkin, the nature and laws of the science being most lucidly explained in a few pages. From Mr. Henry Gadsby, under the definition of the word "Form," we have a very able explanation of the construction of the Symphony and Sonata, the rules for which, however, can only be broadly defined; for, as the author truly says, "this general outline is sometimes varied by the genius of the composer;" and indeed it may reasonably be doubted whether, as music progresses, the exceptions will not rather preponderate. The Rev. T. Helmore's paper on "Plain Song" shows an intimate knowledge of the subject. What is popularly known as the "Church Modes" should at least be understood, even by those who do not desire to see them perpetuated; and Mr. Helmore has, we think, explained the matter so clearly that none need remain in ignorance of their meaning. A very good historical account of "Hymnody" has been supplied by Mr. W. H. Monk, who, as an example of the alterations which from time to time take place in established melodies, gives a list of twenty-one varieties of the tune known in England as "Luther's Hymn." Besides the articles we have mentioned there are several which will arrest the attention of the reader, the authors of which are named in the Preface—the "Ear," "Larynx," and "Laryngoscope," by Mr. F. Champneys; "Duodene," by Mr. A. J. Ellis, and "Tonic Sol-fa," by Mr. W. G. McNaught, for instance—and others which appear anonymously, have also much merit, amongst which we must cite the one on "Counterpoint," which is really so carefully written and so elaborately laid out that an intelligent student may be enabled almost to master the subject without any other aid. In concluding our notice of a work which, both in plan and execution we believe to be perfectly unique, we cannot but express an earnest hope that the increasing desire for information on all matters connected with the art may create a demand for the "Dictionary of Musical Terms" which will amply reward the editors and publishers for the praiseworthy manner in which they have executed their task.

The Passion. (The Seven Words of our Saviour on the Cross.) Set to music by Joseph Haydn, the English adaptation by the Rev. H. Clementi Smith, M.A.

Of the four oratorios which Joseph Haydn composed, the present work is in date the second. Its history is somewhat curious. From a note prefixed by the composer to the old edition of the score, we learn that the work was originally a series of orchestral movements written for a church in Cadiz for performance in Passion Week. The officiating Bishop delivered from the pulpit a series of discourses on the seven last words, and the interval between each was filled by a portion of this oratorio. The work therefore at first consisted of a number of symphonic movements, and the text was added several years later. Singularly enough, there is a third form in which the music is to be met with. The seven numbers of which it consists also exist as string quartetts, and will be found in Trautwein's complete edition of Haydn's quartetts as numbers 76 to 82. A comparison of the different versions of the work is full of interest to the musician.

Owing to the nature of the subject, the Passion is composed (excepting the "Earthquake" chorus at the end) entirely of slow movements. On this point Haydn in his preface says "The task of writing seven Adagios, each of which was to last about ten minutes, to preserve a connection between them, without wearying the hearers, was none of the lightest"; and we can well believe him. None but a composer of almost boundless resources could have made head against such a difficulty; and one of the most striking features in the present work is the diversity in unity which exists between its several numbers. Each has its own distinctive features; yet the same vein of thought, without an approach to monotony, is preserved from first to last.

Before noticing the separate movements, there are yet one or two points calling for mention. Those who are interested in the study of musical form will find here a rare example (accounted for by the origin of the work) of the application of strict instrumental forms to vocal music. Each number is laid out after the model of the first movement of a sonata—the only difference being the omission of the repeat of the first part. Another noteworthy feature of the music is the great skill with which the composer has added voice parts to what was already complete. Excepting that the accompaniment is in places fuller and richer than is customary with Haydn, it would be difficult for anyone who only knew the work in its present form to suspect that the chorus was altogether an afterthought.

The Passion opens with an orchestral introduction in D minor, of an alternately grand and pathetic character, written in Haydn's most elevated style, and bearing considerable affinity to the music of Mozart. There is, indeed, a sort of family likeness between the present movement and Mozart's fine Adagio for the piano in B minor. To this introduction succeeds the chorus, "Lamb of God" (B flat, $\frac{3}{4}$ time), one of the most charmingly melodious movements of the work. As in the following numbers, a quartett of solo voices alternates with the chorus. No. 2, "Lord, have mercy" (C minor, common time) is strongly contrasted in character with its predecessor; it is more ecclesiastical and somewhat less symphonic in style. What in a sonata would be called the "second subject" recalls the commencement of the "Benedictus" of Mozart's Requiem; another interesting point in the movement being the passage on pages 15 and 16, where the melody is in the alto, and in order to give it due prominence Haydn accompanies it by detached notes for the other voices. The resemblance to Mozart's style, already alluded to in this notice, is again observable at the commencement of the chorus No. 3, "Daughters, weep not" (E major, common time), which forcibly reminds us of the chorus, "Ah, grazie si rendano" in La Clemenza di Tito. That the likeness is accidental there can scarcely be a doubt, as, on the one hand, Mozart's opera was not composed till 1791, about five years later than the oratorio, while, on the other, the present work, though written earlier, was not published till 1801. The comparison is nevertheless interesting, as showing how the musical ideas of the two great masters seem to have run in parallel lines. This whole number is of exquisite beauty. Some of the harmonies, familiar enough as they are to us now, must have seemed surprisingly bold at the time they were first heard. At the end of page 25 will be found in the last bar a peculiarly happy instance of the employment of the minor ninth, which, though nearly a century old, has lost none of its beauty by age. The chorus "O my God," No. 4 (in F minor, $\frac{3}{4}$ time), is another highly impressive movement, a special feature of which is the elegance and finish of the accompaniment, which is quite in the quartett style. Between this and the next chorus is placed an orchestral intermezzo, the reason for which at this particular point is not very apparent. This piece is not very effective on the piano, but the score is one of the most remarkable examples of Haydn's instrumentation. It is for wind instruments only, and the contrasts and combinations of the various groups of wood and brass would, with a good performance, be very striking. The two following choruses, "I thirst" and "It is finished," are, in our opinion, the least interesting parts of the work. Both contain much good music, but they seem in inspiration to fall short of the preceding numbers. Possibly Haydn was holding himself in reserve for his finale; for No. 7, the chorus "Into Thy hands, O Lord," is the gem of the whole work. Mozart himself has written nothing more exquisitely tender, nothing more rich in beautiful melody; and here, again, the effect is much enhanced by the orchestral accompaniment (see, for example, the triplet passage for the violins on pages 70, 71). This chorus leads immediately to the movement entitled "The Earthquake." This can hardly be considered one of the finest portions of the music. Haydn was more at home in depicting subjects of a tender than of a terrific character, and this chorus appears somewhat conventional in treatment.

Though not of equal merit and interest throughout, this Passion will always be considered a monument of its composer's genius. It only remains to say a few words respecting the English version. On this there will probably be difference of opinion. A close translation of the original text would certainly have rendered the work at least partially unsuitable for performance in English churches. For example, in No. 3 we find the following: "O Virgin Mother, Refuge of sinners, hear the cry of thy Son!" Mr. Clementi Smith has therefore altogether discarded in many places, the original text, and has adapted to the music a series of passages from Scripture forming appropriate meditations on the words of our Lord which are sung as a plain chant before each number. That the music to some extent suffers from this is, we think, undeniable; but as a compensation the work is made much more available for performance at the season for which it was originally designed. As the orchestra in church seems to be fast becoming a recognised institution for special occasions, the experiment might well be tried in the approaching Passion Week of introducing this work as a change from Bach's Passion music, which during the last few years has been so frequently brought forward. If less grand than the work of the old Leipzig Cantor, it is certainly not less enjoyable.

The Morning and Evening Service, together with the Office for Holy Communion, set to music in the key of F. By Henry Smart.

The Benedictus of this service appears to have been the last portion composed, and to have been added with the intention of complying with a general demand for completeness in new works of the class. This will at least explain how our remarks are confined to its separate consideration. Though containing no conspicuous points of interest, this number will grow into popularity by repetition, and as hearers become more familiar with music which, apart from its melodious and musicianly character, is replete with evidences that its author throws aside opportunities of ad captandum effects in his desire to combine a faithful rendering of the text with a legitimate use of the resources of his art. Much as we advocate the necessity that English Church Music should progress with the spirit of the time, there are many signs of a growing tendency to introduce effects having a palpable kinship with the realism which is the prominent feature of the latest forms of programme music. It would be unfortunate if Services were produced on the model of "Symphonic Poems." Yet compositions of the latter class having their admirers must necessarily in time be a source of disintegration. It is, therefore, with especial pleasure that legitimists must view the continued labours of musicians such as Mr. Henry Smart, who regard true progress as the development of past excellence, not the abrogation of tradition and the deification of ourselves. At the same time we must observe that great care should be exercised to make works of this class irreproachable from a literary point of view. Too often we perceive indications that the study of "letters" is sacrificed in a zealous application to that of "notes." Language, as the incentive of musical thought, demands equal consideration with the melody to which it is allied, nor can we forgive the musician who shows himself to be unscholarly. Dr. Stewart has brought about good reforms at Dublin, an example which our own Universities might well follow in considering the requirements to be exacted from candidates for musical degrees. Mr. Smart has certainly not committed very egregious faults in this direction; and indeed, we might be content to pass them by, if they proceeded from the pen of a less prominent musician, whose example might be in little danger of creating precedents. We simply express our disapproval of the strong accents upon the words "and," "that," "of," "from," and the last syllables of "Prophets," "promised," and "into."

Iphigenia in Aulis. An Opera, in three acts. Composed by C. Von Gluck. Edited by Berthold Tours. The English version by Rev. J. Troutbeck.

In 1751 Metastasio wrote "Gluck has surprising fire; but he is mad. He composed an Opera for Venice, which was very unfortunate. He composed others with various success. I am not a man to pretend to judge him." Strange indeed that so great a genius should be pronounced mad by the very person who acknowledges his incapacity to estimate his powers; and stranger still it will be if, in the course of time, the world should know more of Gluck than of Metastasio. No doubt Wagner has set us thinking; and one of our first thoughts will be to examine critically the works of one of whom Wagner is but the echo; a champion indeed who fought single handed against Italian Opera in Paris, and initiated a theory which, whether fully or partially acted upon in the future, can never die out. "Iphigenia in Aulis" was produced in the French capital at a period when success could scarcely be hoped for; and yet it made an impression which, in spite of powerful opposition, was not to be effaced. Now that this work (as well as the later one, "Iphigenia in Tauris,") is placed before us in a compact and cheap form, it is sincerely to be hoped, even if our lyrical establishments are closed against Gluck, that students will make themselves acquainted with such an inestimable mine of wealth; for in this edition not only is the music carefully supervised, but the indications of instrumentation are so profuse that we seem almost to be reading the score.

A School for the Harmonium. By King Hall.

There is no instrument so misunderstood, and, let us add, so misused, as the harmonium. The popular idea concerning it is, that it is a sort of substitute for a small chamber organ; and if one has the misfortune of listening to an average performance upon it, the probability is that one hears either a Psalm tune, or some simple piece of sacred music droned out upon it in a monotonous way without the use of the "Expression" stop, which is par excellence the characteristic feature of the instrument. The larger number of the people who possess a harmonium seem altogether ignorant of the fact that it requires special study, and fancy that any player on the piano can sit down and manage it at once. No greater delusion exists, and it is hardly too much to say, that not one amateur in ten who thinks he can play the harmonium really has any idea of the resources of the instrument.

One chief cause of this imperfect acquaintance is, probably, to be found in the scarcity of good instruction books for the harmonium. It would be invidious to make comparisons between the various existing works, but it may be said that, with the exception of the admirable German treatise of L. A. Zellner, there are hardly any which enter fully into the specialities of the instrument. We, therefore, heartily welcome Mr. Hall's book, as a useful addition to the scanty literature on the subject. Though, as will be seen presently, open in one or two points to criticism, it is written by one who has evidently a thorough practical acquaintance with the harmonium; and anyone who studies the work may depend upon receiving considerable enlightenment as to the proper management of his instrument.

After a diagram and description of the key-board and draw-stops, of which latter the English as well as the foreign names are given, a very excellent chapter deals with the subject of "blowing." The first difficulty of the harmonium player is always to keep the wind steady, and produce a uniform tone, without unintentional crescendo and diminuendo. The exercises for the attainment of this object are simple and well devised, and the accompanying instructions as clear as they can be.

To players upon the organ the fingering of the harmonium will present not the slightest difficulty; but it is otherwise with those who are only accustomed to the piano. We cannot help thinking that Mr. Hall has dealt with the matter in a very summary fashion, in dismissing it in a dozen lines, and then saying that it is illustrated in the studies; because although we do find this to be the case, the pupil will have to find out, to a large extent, for himself the why and the wherefore of some of the fingerings he will meet with; and a fuller exposition of general principles, with illustrative examples in the proper place, would, we think, have much increased the utility of the book.

The use of the stops is the next point discussed; and here again Mr. Hall's directions, though good, are hardly so complete as they might be. For example, in speaking of the Clarinette stop (No. 2) he judiciously recommends that as this stop is generally much heavier than the Flute, (No. 1), if the two are drawn together the music should be played an octave higher than written. This is perfectly true as a general rule, but it certainly ought to have been mentioned that in the instruments of one of the best makers, M. Alexandre, of Paris, the two stops are so balanced that this alteration is unnecessary. In our own harmonium, one of M. Alexandre's finest instruments, the effect of drawing stops Nos. 1 and 2 together, closely resembles that of the 16 and 8 feet stops on the organ, and we have often noticed the same thing in other instruments of the same maker. Again, one or two very obvious combinations of stops, familiar to all good harmonium players, are neither noticed in the text, nor, unless we have inadvertently overlooked them, illustrated in the pieces at the end of the volume; such, for example, as the effect of a melody played in the tenor by the left hand with 1 and 4, or even in the soprano by the left hand with 3, and accompanied by the right hand with the lower notes of 2. If Mr. Hall is acquainted with Zellner's masterly transcriptions for piano and harmonium, he will find several combinations in them, which he appears to have overlooked altogether. We fully agree with the curt advice given as to the use of the Tremolo stop, "Don't use it!" In special cases it can be made very effective, as, for instance, in the introduction of the overture to Der Freischütz, but these cases occur so seldom, and the management of the stop requires so much judgment that, by beginners at any rate, it is best let alone.

The chapter on the expression stop we heartily commend, but think a few easy exercises on its management would have been an improvement. The general rule enunciated that "the expression stop should always be used, except in pieces requiring uniform loudness throughout," is a thoroughly sound one. It is the not using this stop which renders an average performance on the harmonium so painfully monotonous. With a player who knows how to avail himself of it, it gives a command of light and shade hardly inferior to that attainable on the violin, and far superior to any that can be produced either on the piano or organ.

The eighty-two pages which form the remainder of the book are filled with a selection of studies and pieces arranged in sections, for harmoniums containing from one to four sets of vibrators. In these the resources of the instrument are fairly, though by no means exhaustively set forth. The exercises are very good; the selection of pieces, thirty-eight in number, might, with advantage, have been much more varied. We find five by J. B. Calkin, five by Sir John Goss, and nine by Mendelssohn, but not one by Beethoven, Handel, Haydn, Mozart, or Schubert. The pieces given are good enough, but an important feature of the harmonium—its adaptability for the transcription of orchestral music—is almost entirely ignored. Many of the slow movements (and even of the Allegros) of Haydn's and Mozart's symphonies have a charming effect on the harmonium, but not one of these is given. We must protest, too, against such an arrangement as that on pp. 28, 29, of one of Mendelssohn's Songs without Words, in which the whole accompaniment is altered. If it is not suitable for the harmonium in its original shape it ought to be let alone.

It will be noticed that the faults we have felt it necessary to find with the book have been almost all of a negative character. So far as it goes it is very good, indeed one of the best books we have seen; our only complaint is that being so good it is not, as it might have been, even better. Should the author carry out his intention of publishing a series of arrangements in continuation of those given in the volume, he will do much towards remedying the defects we have noticed. As it is, the work contains much which amateur players on the harmonium will find worthy of their attention.

J. B. Cramer & Co.

Eighty Musical Sentences, to Illustrate Chromatic Chords. By Professor G. A. Macfarren, Mus. Doc.

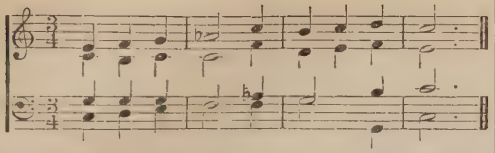
This very interesting little work is, to the best of our belief, new alike in idea and execution. Its object will be best understood by the following extract from Professor Macfarren's Preface:—

"Any isolated example of a chord, even with its resolution, if it be a discord, can give as little idea of its effect upon the sense or meaning of a musical phrase, as can a word in a column of a dictionary represent the spirit of a poetical passage in which it may occur. Analagous to the literary quotations with which lexicographers elucidate the meanings they expound, are designed to be these concise strains. It would have been easy to cite from the works of the great masters instances of every chord and every progression herein exemplified; but impossible to find complete phrases, in which some of the chords were not so surrounded by other matter that their distinction would have been troublesome for a learner. It is therefore, perhaps, best to the purpose, to have framed these original Sentences, which, in systematic order, display the entire subject. The author is happy to issue this publication as a confession of musical faith, avowing implicit belief in the harmonic theory on which it is based, and thorough conviction that the theory accounts for everything that is beautiful, and guards against what is unsatisfactory in musical combination and progression."

Though only recently published, we further learn from the preface that these sentences were written as long ago as 1867, at the request of Mr. Curwen, whose musical labours in connection with the Tonic Sol-Fa movement will be known to all our readers. As to the manner in which the plan of the work has been carried out, there can hardly be two opinions. The author is well known as one of our profoundest theorists, and it is difficult to speak too highly of the often exceedingly felicitous, yet perfectly natural manner in which he has introduced the chords which his sentences illustrate. We quote one example, not because it is the best, but because it does not require a long extract. In Exs. 7 and 8, we find the minor chord of the sub-dominant in a major key—in other words, the chromatic chord of the sub-dominant, first used in modulation, and then simply as a chromatic chord remaining in the same key. Both examples are identical as regards their first four bars, which contain only diatonic harmonies, and which, therefore, we need not quote. The author's point is evidently to show that with the same chord we can modulate, or not, at pleasure. Commencing, then, with the fifth bar, Exs. 7 and 8, are as follow:—

Ex. 7.

Ex. 8.



This quotation, from one of the simplest examples, will sufficiently show the character of the work; but it ought to be said that the rhythmic and melodic variety of the illustrations is hardly less than that of the harmonies. Of the latter, the best idea will be formed if we give an abstract of the contents of the book.

The first examples are of the major chord of the super-tonic in a minor key, modulating, and as a chromatic. We then find the chord of the minor second in a minor key similarly treated, while the next sentences deal with the minor chord of the sub-dominant in a major key, the inversion of the super-tonic chord with diminished fifth in major key, the chord of the minor sixth, the major chord of the super-tonic, and the chord of the minor second in a major key, with their inversions. After this, the various chords of the seventh, ninth, eleventh, and thirteenth are illustrated; and, lastly, the chord of the augmented sixth. It will thus be seen that the book is a complete compendium of chromatic harmony.

A very excellent point about the work is the clear system adopted of figuring the chords. It is that proposed by Alfred Day, and differs from that generally adopted, inasmuch as the nature of the chord is shown at once by the figures (e.g., whether it is a seventh, ninth, &c.), and its position is denoted by letters added to the figures; a indicating that the root is in the bass, b the third, c the fifth, d the seventh, e the ninth, f the eleventh, and g the thirteenth. For instance, in Ex. 46, the chord, which, on the ordinary plan, would be figured $\frac{4}{2}\sharp$, is marked $\frac{7}{e}\sharp$, thus showing that it is to be considered as the minor ninth of D (with the root omitted), the seventh and sharp third being included in the chord, and the ninth in the bass. We certainly think this clearer than the usual method, because it shows the roots of the chords at once.

We consider Professor Macfarren's "Sentences" a really valuable acquisition to our theoretical works, and warmly commend them to the attention of all students of harmony.

Sketch for the Pianoforte. By Joseph Ridgway.

Considering how melodious is the theme of this little sketch, and how tenderly it is harmonised, we hoped for something better than the somewhat rambling matter with which it is followed; indeed, we may say that the return to the quiescent subject we have temporarily taken leave of is a real relief. We have no objection to passages, but they must grow up naturally, and not be forced. Let Mr. Ridgway play over and study the "Songs without Words," of Mendelssohn, which are so often imitated, but never equalled, and he will see what we mean.

Duncan Davison and Co.

Valses de Salon pour le Pianoforte. No. 1, Valse Militaire. No. 2, L'Impératrice. No. 3, Les Perles. Composées par W. Vincent Wallace.

These three pieces, although containing no strikingly original features, are graceful and musician-like, as might be expected from the composer of "Maritana." No. 2 is perhaps the most melodious; but there is character about the second of the two waltzes called "Les Perles," gained by the strongly marked appoggiatura, resolving on the following bar, which constantly occurs.

Lamborn Cock.

Lyra Studentium. No. 12, edited, revised, and fingered by Frederick Westlake.

This excellent series of classical pianoforte pieces is progressing most satisfactorily. The number before us is the first movement of Moscheles' once well-known Concerto in F, a welcome reminiscence to the few already acquainted with its beauties, and a charming addition to the library of the many to whom it was previously a stranger. Mr. Westlake deserves every credit for the care with which he has selected from the standard works, and also for the able manner in which he has exercised his editorial duties.

Joseph Williams.

Le Feu Follet, Morceau de Salon; for the Pianoforte. By J. Winkelhaus.

Once more we must ask what is the meaning of such a jumble o flanguages upon the title-page of a musical work as we find either the composer or publisher has adopted in this instance? Surely it is better that pieces published in England should have English titles; but if French in some instances must be used, let us at least have that language throughout one page. "Le Feu Follet" is a graceful and spirited little sketch, well adapted for the "Salon," for which the composer has expressly written it; and, although demanding a delicately trained touch, thoroughly within the reach of average amateurs. The theme, marked meno mosso, in the subdominant, contrasts well with the principal subject, and the passages throughout are pleasing, and lie well under the hand.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

DR. STAINER'S "HARMONY."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—The review of Dr. Stainer's "Harmony" in the February number of the "Musical Times," seems to represent that work as teaching harmony on a system so much more sensible and comprehensible than any other work that has ever come under our notice, that I venture to ask a question with respect to a chord which I have pointed out to several teachers of music, asking for an explanation of it, and have never yet met with one satisfactory. I should therefore be glad to know whether Dr. Stainer's system accounts satisfactorily for such a chord, and by what name he would describe it.

It occurs in Gounod's Faust, Page 7 (Royal Edition), 1st bar of the Andante Maestoso; thus

If you will kindly inform one in the next number of the "Musical Times" how to name this curious offspring of Gounod's brain you will greatly oblige,

Yours truly,

A puzzled tyro in Harmony.

[Dr. Stainer would certainly call the chord you have quoted the dominant minor thirteenth in the key of B flat, resolved on the tonic; and he would treat the C♯ as a D♭. He would probably account for the major ninth (G♯ not G♭) in it by the custom of modern composers, which he refers to on p. 92 of his book, of combining major and minor harmonies in the same chord. For ourselves, we must confess that we think Richter's system simpler. He would call it a "chromatically altered chord," and would treat it as the ordinary dominant ninth in a complete form, but with the fifth of the root chromatically raised. The resolution of the chord is regular in both cases; and either explanation appears to us satisfactory.—The Reviewer of "Stainer's Harmony."]

Oates, their late choirmaster, with a silver tea service, and three volumes of Hawkins's "History of Music," all suitably inscribed, as a token of their esteem for the manner in which he had discharged his duties since the opening of the church. Great regret at his retirement was expressed by the rector and the choir. The presentation was made by the rector, and Mr. Oates briefly acknowledged the compliment.

Cheltenham.—The Second Subscription Concert of the Choral Society was given in the Assembly Rooms, on Tuesday, the 15th ult. The programme consisted of selections from the Messiah and Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise. Sutton (in place of Madame Brooke, absent through illness), Miss Julia Jones, Miss Taylor, Mr. Bywater, and Mr. W. H. Phillips. All the solos were effectively rendered, and the choruses, on the whole, were given with spirit and precision. Mr. J. A. Matthews occupied his usual post as conductor, and Mr. E. G. Woodward led the band.

Clifton.—On Thursday evening, the 3rd ult., an organ recital was given at the Victoria Rooms, by Miss Pearce, of Bristol, with Mr. Harper Kearton, as vocalist. The programme, which included pieces of different schools calculated to test the performer's power and command of the instrument, was rendered in an admirable manner, and Miss Pearce was loudly applauded at the close.——On Monday, the 7th ult., Miss Farler gave her Annual Concert at the Victoria Rooms. Waite was leader of the band, and Mr. Richelieu Jones, chorus master. The second part was miscellaneous, and comprised songs, &c., by the above-named artists, and a violoncello solo by Mons. Jules De Swert. Signor Li Calsi (in the absence of Mr. F. H. Cowen), ably conducted throughout the concert.——On the 23rd ult. an Evening Concert was given at the Victoria Rooms, in aid of the funds for the repairs of the parish church of St. George, Gloucestershire. The programme was well selected, and capitally rendered, the vocalists being Mrs. Arthur Goodeve, Miss Ada Jackson, Mrs. John Fuller, Mr. R. Colson-Taylor, and Mr. E. M. Knapp. Two pianoforte solos were given by Miss Edith Ridler, and Miss Roeckel played two solos on the zither. Mr. C. Maker accompanied.

The choir numbered about eighty voices, and the principal parts were taken by members of the society. The second part was composed of anthems and new hymns. Great credit is due to Mr. G. P. Heathcote for his indefatigable efforts in the capacity of trainer and conductor.

Denbigh.—An excellent performance of Haydn's Creation was given by the members of the Philharmonic Society in the Town Hall, on the 11th ult. The artists engaged were Mrs. A. J. Sutton, Mr. T. Brandon, and Mr. J. M. Powell. There was a full band, led by Mr. Stephenson, of Wrexham. Mr. J. Jones presided at the harmonium, and Mr. F. C. Watkins conducted.

The artists engaged were Miss Agnes Larkcom (soprano), Miss Cummings (contralto), Mr. Kenningham (tenor), and Mr. T. Ley Greaves (bass). Mr. Wm. Morley was leader of the band, Mr. Bentley, pianist, Mr. Housley, organist, and Mr. Kempton, conductor. A Cantata, The Fairy Ring, by Mr. W. H. Cummings, occupied nearly the whole of the first part of the concert, and the second was miscellaneous.

Derry.—The St. Columb's Choral Union gave a performance on Wednesday evening, the 9th ult., for the first time in Derry, of Handel's oratorio, the Messiah, in the Corporation Hall. The whole of the solo parts were undertaken by amateur friends of the Society. The soprano was Miss Bagot, Miss Hogan, the contralto, Mr. Byron, tenor, and the Rev. J. Hogan, bass. Mr. Kellock gave "Why do the nations?" with great vigour and very correctly. The choruses were well sung. Mr. Mulholland rendered great assistance to the whole by a firm performance on the pianoforte of the accompaniments to the choruses. The Rev. James Armstrong presided at the harmonium. Mr. Turpin, in addition to discharging the duties of conductor, played the pianoforte accompaniments to the solos.

Devonport.—On the 9th ult., a concert was given at the Institute, under the direction of Mr. W. H. Hannaford. In the second part Mr. Rendle and Miss Bowerman were the vocalists. Cohen's trio, "Miserere del Trovatore," for pianoforte, harmonium, and violin was played by Mr. Pardew, Mr. Hannaford, and his son.

Egham.—On Thursday, the 10th ult., a Concert took place before a large audience in the Literary Institute, under the management of Mr. Herbert Leigh Bennett, in aid of funds for the Egham Cottage Hospital. The artists were Miss M. C. Clark, Miss Marie Duval, Mr. Herbert Leigh Bennett, Mr. Shirley Bunbury; pianoforte, the Rev. F. Scotson Clark; violin, Herr Alex Kummer; cornet-à-pistons, Mr. Henry Leigh Bennett. Mr. William Boyd officiated as accompanist throughout the evening. A grand piano was supplied by Messrs. Erard and Co. for the occasion.

Edinburgh.—The annual orchestral festival, into which the Reid concert has, under the present Professor of Music, developed, commenced on Saturday, the 12th ult., when a morning and evening concert were given. At the morning performance Gade's Symphony in

B flat, and Brahms's variations on a theme by Haydn, tested with much success the powers of the fine orchestra assembled; and the evening concert, which was crowded to overflowing, included Beethoven's Symphony in A major, which was excellently rendered, and General Reid's "Introduction, Pastorale, Minuet and March," played in deference to precedent. Mr. Charles Hallé's pianoforte performances were an important feature, Beethoven's Concerto in C major No. 1, and Sterndale Bennett's Caprice in E, being especially deserving of the highest praise. Madame Antoinette Sterling and Mr. Lloyd achieved the most signal success in the vocal music allotted to them, although the lady was obviously suffering from hoarseness. The festival was brought to a close on the 14th ult., a novelty in the programme being Raff's Symphony in E, No. 5, which elicited much applause and excited the deepest interest. Mr. Hallé was again the pianist, and Madame Sterling and Mr. Lloyd the singers. In every respect the performances have been highly successful, and Mr. Hallé deserves every credit for the admirable manner in which he conducted.

GAWTHORPE.—The Victoria Brass Band gave a Concert in the National Schoolroom on Wednesday, January 26th, assisted by several local vocalists, including Mr. R. Punyer (tenor), and Mr. J. Overend (bass). Mr. W. Squires gave two solos on the violin, and Mr. H. Pickles accompanied. The band played several selections which were well received. Mr. B. D. Jackson conducted.

GREAT GRIMSBY.—On Monday evening, the 14th ult., Mr. Oates, Macaulay-terrace, on behalf of the Great Grimsby Choral Society, presented Dr. Barry, the able conductor, with an ivory bâton beautifully mounted with silver. Dr. Barry, in acknowledging the gift, said that he regarded it as an expression of unity and co-operation between the members of the choir and himself, and thanked the Society for so kind a mark of appreciation of his services.

HALIFAX.—On the 3rd and 4th ult. two soirées were held in the Drill Hall to welcome the Rev. F. Pigou, M.A., chaplain in ordinary to the Queen, on his appointment to the vicarage of Halifax. The first soirée was especially for the poor connected with the several churches and charities in the town. An excellent programme was provided and well rendered. The soloists were Mrs. Eckersley, of Bradford, Miss Pilling, Miss Empsall, and Messrs. Verney Binns, Carter, and Rickard. Miss Thompson played several solos on the violin, and the Misses Warneford a duet on two grand pianofortes. The choir of the parish church was augmented by about fifty selected vocalists from the town, the result being some very excellent part-singing. The musical arrangements were under the direction of the organist and choir-master of the parish church, Mr. J. V. Roberts, Mus. Bac. Oxon., who officiated as conductor and accompanist.

HINCKLEY.—On the 3rd ult. a special service was held in the parish church, when a collection was made for the Organ Fund. The service consisted of selections from the Messiah, Judas Maccabæus, Samson, Dettingen Te Deum, and Creation, the solo parts being sung by Miss Orton, Miss Wale, and Mr. Horniblow. The choir, which numbered about sixty voices, rendered the pieces with correctness and precision. Mr. Josias Wells conducted, and Mr. Joseph Homer presided at the organ. The instrument, built by G. P. England, is to be entirely rebuilt and considerably enlarged by Messrs. Holmshaw, of Birmingham.

JEDBURGH.—A performance of the Messiah was given by the Musical Association, on January 28th, to a crowded audience. The principal vocalists were Miss Blair (soprano), Madame Lanbach (contralto), Mr. J. A. Robertson (tenor), and Mr. Smyth (bass). Miss Blair sang the treble solos with considerable taste, and was especially successful in her rendering of "I know that my Redeemer." The choruses were generally well sung, the "Hallelujah" and "For unto us" being marked with great precision. Mr. H. W. George presided at the harmonium, and Mr. J. Lunn conducted.

LEEK.—Mr. Rider gave an Evening Concert at the Temperance Hall, on Friday, the 11th ult., assisted by Madame Clara Suter, Madame Alice Barnett, Mr. Wallace Wells, Mr. Henry Pyatt, Mr. Arthur H. Jackson, R.A.M. (solo pianist), and Mr. T. Harper (solo trumpet).

LIVERPOOL.—The seventy-ninth anniversary dinner of the Apollo Glee Club took place on the 17th ult., Mr. Joseph Skeaf, the president, occupied the chair, Mr. William Laidlaw and Mr. T. MONTROSE.—On Monday evening, 31st January, the members of the Harmonic Union, under the conductorship of Mr. C. B. Taylor, gave a Concert to the honorary members and friends in the Guildhall. The small, but efficient orchestra, was led by Mr. Lindsay, Mr. Hall presiding at the harmonium and Miss Taylor at the pianoforte. The programme was composed of secular music, and was divided into three parts—the first embracing glees, quartetts, songs, &c., by English authors; the second, Irish pieces; and the third, Scotch, all of which were well rendered. A word of praise is due to the youthful pianist for the manner in which she played the accompaniments.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—A most successful performance of the Antigone of Sophocles, with Mendelssohn's music, took place at the Theatre Royal, on the 21st ult. The representatives of the several characters in the tragedy were all efficient, and the choruses, under the direction of Mr. Rea, were excellently sung. The house was crowded, and much credit is due to Mr. Egerton (stage manager), and Mr. Rea for the satisfactory results achieved.

NEWPORT, SALOP.—On Wednesday evening, January 26th, a "Service of Praise" for Christmastide, compiled and arranged by the rector (Rev. D. Mountfield), and the organist (Mr. Smart), was held in the Parish church. The service consisted of hymns and anthems from the Messiah, rendered by a large special choir, supplemented by a band and the large organ. The Voluntary (Mendelssohn's "War March of the Priests") was well played by band and organist. During the collection (in aid of Wolverhampton Orphanage) another Voluntary was played without the band.

NORTH BERWICK, N.B.—The Musical Society gave its first Concert this season on Thursday, the 3rd ult., in the Oddfellows' Hall, under the direction of Mr. Frank Bates. The choruses and anthems were rendered in a manner which bore evidence of most careful training and practice. The soloists also were highly satisfactory. At the close, Sir Hew Dalrymple, Bart. (president), thanked Mr. Bates and the members of the Society, for the very enjoyable evening they had spent.

NORTH SHIELDS.—A performance of Handel's Theodora was given in the Saville-street Methodist Chapel, on the 14th ult. The soloists were Miss Smith (soprano), Mrs. Palmer and Master Walton (contralto), Mr. Hickman (tenor), and Mr. Moor (bass), and the choruses were excellently sung by an amateur choir of about forty voices. The audience was large, and the appreciation of this little-known work was shown by frequent applause. Mr. Robert Potts presided at the organ.

NORWICH.—The first Concert this season of the Norfolk and Norwich Musical Union was given in St. Andrew's Hall, on Thursday evening, the 17th ult., under the conductorship of Dr. Bunnett. The principal artists engaged were Miss Marie Duval (soprano), Mr. Minns (tenor), and Mr. Smith (bass). The performance commenced with Henry Smart's Cantata, The Bride of Dunkerron, which was performed in a manner that reflected the highest credit upon all. The second part included Haydn's Overture in D; a part-song composed by Dr. Bunnett; and a pianoforte solo (concerto in E Flat—Weber), well played by Mr. Arthur Bunnett. Mendelssohn's Ave Maria, was exquisitely sung by Miss Duval, and the chorus for female voices was well rendered by the ladies of the Union. Mr. Wilkins led the band, and Mr. Walter Lain presided at the organ.

NOTTINGHAM.—The Choral Association gave its first public Concert on the 4th ult., in the Lecture-hall of the Mechanics' Institute. The principal vocalists were Miss Julia Jones (soprano), Madame Whitaker (contralto), Mr. S. Pollard (tenor), and Mr. Adolphus Phillips (bass). Mr. D. W. Cartwright conducted. The programme was divided into two parts, the first being exclusively devoted to sacred music, the main feature of which was a selection from Mendelssohn's Elijah. The choral parts were well rendered, and Mr. Phillips and Madame Whitaker were particularly effective in their respective solos. The second part of the programme opened with R. Aspa's Cantata, The Gipsies.

ORSETT.—The annual Concert of the Orsett Choral Society was given at the Institute, on the 10th ult., before a large and appreciative audience. The band and choir numbered about fifty performers, and under the able direction of Mr. Henry Regaldi, the conductor of the Society, an excellent programme—the first part of which was sacred, and the second secular—was most effectively rendered. The solo vocalists were Mrs. Bridge, Miss Pocklington, Miss E. Taylor, Mrs. Littlehales, the Rev. G. C. Robinson, and Mr. Field, all of whom were highly successful. The execution of the choral music reflected much credit upon the exertions of Mr. Regaldi.

PAISLEY.—On Wednesday evening, the 9th ult., Haydn's Oratorio The Seasons, was given by the Paisley Tonic Sol-Fa Institute. The solo singers were Miss Jose Sherrington (soprano), Mr. Nelson Varley (tenor), and Mr. Whitney (bass). Mr. John Armour Brown conducted. Mr. Cole led the band, and Mr. Pattinson rendered good service at the organ.

PLYMOUTH.—Mr. R. Smith lectured at the Athenæum on Thursday evening, the 10th ult., on the quality (timbre) of musical sounds. He commenced by showing the practical importance of the subject by an allusion to the great value of certain violins—those by Amati and Stradiuarius, for instance, as compared with ordinary ones, and to the immense difference in the estimation of the public of various singers. Shewing then that sound was only the result of motion or vibration in the air, the lecturer proceeded to demonstrate that the difference in the voices of singers arose from the different mechanical effect which each had in producing alterations in the atmospheric pressure upon the drum of the ear. The motions of a pendulum were briefly analysed, and an analogy drawn between its movements and those of the tuning-fork, which was found to produce the simple or elementary tone, of which others were compounded by the blending together of several such simple tones of different pitches and intensities, as in the mutation stops of the organ. A method of graphically representing to the eye the differing forms of motion by means of curves generated by rectangular co-ordinates of time and displacement of time and pressure, was explained by the lecturer, illustrated by numerous diagrams, shewing the curves answering to the different qualities of tone. The subject of harmonics or overtones was also treated of, and it was shewn that although many musical instruments possess what is known as the harmonic series, such is by no means always the case, and several exceptions were mentioned. It was proved that the approximation to the harmonic series by the string of a pianoforte depended upon the tension being very great in proportion to the transverse rigidity. Hence the necessity of such great strength in the construction of those instruments. An interesting discussion on the paper followed.

RICHMOND.—Handel's Judas Maccabæus was very successfully performed at the Star and Garter Hotel, on Monday, the 7th ult. Madame Edith Wynne's rendering of "From mighty Kings," and "Come, ever smiling liberty," was highly appreciated. Miss Warwick sustained the contralto music and received great applause for her singing of "Father of Heaven." Mr. A. L. Fryer, who, at a very short notice, took the place of Mr. Edward Lloyd, absent from indisposition, rendered the airs "Call forth thy powers" and "Sound an alarm" most effectively. Mr. Miles Bennett sang the bass airs "Arm, arm ye Brave" and "Rejoice, O Judah," very artistically. The choruses were well given by a portion of Mr. W. Carter's choir, that gentleman conducting. Mr. Bending presided at the pianoforte.

ROYSTON.—The annual meeting of the Amateur Musical Society was held in the Institute, on Monday evening, the 7th ult. The Rev. R. Shaen presided. The report stated that the music performed during the year consisted of selections from Handel's Oratorios, Judas Maccabæus and Samson, and Sterndale Bennett's May Queen, also twenty-three vocal and instrumental pieces by various composers. The financial statement was as follows:—receipts, £60 4s.; expenditure, £68 1s. 10d.; showing a deficiency of £7 17s. 10d. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded to the conductor and secretary for their services during the past year, and also to the chairman, after which the meeting closed, and the members commenced their first practice from Mendelssohn's Oratorio, Elijah.

Sowerby Bridge.—On Thursday, the 10th ult., Messrs. J. B. Eastwood and H. Waddington gave their first concert in the Town Hall, with Miss Tomlinson (soprano), of Leeds, Mr. J. B. Eastwood (tenor), of Sowerby Bridge, Mr. Thornton Wood (bass), of Bradford. Mr. J. Bates (solo violin), of Sowerby Bridge, Mr. P. Bower (solo euphonium), of Queensbury, and an efficient orchestra. A good selection of vocal music was given, and solos were played by Messrs. Bates and Bower. The band performed several overtures, selections, &c., in a manner which reflected great credit on Mr. Waddington, the conductor. Mr. Horner presided at the piano.

Stone.—Mr. Gundry gave a Concert at the Town Hall, on Wednesday evening, the 9th inst., when the following artists were engaged:—Madame Clara Suter, Madame Alice Barnett, Mr. Wallace Wells, Mr. Henry Pyatt, Mr. T. Harper (solo Trumpet), and Mr. Arthur H. Jackson, R.A.M., (Pianoforte).

Christian was much applauded in Gounod's Nazareth. Mr. Gower's rendering of Beethoven's "Moonlight" Sonata was all that could be desired. There was a large and fashionable audience.

Wakefield.—The second of the series of classical chamber Concerts, promoted by Miss Fitton, was given on the 4th ult., in the Music Saloon, and fully sustained the reputation for artistic selection and masterly performance of a high-class programme, which had been so deservedly earned on the previous occasion. Beethoven's Trio in C minor, for pianoforte. violin, and violoncello was well given by Messrs. R. S. Burton, Sykes, and Weston. The other artists were Miss Wood, and Messrs. Acomb and Bowling.

Beethoven's trio in G major, for piano, violin, and violoncello, excellently played by Madame Norman Neruda, Mr. Charles Hallé, and Monsieur Vieuxtemps, and a violin solo, a Fantasia on Der Freischütz, by Madame Norman Neruda, accompanied by Mr. Hallé, were features in the programme. A new part-song, composed by Mr. Alfred R. Gaul, of Birmingham, "The Silent Land," was well sung by the choir. Mr. Charles Hallé played a pianoforte solo—Nocturne in D flat, and "Wanderer's Song" (Chopin), and a "Hunting Piece" (Rheinberger), so brilliantly that an encore was elicited. Mdlle. Clelland was the vocalist, and was highly appreciated in all her solos. Schumann's "Gipsy Life" well sung by the choir, brought the programme to a termination. Mr. W. C. Stockley conducted.

Windsor.—Mr. O. Christian gave a Concert in the Town Hall on the 15th ult., which was well patronised. Hancock, "The soft southern breeze," from Barnby's Rebekah, sung by Mr. Pearson, and encored, "I rejoice in my youth," from G. A. (To be continued.)

The grand works which Handel produced under the title of Anthems, during the time he was chapel-master to the Duke of Chandos at Cannons, are more worthy to be ranked as Cantatas, consisting, as they do, of several movements—instrumental and vocal—constructed upon the largest scale. The size and importance of these works may be more accurately estimated when it is stated that the twelve anthems, with two Te Deums, contain no less than eleven overtures, thirty-two solos, six duets, one trio, one quartett, and forty-seven choruses. That these works have been unjustly neglected there can hardly be a doubt, for the testimony of all those who have made acquaintance with them goes to prove they are among the finest inspirations of the great master. Busby, an early historian of Handel, says, "It is forty years since I heard them, and my ear still retains the impression of their charm, and my mind of their grandeur."

These facts, together with the pressing entreaties of many musicians, have induced Messrs. NOVELLO, EWER and Co. to publish an edition of these works separately, in score and parts; and, that they should have the advantage of the improvements which have taken place in orchestral colouring, Mr. Silas has been engaged to amplify the score by the addition of the modern instruments now in general use. It is hoped that these works will prove a boon to those musical societies—the number of which is increasing almost daily—where music of a high class and moderate difficulty is required.

THE GAUNTLETT FUND.

THE sad circumstances connected with the sudden death of the late HENRY JOHN GAUNTLETT, Mus. Doc., the eminent Composer and Organist, have induced some of his friends to raise a Fund for his Widow and Family, who are, they regret to say, left entirely unprovided for. Acknowledgment has been made in the several Notices of his Life, which have appeared in the leading public prints, of the valuable services he rendered in the cause of art generally, and more especially that of Church Music. To Dr. Gauntlett we owe most of the improvements in the construction of Organs which have been carried out during the last 40 years.

AGENTS REQUIRED IN EVERY TOWN FOR

THE NEW PEDAL ATTACHMENT FOR PIANOFORTES.

MR. J. HAMILTON begs to inform Organists, Organ Students and others, that his invention for attaching Pedals to Pianofortes is meeting with great success and is much approved of, as the subjoined testimonials will show. The new action is entirely noiseless, and its simplicity and cheapness must ultimately supersede the cumbrous, expensive, and rattling organ action as usually applied. It can easily be attached to a pianoforte, as it is sent complete, with printed instructions "How to attach." The pedals are manufactured of well-seasoned hard wood, and are similar in scale and compass to the pedals made for organs of the present day.

A set of Radiating and Concave Pedals (30 notes, C to F), with action, price £5 5s. Or Straight Pedal Board, with action, price £4 4s.

TESTIMONIALS.

Claremont Villa, Mansfield, Notts, January 31st, 1876.

Sir,—I am very pleased with the Pedals and Action, which, by the aid of your printed instructions, I have attached to my Pianoforte. It all answers exceedingly well, and good pedal practice can be got at a small outlay. I hope your pedals will be universally adopted.

I am, yours truly,
ARTHUR MARCHANT,
Organist and Choirmaster, St. John's Church.

To Mr. J. Hamilton, Bristol.

I am, yours truly,
J. G. SMITH,
Late Private Organist of Tyntesfield.

ORGAN-TONED HARMONIUMS.

W. HATTERSLEY & CO.'S CELEBRATED ORGAN-TONED HARMONIUMS, which for Durability, Sweetness of Tone, and Rapidity of Touch, are unequalled by any other maker.

These splendid instruments are manufactured only by W. Hattersley & Co., with improved sound board, in double veneered cases, and from well-seasoned material, and have been tried side by side with the best English, American, French, and German Harmoniums, and have been pronounced to be far better both in quality of tone, variety in the stops, repetition in touch, and predominance of the treble over the bass. The large instruments, with double action, and several other improvements, are nearer to the organ than anything yet made.

W. H. & Co. have now enlarged their Manufactory and increased their hands, so that they may be able to keep up to the demand, which has been so pressing of late.

REMINISCENCES OF C. M. VON WEBER AND ROSSINI.

BY MAX MARIA VON WEBER.

(Translated, by special permission of the Author, from the "Deutsche Rundschau.")

I had completed my father's biography. During ten years, in the silent hours of night, I had lived over again another life by the side of my own—that of my father. It was a wondrous time—a time so strange as to almost make me believe in the possibility of citing spirits from the other world. When late in the evening I had laid aside my onerous official work, and had settled down before the desk in my little study wherein the material for this precious task lay piled up almost to the ceiling—lo! how they would swarm out, those kindly spirits, from countless faded letters, from enormous heaps of time-worn journals, from ancient, mysteriously-sounding pianofortes and guitars—so real, so full of life, that, in the delusion of my senses, the living and the dead would appear mixed up together. There they were, these old gentlemen with dandy-swords and bob-wigs, in abbés' robes and violet stockings, in court uniforms and hair-bags; these grave or smiling faces with violins, violoncellos, conductors' bâtons, and zithers; and these ladies, too, with rosy cheeks, their hair fashioned à la "Victime" or "Titus," wearing tight dresses with "Gigot" sleeves, and with rolls of music in their hands, women with sunny eyes and gaily ringing voices—and all these assembled round the small pale man seated in their midst by the piano.

Time had fulfilled its purgatorial office. The heated sympathies and antipathies of the days when politics were still confined to the care of diplomatists, and Art alone was free to rouse the heart to stormy emotions, had cooled down. I comprehended, abstractedly, why many of the chief actors of that bygone period had misunderstood and persecuted one another, but I could no longer share with them their hatred or their love; so that some even among those whom my father had loathed and despised during life had become great and attractive in my eyes. The canonization of remarkable men is just now the fashion. Every laurel-wreath is converted into a saintly nimbus, which is made to fit the brow of even a Tiberius or a Nero. But, for all that, these great artists have hated and despised and abused one another heartily, and their mutual feelings of aversion were the more intense, the more decidedly original their artistic organization had been. "The critic must look to all sides," Weber had often exclaimed; "the creative artist, however, must say, 'Mine alone is the true art,' or he will never be worth much." Thus Beethoven could call the composer of "Freischütz" a "tender mannikin," and the latter write a parody on the "Eroica." The poet Tieck could designate "Freischütz" as the most unmusical noise which was ever let loose on the stage; Andræas Romberg could crack his jokes upon Beethoven's quartets, calling them "motley stuff," and Spohr consider the "Ninth Symphony" in questionable taste; Vogler, after hearing Poissl's "Athalia," could find "Don Giovanni" no longer suitable to his palate; and Zelter declare "Euryanthe" not worth the amount of perspiration it had cost its author. All this was natural and a matter of course. But most natural of all was that, in the eyes of Weber, Rossini should appear as the Lucifer in Music—he, the most beautiful originally, but also the most fallen of angels. "He can do everything, and the good amongst it," he had exclaimed, after hearing the second act of "Mosè;" "only this Satan doesn't care to do it!"

Ever since his genius had attained its maturity, Weber had fought against the Italians. He was the first to challenge them, as their equal, to do battle with the purely Germanic spirit on the operatic stage. They hated one another passionately, blindly, unjustly; like Guelfs and Ghibellines, like the Germanic and the Latin elements. And in this strife with the Italians he had fought single-handed against a mighty host. His straightforward ways had been opposed by the crooked paths of intrigue, his unassuming modesty by dazzling splendour; and but too often he had been compelled, spite of his enthusiasm for the cause he represented, to leave the field in the possession of his enemies. At Berlin they had pitted against the poetic forest-life of his "Freischütz," the "Napoleon of Music," Spontini, with the artillery of his "Olympia." At Dresden, where Weber had with so much fostering care, with so much self-sacrificing anxiety, endeavoured to raise and develope the germs of a national Music-drama—the fame acquired of old by the Italian opera, the sneers of the ultra-conservative court party, and withal the desire to imitate foreign fashions, were grave obstacles in the way of accomplishing his task. His honest strivings were frustrated by the intrigues of his Italian colleagues who, although greatly his inferiors in talent, basked in the sunshine of the royal favour, while the mortification of seeing others preferred—foreigners, whose shallow productions are, with their name, now long forgotten—tended to accelerate the end of his already fast-sinking life. No wonder, therefore, if upon his arriving at Vienna, accompanied by the child of his sorrow, the best of his works, "Euryanthe," and finding there his arch-enemy the Italian, more dazzling, more brilliant, more bewitching than ever, firmly established in the hearts and minds of all—his heart was ready to burst with anger and indignation at a worship akin, in his estimation, to that of Baal. Nor was it here a rigid "Trumpet-General" like Spontini, a talentless back-biter like Morlacchi, whose muse he had to encounter; it was a master equal to himself in genius, the chosen favourite, moreover, of the gods—it was Rossini. Behold the brilliant staff by which the young commander-in-chief is surrounded in his progress; warriors of the first order press in the forefront of that glittering phalanx, ready to convert all his battles into as many victories! Never before or after has the theatre by the Kärntnerthor united within its walls an operatic troupe to be at all compared with that which, in the year 1823, Barbaja, the shrewd manager, introduced to the astonished gaze of the Viennese public. The lustre of every single star forming this memorable constellation has afterwards sufficed to ensure brilliancy and prosperity to an operatic undertaking. There were, in the first place, Mdme. Rossini herself (Rossini-Colbran); the most metallic of basses, Lablache and Ambrogi; the most golden of tenors, Cicimarra, Donzelli, and David; the most silver-voiced of sopranos, Fodor-Mainville; the bell-like alto, Comelli-Rubini; the enrapturing baritone, Nozzari: all these delightful songsters, assembled together as by a miracle under one roof, formed an ensemble which would have exalted the most trivial production. And here it was Rossini who filled the throats of these rare artists with his fascinating melodies. And had not Weber himself, in spite of his wrath, experienced the charm to such a degree that, during a performance of "Cenerentola," after listening to a duet between Ambrogi and Lablache, he abruptly quitted the house, with the furious exclamation—"Now I shall run away; this stuff begins to please me too!" His heart drew together in his bosom, and ever and again he was fain to recall the confiding passage in his new work, "I trust in God and in my Euryanth'" when casting his eyes over the battle array with which he was to face this "army of archangels," as he himself called it. To represent the parts of Eglantine, Adolar, and Lysiart, he had the efficient but somewhat worn singer Grünbaum, the excellent but weak tenor Haizinger, the capital but rather vulgar bass, Forti. But who was there for the heroine herself, Euryanthe? Mdme. Ungher-Sabatier, who may have been in Weber's mind when writing the part, was not to be procured. There was no choice, then, but to run a risk by placing it in the hands of Henriette Sontag, then barely nineteen years of age. And only two years before Weber had pronounced this gifted girl to be "still a bit of a goose;" while, but a few months back, Mdme. Fodor-Mainville, when hearing her sing the part of Amazili in Spontini's opera, had exclaimed—"This little German can do nothing yet!" But there was no alternative; and the result proved a success. All the performers manifested their enthusiasm and affection for Weber; the true aristocracy of minds, the independent Press, headed by the genial Kanne, were on his side. The better part of the Vienna public, moreover, longed for the more powerful emotions aroused by a truly great German work, heartily tired as they were of the many insipid imitations of "Der Freischütz," such as Weigl's "Eiserne Pforte," and Kreutzer's "Libussa." Had not the "grey lion of Baden" himself (Beethoven) at one of his fitful visits to Stainer's music-shop remarked, "There is much need for a good German opera; I wish Weber success." And yet, already after the first few rehearsals the latter could not deceive himself as to the contrast of colours his work would exhibit, as compared with the popular Italian productions of the day. In creating his new work, the chaste conception of his thoroughly German genius, produced under great anxiety of mind by German earnestness and German perseverance, he had spent his very life's blood—he had given the best he had to give. For this very reason, however, the impression produced on seeing this work now at last on the stage would, in comparison with the glowing, glittering, merrymaking, effervescing, and enticing creations of the "Barber of Seville," of "Othello," "Gazza Ladra," "Matrimonio segreto," and "Donna del Lago," be like the effect of the dreamy poetry of a moonlight night as contrasted with the sunny day. Men of specifically German organization, men of concentrated and intense feeling, paid homage to the German master; the Viennese public at large, whose tastes—directed now, as then, chiefly to scenic and rhetorical effects in art—caused them to be attracted, like the moth, to the glaring light, forsook the serious German work already at its third performance, while even before the arrival of Barbaja's troupe every seat in his theatre had been engaged in advance for as many as twenty performances. It is but small comfort to think that the light by which the public had been thus attracted was really a beautiful and lustrous one.

Weber possessed a keen sense of the advantages waiting upon personal beauty, even in man. On one occasion, while travelling with the clarionet-virtuoso Bärmann, a man handsome and well-formed, to whom a distinguished reception was everywhere accorded, both at hotels and in society, Weber remarked to him: "This is not surprising; the creator in his goodness has fixed a letter of recommendation on your exterior, whilst I carry it only in my pocket." A glance at his own small, fragile figure, therefore, would often provoke in him a melancholy humour. Thus, when for the first time he donned his court uniform as capellmeister at Dresden, he piteously exclaimed, "Dear me, my calves would compare favourably with those of the finest butcher-dog!" And only a few days previous to his death he wrote to his wife, "I shrink together like a dried plum. To shave my face smoothly will henceforward be a puzzle to me." Although his sterling heart was a stranger to envious feelings, it would yet be painfully touched if, careful in his toilet as he was, he would glance at his figure in the glass, previous to a rehearsal, and find therein reflected the pale, spiritualised face of the German thinker, the weary eyes behind the strong spectacles, the narrow shoulders and almost transparent hands; and would then meet at the opera-house his brilliant rival, upon whose cradle Apollo and the Graces had with equal liberality showered their precious gifts. Broad-shouldered, with elastic step, his splendid head erect, orders upon his proud breast, this man confronted him, the same who but a few years previously had, along with his sweet melodies, won the hearts of the most beautiful women of Italy, certain of victory wherever he went. And yet, strange to say, there was a similarity in the features of the two great masters, in so far as sickness and exuberant health, ingenious work and spontaneous creating, Germany and Italy, in short, can be at all likened to one another. This outward resemblance in the physiognomy of the two men may, however, be psychologically established also. Was not Weber exactly to Germany what Rossini was to Italy? The congeniality of their minds to their respective native countries forms an exact parallel, which would seem to account for the similarity in their features. The fact that the existing antipathy between Weber and Rossini, founded as it was alike on homogeneous and heterogeneous elements, had taken a less violent form with the latter may be explained by a feeling of generosity on the part of the more fortunate. With Weber, on the other hand, the aversion had reached its culminating point after the encounter in the arena at Vienna, gradually losing its intensity in proportion as his bodily weakness increased, so that in time he could even bring himself to admit the melodiousness of "Il Barbiere." Passing through Paris, on his way to England, he resolved to pay a visit to the composer. A previous visit to Cherubini, for whom he always entertained the highest admiration, gave him strength for this effort, and, perhaps, he was actuated also by a desire to make his peace with everyone in this world while there was yet time. Rossini, the man of the world, who at an interview with Beethoven at Baden, near Vienna, had ostentatiously bent his knee before the great master, received Weber with signs of homage, not omitting at parting to accompany the "maëstro del franco arciero" to the foot of the stairs, whereby the latter, whom want of breath compelled to rest at every step, was fain to lean upon the gladly-profferred arm of his former enemy.

Forty years had gone by, time had reduced the flames of those passions to ashes. To me they had already become historical. But the picture of the grand immediate past of German musical art had, aided by the researches upon which I had been so recently engaged, assumed in my mind a degree of life and distinctness which surrounded the few remaining representatives of that period with a halo of glory. Above all, Rossini. And even though he had contended with my father—they were champions worthy of each other's steel, and both had been in the right. Rossini, in my eyes, had become identified with the graceful and the sweet sensual charms in music. When, therefore, in the spring of 1865 I had occasion to make a prolonged stay at Paris, with the impression still on mind of the double life I had lived and the spirits I had cited, I felt almost as if the express train were to convey me, not some hundreds of miles onward, but forty years back into the golden time of music; into the very centre of its whole delightful tone-atmosphere. I fancied as if, round its still living heroes, the great departed would move visibly in life and sunshine who had hitherto yielded only to my entreating call to enfold their presence to me in the silence of night. Those hands with which Rossini, Auber, Caraffa pressed mine, had assisted in creating that remarkable epoch, had on their part laid in those of Beethoven, Schubert, and my father's; thus establishing complete "rapport" between myself and them. On the third day after my arrival, the Prefét, M. Haussmann, apologised during dinner to General Morin for having been unable to keep an appointment he had made with the latter. "I had some very distinguished guests," said he; "guess who they were." The General mentioned some very aristocratic names. "Go up higher," replied Haussmann. "Well, then—Prince Napoleon." "Higher still," cried Haussmann. "Indeed," said the General, laughing, "their Imperial Majesties could not have been with you, or else the papers would know it." "Not the majesty of rank, but that of genius," replied Haussmann with animation; "it was Rossini, Auber, and Morse" (inventor of the telegraphic writing-apparatus). "A la bonheur," respectfully saluted the most distinguished engineer of France. Much impressed with the homage thus rendered to genius, so characteristic of the French character, I at once wrote to Rossini to be permitted to visit him, and directly after received a note from his wife, inviting, in the most amiable terms, "the son of the great master." I have never known embarrassment in presence of the great of this world; but, mounting the gloomy staircase at No. 2, Rue de la Chaussée d'Antin, on the 21st of March, 1865, I felt my heart beating. I was at once admitted, and, passing through a spacious but somewhat sombre antechamber, I was ushered into Rossini's study. He rose from behind a huge mass of papers piled upon a table, and quickly walked towards me: very different in appearance to the picture I had conceived of him, the hero of art and of the fair sex—small of stature, corpulent, yet swift in his movements. I was deeply impressed. This was Rossini; and yet—I verily believe my father would have looked like this if, in the full possession of health, he had reached his seventieth year. There were his forehead, his eyebrows, and, above all, the nose; quite different, however, the massive lower part of the face, and the full and decidedly plain, sensual mouth. With a smile which still reminded one of the "love-inspiring enchanter of Pesaro," he extended to me his hand. That was the hand which had written "Il Barbiere" and "Tell;" and never had I held a nobler one in mine. Involuntarily I inclined my head towards it, whereupon he clasped me in his arms, exclaiming—"Indeed, you are taller and stronger, but you are like your father, who was very ill when I last saw him." "If this be the case, I am fortunate enough to resemble you somewhat too," was my reply; "for the upper part of your face—the forehead especially—is like his." "Well, then," he retorted laughingly, "it would seem there is something musical in my features after all! Why do we appreciate great men only when we grow old and wise! And the worst of it is, they are then generally already gone. By this time I know that a work like 'Oberon' can never be written again. And if he were still alive, he would give me some credit too. We should, in fact, be old men both, and nothing more." And then he went on to relate, with an astonishing resource of memory, the particulars of Weber's visit at his house, upon the latter's death-journey to England. "He breathed heavily as I descended the stairs with him. I was obliged to assist him into his carriage—it was impossible he could have breathed in this manner much longer. But he did well to die early," he added with a truly French turn, "what am I good for? I amuse myself, but no longer anyone else." "Surely this is the result merely of your own free choice," I ventured to suggest, "otherwise the composer of 'Tell'"—— "Hush," he replied, with a melancholy wave of the hand, "let us talk no more about that! I am composing continually. Look at these shelves closely packed with manuscript; they have all been filled since "Tell." I publish nothing now, and write only because I cannot help it. If we were living among the ancients, I should have the consolation to know that all this would some day be burnt with me, as it is, it will have to find its way into the fire without." I expressed my satisfaction at seeing heaped upon his table the works of exclusively German masters: Beethoven, Gluck, Mozart. "The old composers," he replied eagerly, "only the old ones! They call M. Wagner a great genius. Maybe he is. I am quite sure, however, that I shall never comprehend him, should I reach the years of Noah. Nor would I entertain any doubt as to his genius, if only he would have the goodness to ventilate it in any other direction but that of music." (Just about that time the malicious observation had obtained currency, which Rossini had actually made after hearing the overture to "Tannhäuser:" "Si c'etait de la musique, ce serait horrible.") At parting, the veteran master requested my company at dinner on the following Saturday. "I shall cause something very confidential to be whispered into your ear," he said, "my new Spanish Romances, but you must not tell any one that you heard them!" On the occasion in question I found the master—who appeared to-day quite "en belle fourchette"—seated by the chimney with the aged Caraffa, in the most pleasant of humours, and gravely discussing the manner in which certain Sicilian mushrooms, of which we were to partake, should be prepared. I will not decide whether Rossini's or Caraffa's mouth was the more sensual of the two, but I could not refrain from smiling when I called to mind that the latter's thick lips had once sung the love-message "to Alexis," and had "kissed the rose." The eyes of both old gentlemen sparkled during their "piquante" conversation. A small and select company soon assembled. Among them were the vivacious and sympathetic Gustave Doré, looking with his moustache and chin-beard, his round and rosy face, like a German student; the Professor of physical science, Davy Marié, and Madame Ludre, whose clever lectures on an universal language founded on the denomination of the musical scale, do re mi, &c., invented by her, had made her one of the wonders of the day. At last the lady of the house herself made her appearance, somewhat preoccupied, it seemed, with the ultimate fate of the Italian mushrooms in the kitchen. I had the honour to conduct the lady—an active little woman, in whose features the sound materialism of her husband appeared even more marked—to the table. Never before has it been my share to witness the consumption, with such all-absorbing devotion, and in such orthodox style, according to the ritual of their native countries, of such an extraordinary variety of dishes characteristic of the culinary art of all nations. Rossini himself, perfectly familiar as he was with all the various eating manipulations required, appeared highly amused at the helplessness displayed by most of us in dealing with the Haché concealed in the hollow of bones from Catania, with the uncomfortable length of the vermicelli from Naples, and the wormlike muscles from Hyères. Every one of these dishes was accompanied by a corresponding beverage, as decidedly national as it was, generally, most abominable. As the gem of the dinner, the Sicilian mushrooms, were approaching the state of perfection in the kitchen, the fact was announced to the lady of the house. Thereupon, at her bidding, the doors were thrown open, and for a while the adepts of table wisdom sat with their eyes closed in a state of trance, eagerly exposing their noses to the odour proceeding from the kitchen, until the miracle itself—which, ignorant savage that I was, tasted to me very much like common mushrooms—made its appearance on the table, to be despatched amidst befitting silence—or rather, I should say, "discussed" on critical tongue and cunning palate. During dinner, whenever the conversation threatened to stray away from the "Physiologie du goût," our host would lead it back upon the science of Brillat-Savarin; and it was only when dessert was being served that other interests besides those connected with the palate were allowed to prevail. The master's plump figure fairly shook with laughter when Davy Marié related the malicious manner—so characteristic of Le Verrier—in which the latter had introduced the discoverer of Brome to the Academy. "Voilá, Monsieur Bálàrd," he had said, "qui a été découvert par le brome." After dinner, evening guests poured in—savants, beautiful women, artists of both sexes; a brilliant, bustling, chatting crowd. The worship of genius, which so much redounds to the honour of the French, now had in it something of the Fetish idolatry; so fanatic on one side and so apathetic on the part of the art-hero, who, sitting in his arm-chair, was calmly undergoing the process of digestion. There was something very droll in all this even to me, who stood so entirely under the immediate influence of his immortal presence. I fancy he must have been heartily weary of the constant genuflections, even of women, and the eternal "divino maëstro" and "immortale." "He might be envied, if he were a younger man," whispered Doré into my ear, as the master—with that graceful smile of his by which he magnetically attracted all hearts, and which, at times, could be mingled with an expression the most cunning Satyr would have envied him—had stolen a rose from the bosom of a beautiful girl, a pupil of the Conservatoire, and after pressing it to his lips had placed it in his button hole; or as afterwards he patted Mdlle. Frezzolini on her round shoulder, when she had sung those exquisite Romances, which I was not to speak about to any one. Whether they have afterwards been published I know not; certain it is, however, that since the Serenade in "Il Barbiere," nothing sweeter, nothing more impregnated with southern fragrance has flown from Rossini's pen. "She acted wisely," remarked Doré to me, when she had ended, "in singing only the notes which were there, much against her usual habit. Rossini cannot bear to hear his music 'embellished;' he can then be devilish angry. Patti herself has fared badly enough in this very room," he continued, in his pleasant manner. "She sang the air of Rosina from the 'Barbiere' with some endless 'fiorituras,' written for her by Strakosch, and which she executed in delightful manner. I noticed how vexed the maëstro was. When she had finished he applauded with unusual energy, exclaiming, 'Exquisite! masterly! a charming composition! And—may I ask what was it you have sung?' 'Indeed, maëstro,' replied Patti, 'how can you ask, it was, of course, the air from "Il Barbiere."' 'Ah! but not from my Barbiere,' he replied, smiling sarcastically, 'probably from the barbier stracochonné.'" It was impossible to convey the lesson with greater severity. This anecdote reminded me of a similar occurrence in the professional life of my father, which I could not but relate as being eminently characteristic of the proceedings of both masters in circumstances so similar. Wilhelmine Schröder-Devrient who, while a pupil of the famous singing-master, Mieksch, was subject occasionally to "Italian fits," had, during the general rehearsal of "Euryanthe" embellished the words "mein Adolar," in the air "Glöcklein im Thale," with elaborate flourishes, after the most approved manner. Weber immediately laid aside his bâton, and paused till she had ended; whereupon, removing the the little cap he generally wore in the orchestra, he slightly bowed to the singer on the stage saying, "Very beautiful, Minchen; very beautiful! But if I had wished it to be like that, depend upon it I would have written it down myself."

Some two years after this interesting evening, in the summer, I traced my steps to Passy, the suburb in which the villa was situate, which the town of Paris had either presented to Rossini or else placed at his disposal. I knew that he lived in Avenue Ingres, and believed the number to be 20. The front of all the villas being, however, concealed by shrubs and creeping plants, I could not discover the numbers. The glowing sun of August lay between the trees of the avenue, which was completely deserted. I cast my eye about for some one of the inhabitants whose appearance might warrant the hope that he would know something of Rossini. The only human being, however, which met my view was a simple ouvrier in his blue blouse, engaged in mending the road. I hailed him. "Friend, have the houses here in Passy no numbers?" "Whom do you seek?" he replied. "Monsieur Rossini." "Oh, ce nom vaut mieux qu'un numéro," he answered, touching his hat, and dropping his spade he continued, "I shall be proud to be permitted to open the door of Villa Rossini to you, sir." I felt my eyes getting hot by the display of this precious trait in the character of the French. Where, in any other country, is the street labourer who would instinctively raise his hand to his cap upon the mere mention of the name of Mozart or Goethe, like the Prussian soldier when speaking of his king!

I spent a lovely summer evening in the villa at Passy. The master was more serenely disposed than usual, only at rare intervals would the old fire flash across his face, or the Satyr glide through his words. Walking up and down his pretty garden he conversed softly and with exertion. He made me speak about my countrymen, R. Wagner and Schumann, and about the friend of his youth, Morlacchi. Repeatedly the shrill notes of the locomotive, passing through Passy station, interrupted our conversation, so that at last I exclaimed, "How painfully this most modern of all horrible sounds must visit your ears!" "You are mistaken in that," he replied, shaking his head, while a melancholy smile, such as I had never noticed in him before, passed over his features, "these sounds continually remind me of the golden days of my youth. Good heavens! how they have hissed my first operas, in 'Cenerentola,' and 'Torwaldo and Dorlisca.'" It was then mentioned that during the approaching season "Oberon" and "Euryanthe" were again to make their appearance on the Paris stage. "I should like you to hear, for once, how we French maltreat German music," said the great master, shaking me by the hand at parting, "Perhaps I might be induced once more, in company with Weber's son, to hear one of his father's operas." F. W.

The prospectus of the Royal Italian Opera for the present season is not very exciting. M. Capoul, who joins the Company for the first time, will strengthen the list of tenors; but a serious loss will be sustained in the baritone department by the secession of M. Faure. The names of several new vocalists are however given: but it seems doubtful whether one—Signor Gayarre, a tenor—will appear this season. Verdi's "Aida," Wagner's "Tannhaüser," Rossini's "Mosé in Egitto," and Donizetti's "L'Elisir d'Amore" are mentioned as probable revivals, with the singular announcement that "three at least" of these works will be produced. Knowing the influence of the vocalists in this establishment, we may give a pretty accurate guess as to the selection which will be made. The fact of making "advantageous changes," in an orchestra stated to be already "unrivalled," would at first appear to be a highly praiseworthy attempt to arrive at perfection; but knowing, as we do, that several eminent instrumentalists belonging to the band decline to bind themselves six nights a week to the Royal Italian Opera, the "advantageous" nature of the alterations about to be effected can only have reference to the management. The prospectus announces the 28th ult. as the opening night. Mr. Mapleson advertises that Her Majesty's Opera will commence at Drury Lane Theatre on the 25th inst., but his prospectus has not yet reached us.

The death of Signor Puzzi, which occurred, at an advanced age, during the past month, again draws our attention to the fact that of the well-known artists connected with the old King's Theatre, in the days when music was a mere aristocratic luxury, there are now but very few left. Signor Puzzi, in addition to holding a high position as solo horn-player at the fashionable lyrical establishment in the Haymarket, was an active agent in making engagements with foreign vocalists, one of whom—Mdlle. Toso—he not only brought over from Italy, but subsequently married. For many years Madame Puzzi's name has been more before the world than that of her husband; for her annual concerts have always been held in much esteem and liberally patronized.

News comes to us of a "Pianoforte Bee" recently given at the Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth; and we are also informed that a "novel idea" of the same kind has been announced by Mr. Stroud L. Cocks in the metropolis. We have no doubt that the custom of holding these public tests of progress in the various branches of the art will rapidly grow; but there is nothing "novel" in the idea, for assuredly the meetings organized by Mr. Willert Beale at the Crystal Palace were nothing but "Musical Bees" on an extensive scale. It would give us much pleasure to insert the long account forwarded to us of the Portsmouth gathering, did our space permit; but we may mention that the plan there adopted of giving such appropriate prizes as Schumann's pianoforte works, Beethoven's Sonatas, edited by Agnes Zimmermann, a fac-simile of Handel's manuscript of the "Messiah," Stainer and Barrett's "Dictionary of Musical Terms," and two volumes of Mozart's works, is one well worthy of imitation at similar meetings.

A society to protect us from our friends is scarcely one we should imagine to be a positive necessity; but the amicable relationship which has so long existed amongst composers, publishers, and executive artists has latterly been so disturbed by the doings of Mr. Harry Wall—an account of which was given in our last number—that meetings have taken place, and an Association formed called the "Vocal and Dramatic Artists' Protection Society," the object of which is to acquaint its subscribers with all the circumstances connected with the copyright of published works, so that no penalty can be unknowingly incurred by the performance of a composition in public. Such a Society must have the best wishes of those who believe that it is the duty of all who claim legal rights to take care that a knowledge of the existence of such rights is not systematically held back until the moment of enforcing them.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The interest of the Saturday concerts during the past month has, perhaps, been even above the average. So many works of importance have been brought forward that it will be impossible, within reasonable limits, to speak of them in the detail which they deserve. We must content ourselves with a few general remarks, and refer our readers to the columns of our weekly contemporaries for fuller information.

On February 26th, the special feature of the afternoon was the performance of Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm. This fine work had been previously given at Sydenham, but particular interest attached to it on the present occasion from the fact that the unpublished chorus which there is every reason to believe Mendelssohn intended as the finale was given at the end of the work, this being its first public hearing. It will be remembered that the printed score of the Psalm begins in the key of E flat and ends in G minor, a close, which however defensible on æsthetic grounds, is certainly unsatisfactory from a musical point of view. The new finale, which has been published by Novello & Co., in vocal score and separate chorus parts in the key of E flat, consists of a broad introduction and a spirited fugue; most of the material is taken from the earlier parts of the work. The words of this new chorus are taken from the fifth, sixth, and seventh verses of the Psalm; and it may perhaps have been a feeling that their re-introduction in this place was hardly felicitous, which induced the composer to suppress this chorus when preparing the work for publication.

On the following Saturday (March 4), Herr Joachim played Beethoven's violin concerto in his own unapproachable style. At the same concert his orchestral arrangement of Schubert's great Duo in C, Op. 140, was brought forward. We have no space here to enter into the discussion of the question how far such an arrangement is justifiable; suffice it to say that in its new form the work is far more enjoyable than in its original shape. Herr Joachim has performed his task most conscientiously, his arrangement (even in the details of the orchestration) being thoroughly in Schubert's spirit. The work was admirably performed, and very warmly received.

A Pianoforte Concerto, by the Russian composer, Tschaïkowsky, was the novelty on the 11th. This is a most interesting work, of decided originality and considerable power. The solo part, which is excessively difficult, was most admirably and artistically played by Mr. Dannreuther. We trust that the very decided success of this work may induce Mr. Manns next season to bring forward other compositions from the same pen. M. Tschaïkowsky has written three symphonies, besides other orchestral works; and, if they are at all equal to this concerto, the sooner we hear them the better.

Rubinstein's ballet music, from his opera, Feramors, requires no detailed notice. It consists of three dances and a wedding march. The first and second numbers are very pretty, especially the latter; the third and fourth are much weaker. The style of the whole is rather that of the light French opera than of the new German school to which most of Rubinstein's compositions belong.

Last Saturday, the 25th, besides a very pleasing overture to "Euterpe" by the late Charles Edward Horsley, and two songs from the same pen, Beethoven's choral symphony was given. The performance was, as regards the instrumental part, one of the finest ever heard, even under Mr. Manns. The choral portion, was, of course, less perfect; but the difficulties of the music are so great that this is not to be wondered at: and the vocal performances may at least be fairly called satisfactory. The solo music was well sung by Mdlle. Johanna Levier, Miss Annie Butterworth, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Signor Foli.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The first Concert of this Society for the present season was given at St. James's Hall on the 23rd ult., before a large audience. The programme, although presenting no novelty, was in the highest degree interesting, Schumann's Symphony in C (No. 2) being so finely rendered throughout as to elicit the warmest marks of admiration; the "Scherzo," with its two characteristic and melodious Trios, fairly exciting the hearers to almost a frenzy of delight. Madame Schumann's performance of Beethoven's pianoforte Concerto in G was, in every respect, so absolutely perfect as to disarm criticism. Such an intellectual grasp of the composer's meaning, combined with a mastery over executive difficulties rarely exhibited, even by this great artist, on former occasions, gave to the audience that effect of extempore playing which, save in Mendelssohn,—whose rendering of the same Concerto at the same Society's Concert is distinctly in our recollection—we have never before remarked. The double recall of the pianist after her retirement from the platform, will, we hope, convince her how thoroughly such a manifestation of her exceptional gifts is appreciated in musical England. The vocalists were Mdlle. Ida Corani and Signor Pollione Ronzi, the latter a tenor from La Scala, Milan, with a somewhat thin and not very pleasing voice. Mr. Cusins, who was enthusiastically received on his entrance into the orchestra, conducted with much skill and judgment.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

An orchestral concert was given by the students of this Institution, at St. James's Hall, on the 18th ult., before a large and most appreciative audience. The excellence of the pianoforte instruction was strikingly displayed by Mr. Morton, in the first movement of Rubinstein's Concerto in D minor; Miss Thurgood, in the first movement of Beethoven's Concerto in E flat; Miss Borton, in the first movement of Sir Sterndale Bennett's Concerto in F minor; and Mr. Matthay, in Schumann's Concert Allegro in D minor (Op. 134), all these clever and highly promising young pupils being called forward at the conclusion of their performance and warmly greeted. Miss Gabrielle Vaillant's rendering of Beethoven's Romance in G, for violin, was remarkable, not only for purity of tone, but for an intelligent perception of the composer's intention scarcely to be expected from a student. Only one composition by a pupil was given—an Overture in C minor, by Miss Oliveria Prescott—the clearness of writing and delicacy of instrumentation in which, however, proved that good judgment had been exercised in selecting it as a representative work. It was perhaps somewhat ambitious to attempt the second part of Handel's "Belshazzar;" but the result must have been highly gratifying to the many professors present, under whose direction the several parts had been studied. The choir was steady and well in tune throughout, the opening chorus, "See, from his post Euphrates flies," being especially worthy of praise. The solo parts were entrusted to Miss Kate Brand, Miss Barkley, Mr. Seligmann and Mr. Gordon Gooch, all of whom acquitted themselves of their difficult task with much credit, Miss Kate Brand eliciting well deserved applause for her refined interpretation of the air, "Regard, O son, my flowing tears," and Mr. Gordon Gooch displaying a good voice and method in the trying recitative, in which Daniel expounds the oracle to Belshazzar. Miss Annie Butterworth sang Stradella's song, "Pieta, signore," with good expression. Handel's aria, "Nasce al Bosco," gave an opportunity for Mr. Eugene Boutenopp, to evidence the possession of an excellent voice; and Miss Jessie Jones, who although still a student, is already winning honours out of the Academy, gave "Hear ye, Israel," (from "Elijah") so admirably as to keep the majority of the audience in their seats (notwithstanding its being the last item in the programme), the following chorus, "Be not afraid," being, in consequence, heard without the usual interruptions at the conclusion of a concert. The performance was ably conducted by Mr. Walter Macfarren.

MR. HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR.

The principal feature in the programme of the concert on the 9th ult., was the performance of Mendelssohn's music to "Antigone," which was rendered additionally attractive by Mrs. Stirling's intelligent reading of the text, or rather that portion of it which was necessary to connect the several pieces of music. The choruses were admirably sung, so well indeed as to excite more than the usual amount of interest with the audience, the result being that, much to the detriment of the work, the "Hymn to Bacchus" and the quartet, "O Eros," were re-demanded. In the second part of the concert Mendelssohn's "Vintage Song" (finely sung by the choir) was encored, and Herr Joachim elicited the most enthusiastic marks of approbation by one of the finest interpretations of Beethoven's Violin Concerto we ever heard. Mr. Leslie conducted with his accustomed care and judgment.

MR. WALTER BACHE'S CONCERT.

The annual concert of Mr. Bache has always a claim upon the attention of those even who disagree with the musical tenets he so earnestly advocates. Franz Liszt is to him a prophet whose teachings are so utterly disregarded in this country that, not only as his pupil, but as a warm disciple of his views on the art, he feels it a sacred duty from time to time to present those works of his master before an English public which he firmly believes only require to be more generally known to receive that appreciation which their merits entitle them to. Whether the "Legend of St. Elizabeth," which was the composition brought forward on the occasion under notice, will raise or lower the Abbé's reputation with the majority of those who attended the performance we cannot say; but certainly the execution of the work, especially in the choral portions, was everything that could be wished. For ourselves, we confess that with every desire to throw aside our preconceived notions of the necessity of coherence of design and development of leading themes, whether original or appropriated, the sense of weariness which oppressed us was such as we never before experienced, even in listening to the severest specimens of the "music of the future"—even indeed to the minor compositions of Liszt himself. When we find a composer earnestly groping after an idea we at least feel a sympathy with him in his search; but the Abbé Liszt, so far from attempting such a task, evidently trusts to the noble independence of his genius, and throws himself into his work with a fixed conviction that the negation of an old faith is a faith in itself. True to his creed, therefore, the "Legend of St. Elizabeth" contains chiefly those bits of borrowed melody which he admits into his composition to give it a local colouring. These are a Gregorian phrase—treated as a Gregorian phrase never was treated before—and some Hungarian tunes, which, although not in themselves very attractive, seemed welcome as a contrast with their surroundings. Amongst the choral music which relieved the general dulness of the work may be cited the "Chorus of Children," commencing with a pleasing and characteristic theme, which is followed by a series of modulations, by no means suggestive of juvenility, the "Crusaders' Chorus," the "Chorus of the Poor," a "Chorus of Angels," and a large portion of the "Interment" scene, which contains in our opinion, the most dramatic music in the Oratorio. The dream of Elizabeth is an effective solo, with here and there some melodious phrases which seem to have crept into the piece by accident; but we are bound to confess that they are not allowed to dwell upon the ear long enough to cause any feeling of satisfaction. A duet between Elizabeth and Ludwig, "Him we worship," must also be mentioned in terms of commendation, the vocal parts being written with more care and judgment than we might expect from one who sets at defiance so many of the acknowledged rules of art. Much of the instrumentation, especially in combination with the voices, is extremely clever, and other portions are simply ugly, the constant straining after originality resulting too often in an eccentricity bordering upon caricature. We have already said that the choir was excellent throughout this exacting work, and have now to add that the band, ably led by Mr. Deichmann, was equally good. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Osgood, (who sang the part of Elizabeth with a purity of intonation and dramatic power deserving of every praise), Signor Federici, Messrs. Thurley Beale and Wharton, the three baritones, doing their utmost with the ponderous recitatives entrusted to them. There was scarcely any applause during the progress of the work, the audience seeming, by tacit consent, to reserve any audible demonstration until the conclusion. Then Mr. Bache who conducted, was called forward and greeted with well-deserved plaudits, and a similar compliment was paid to the principal singers.

The 138th Festival of the Royal Society of Musicians took place at Willis's Rooms on the 22nd ult., the Right Hon. the Earl of Shrewsbury in the chair. There was a very large attendance, and the subscription list amounted to the sum of £850. The singers were Miss Adela Vernon, Miss Mary Davies, Miss Enriquez and Mr. Henry Guy; the London Vocal Union, under the able direction of Mr. F. Walker, lending valuable assistance in the concerted vocal music. Two pianoforte pieces by Sir Sterndale Bennett were charmingly played by Miss Agnes Zimmermann, and Mr. Lazarus's clarionet solo elicited the warmest applause. Besides the chairman's appeal on behalf of the Charity, eloquent speeches were made by Professor Macfarren, Mr. Bowen, (the Society's Honorary Counsel), and others. Mr. C. E. Stephens presided at the pianoforte during the evening.

At the annual concert of Miss Agnes Zimmermann, which takes place on the 4th May, at St. James's Hall, Brahms's pianoforte Quartet in C minor (Op. 10), Schubert's Fantaisie for pianoforte and violin, and Mozart's pianoforte Quartet in E flat, will be performed, besides some new pianoforte works by the concert-giver. As an exponent of classical music, Miss Zimmermann has earned so high a reputation in this country that she would be perfectly justified in confining her public appeals to mere "Pianoforte Recitals;" and additional credit is therefore due to her for preferring to associate herself with other eminent artists in order to give due effect to the lesser known chamber compositions of the past, as well as the present, school of writers.

Mr. Willem Coenen commenced his series of three Chamber Concerts at St. George's Hall on the 16th ult., before an audience fully prepared to appreciate the high class of music provided. Limiting his selections to the works of modern composers, Mr. Coenen has given a character to these performances which renders them sufficiently interesting to form one of the annual attractions of the metropolis; and the excellent manner in which the compositions are invariably rendered by all the artists is a proof that the concert-giver relies not alone upon his exceptional powers as a pianist to secure the attention of his hearers. An important feature in the programme was the pianoforte Quartet (Op. 10), by Brahms, which, not only by the beauty of the themes, but by their masterly treatment, produced a marked effect upon the audience. A pianoforte Trio by M. Camille Saint-Saëns must also be favourably mentioned, although with more qualified praise; and a string Quartet by Schubert was finely played, and received with well-deserved applause. Mr. Coenen, besides taking part in the concerted music, performed solos by Liszt and Rubinstein, mastering their excessive difficulties with an ease which elicited the warmest marks of approbation. The vocalist was Miss Wilhelmina Gips; and Messrs. Wiener, F. Amor, Zerbini, and Daubert formed the string quartet.

Bach's "Passion" (St. Matthew) will be given at St. Paul's Cathedral during Holy Week, under the direction of Mr. Barnby. Haydn's "Passion" (Seven last words) will be performed at Manchester Cathedral on Good Friday, and at Norwich Cathedral in Passion Week. This work will also be performed at St. James's, Hatcham, on the 7th inst., and on Good Friday. On the Friday evenings in Lent, Spohr's "Last Judgment" has been given at this Church under the direction of Mr. Jacob Bradford. Bach's "Passion" (St. John) was given at the Church of St. John the Evangelist, Leeds, on the 29th ult, and will be repeated on the 7th inst.

Bach's "Passion" (St. John) has been again performed at St. Anne's Church, Soho, on each Friday evening during Lent. The solos have been rendered by Miss Gill (contralto), Mr. Charles Wade (tenor), and Messrs. Thurley Beale, Pownall, and J. Berwick Orgill (bass). The church has been crowded on each occasion.

A very good performance of Sir Frederick Ouseley's Oratorio, "Hagar" was given by the Brixton Choral Society on the 20th ult., under the careful conductorship of Mr. William Lemare, whose zeal and energy in the direction of this Society is deserving of much commendation. The principal vocalists were Miss Laura Clement, Miss Joyce Maas, Mr. Henry Taylor, and Mr. Thurley Beale, the band and choir numbering about one hundred performers.

The St. George's Glee Union gave a performance of Handel's "Acis and Galatea" on the 3rd ult. at the Pimlico Rooms. The soprano solos were well rendered by Miss Bessie Spear, who was especially successful in "Hush, ye pretty warbling Choir." Mr. J. Williams was the Acis, and to him also was assigned the rôle of Damon. Mr. Thurley Beale sang the bass solos with artistic effect. The choruses on the whole went fairly well, the accompaniments being satisfactorily played by Miss Hamilton, (pianoforte) and Mr. G. F. Smith, R.A.M., (harmonium.) Mr. Garside presided.

A performance of madrigals and part-songs was most successfully given at the Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts, on the 15th ult., by Mr. Montem Smith's Choir. The programme, which was divided into three parts, included some very choice specimens of vocal part-music, selected from the works of Dowland, Bennet, Morley, Smart, Hatton, and Bishop. It commenced with "Sumer is icumen in" (air 1250), and concluded with three National Songs—Scotch, French, and Danish.

Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer"—the solo beautifully rendered by Miss Mary Davies—was sung at the monthly "Service of Song" at Surrey Chapel, on Sunday, the 12th ult., under the direction of Mr. F. G. Edwards, who presided at the organ.

A Dykes Scholarship has been founded in connection with Trinity College, London, as a tribute to the memory of the late gifted Church musician. The scholarship, which is tenable for two years, will be awarded at an open competitive examination at Midsummer, and will entitle the holder to a free classical and general, as well as musical, education.

The Dykes Service at Manchester Cathedral, fixed for the 29th ult., has been postponed until after Easter, in consequence of some alterations now being made in the organ.

At the public opening of the new Board Schools in Portobello Road, Bayswater, on the 10th ult., a concert of sacred and secular music was given by a Choir of about thirty picked voices, under the direction of Mr. E. Cympson. The pieces selected were mostly from the works of Mendelssohn, Croft, Rossini and Weber. A vote of thanks to the conductor and the Choir was passed at the conclusion of the performance.

The Organ Recitals at the Hall of the Bow and Bromley Institute continue to attract large audiences, and no pains are spared to obtain a succession of Organists of high repute. On Saturday, the 11th ult., Mr. Alfred Carder, gave an admirable performance of a varied programme, and was highly applauded. The excellent singing of the Choir of the Institute, under the direction of Mr. W. G. McNaught, R.A.M., was a feature in the evening's entertainment. The hall was crowded and several pieces were encored.

An Evening Concert was given on Monday, the 13th ult., at All Saints', Spicer-street, Mile End New Town, by the All Saints' Amateur Musical Society. The principal soloists were Miss A. Batyie, Miss E. Harrison, and Miss Wilkinson, Mr. J. A. Harrison, Mr. Whybrow, and Mr. G. Causton. The arrangements, under the conductorship of Mr. J. Lowick Harrison, who also presided at the pianoforte, gave complete satisfaction.

A Concert was given at the Vestry Hall, Chelsea, on the 25th February, by the Popular Vocal Union, under the direction of Mr. E. Cympson. The programme consisted of solo and concerted music, the unaccompanied part-songs, especially, being exceedingly well rendered. Miss Minnie Paul was encored in her pianoforte solos.

The Amateur Philharmonic Society gave a Concert at the Assembly Rooms, St. John's Wood, on Thursday evening, the 16th ult., when Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was performed with great success. The principal vocalists were Miss Matilda Scott, Miss Griffiths, Mr. J. Williams, and Signor Adelman. The choruses were rendered with the utmost precision, and were well supported by an excellent band. Mr. Wm. Beavan conducted.

The decease of Mr. Howard Glover and Mr. Charles Horsley, in New York, will perhaps be more felt in the artistic circles of America than in those of England, for they had so long ceased to reside in their own country that their names were almost forgotten. They were both good musicians; and it is needless to remind our readers that Mr. Horsley had already made a certain fame in England as an Oratorio composer.

We are sorry to record the death of the celebrated violoncellist, M. Paque. Not only in the orchestra, but in the concert-room, his loss will be severely felt; for he was one of the most reliable performers in the delicate chamber-music which is now so rapidly growing in public estimation.

Mr. Alfred Holmes, composer of the Dramatic Symphony "Joan of Arc," recently performed at the Crystal Palace, has lately died in Paris, where he has for some time resided. This is not the time to discuss his merits as a composer, but we may say that he has left several works in MS., amongst which is a five-act Opera.

We regret to have to record the death of Mr. Kerr Gedge, which occurred at Mentone on the 21st ult., after a protracted illness. The deceased was a gentleman of Her Majesty's Chapel Royal and Assistant Vicar Choral of St. Paul's Cathedral.

REVIEWS.

Novello, Ewer and Co.

The Organ; a Theoretical and Practical Treatise. By Frederic Archer.

The organist of the Alexandra Palace has in the present work given us the results of his experience both as a performer and a teacher. In his preface he states that the object of the volume is not to supersede the functions of a good teacher, but rather to assist the learner when practising, and therefore necessarily left for the time to his own resources. In this he has undoubtedly shown good judgment, for there are few, if any, instruments more difficult than the organ to learn without a master. Mr. Archer does not intend his book as, so to speak, a finishing organ school for those who wish to take high rank as solo players; but neither, on the other hand, is it a merely elementary treatise. In the ninety-five oblong folio pages of which it consists, is contained a surprising amount of information, including many details which we do not remember to have seen explained, at least not with the same fulness and clearness in any other work.

After a preliminary description of the organ, its stops, mechanical arrangements, &c., we find the first instruction in playing. Mr. Archer assumes a certain acquaintance with the pianoforte, and begins by pointing out very clearly the difference in touch required for the two instruments. We are glad to find him combating the prevalent mistaken impression, that playing the organ spoils the pianist's touch. We fully agree with him, that the very reverse is the case. Much of the best classical music, especially that of Beethoven, absolutely requires the legato touch, which is one of the first essentials of organ playing. Nearly forty exercises are given on this point; and then on page 21 we come to one of the novel features of the work—an explanation of the method of playing a scale on white keys in a perfect legato, with the thumb alone. For the way in which this is effected we must refer our readers to the book itself; we will merely say that having tried it we find it, though somewhat difficult, perfectly practicable. Whether it is of much real use we doubt; because as the thumbs in both hands will generally have the inner parts of the harmony, a sufficient approach to smoothness can usually be attained in the ordinary way. We must, however, give Mr. Archer the credit, if not of the discovery, at least of being the first, so far as we know, to give the explanation.

The staccato style of playing is next concisely, but sufficiently treated of; and then comes the use of the pedals. No less than ninety-five exercises for the feet alone are given, the proper method of performance with right or left foot, and heel or toe, being carefully marked; after which the real difficulty of pedal-playing is reached. An organist once said that the great law of organ-playing was "Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth." We think he would have been nearer the mark had he said, "Let not thy left hand know what the pedal doeth." Independence of the two hands is comparatively easy; to render the left hand wholly independent of the feet is much harder, as every organist knows. Wisely recognising this fact, Mr. Archer gives fifteen studies for the left hand and feet only, beginning with scales in thirds, sixths, and tenths, and then proceeding to "contrary motion." After twenty-six more studies for both hands with pedals, the subject of combining the stops is treated of. It is impossible to give more than general rules on this matter, because hardly two organs are exactly alike, and the same nominal combination may produce totally different effects, according to the voicing of the instrument. A variety of studies for one, two, and three manuals is then given, including some excellent exercises for playing on two manuals simultaneously with one hand. Some very good general practical remarks conclude the volume.

A word or two ought to be said before taking leave of the book as to the studies, in all 246 in number, the whole of which have been written by Mr. Archer expressly for the work. It would not be fair to criticise as compositions short pieces, many only a few bars in length, written with a special technical object. It is, however, no more than just to the author to give him credit for having succeeded in avoiding either dryness or monotony. The little pieces are in all styles, some after the strict manner of the older German, others in imitation of the lighter modern French school, but all are well adapted to the object they have in view, while some are really pleasing as music. We can cordially recommend Mr. Archer's treatise both to teachers and students of the "King of Instruments."

The Benedicite, O all ye works of the Lord, set to appropriate Chants. Three different settings. By Alexander S. Cooper.

Any detailed notice of what may be described as a musical tract of two pages is, of course, superfluous; but we call attention to Mr. Cooper's very good and pleasing chant-settings of this Canticle, because really effective music for this particular part of the Church Service is, we believe, rarer than for any other. In each arrangement Mr. Cooper has judiciously changed the music at the eighteenth verse. All three versions will be found useful by choirs.

Six Settings of the Kyrie Eleison. By G. H. Gregory, Mus. Bac., Oxon.

These various settings of the "Kyrie" by Mr. Gregory are all excellently harmonized; and though some are, to our thinking, more interesting than others (our own favourites are Nos. 1, 3, and 4), none are absolutely dry. Of course in a series of eight-bar phrases much absolute originality is not to be looked for; but we must compliment Mr. Gregory on the melodiousness of his part-writing. In several of these numbers the tenor is quite as tuneful as the treble.

Two Nocturnes for Pianoforte. By Walter Macfarren.

Since the popularity of Field's Nocturnes—which, notwithstanding their excessive delicacy and refinement, sound to us now somewhat old-fashioned—many of our most esteemed pianoforte-writers have thrown what may be termed their holiday thoughts into this form, although it would puzzle most composers to define what really constitutes a "Nocturne." Accepting, however, the conventional meaning of the word, we may rank Mr. Walter Macfarren's two contributions amongst the most charming specimens we have seen for some time. No. 1, in E minor, has a theme of much beauty, the ascent of the octave giving to it an originality of character which at once arrests the attention. The legato melody, in the relative major, afterwards unexpectedly recurring in C, is not only extremely tuneful, but contrasts effectively with the principal subject. No. 2, in E major, will be found a sympathetic companion for the first piece; and we recommend that the two should be played in the order of the numbers. The simple manner in which the opening theme is at first harmonized scarcely leads us to expect the ingenious harmony with which it is afterwards accompanied; but an interest is thus created which cannot fail to advance the composer in the estimation of all whose good opinion he is desirous of winning.

A new method for the Piano. After the "Klavier unterrichts briefe" of Aloys Hennes. Translated by H. Mannheimer.

We may be excused for feeling somewhat diffident in criticising this work when we are told that it is translated from the 25th German edition, encounter a formidable list of opinions of the Press upon the edition published in France, and are informed that "Miss Theresa Hennes, now 13 years of age (daughter of the Author of this method), and since 1871 known as a distinguished pianist throughout the whole of Germany, has been instructed from her fifth year, according to this method, by her father." Had the book been presented to the English public with less prefatory eulogium, we cannot but think that it would have been more warmly received, for there is certainly much in it to commend; and if a child can only be persuaded, or forced, into wading through the whole of the "five courses" into which the method is divided—the one before us, although containing 106 pages, being only the first of the series—the result will, we doubt not, be thoroughly satisfactory. We do not think that the lessons and directions are made particularly attractive to the young student; but from the teacher's point of view, they are in general well calculated to train both the mind and the finger. The plan of adapting some words to the measures of the various times is an admirable one for fixing the true accent in the memory; and we should be glad to see this method extensively adopted. Most of the exercises for strengthening and equalising the fingers will be found extremely useful, and the tunes are perhaps as interesting as we have a right to expect in an Instruction-book. We cannot however agree with the author in deriving 6-8 time from two bars of 3-8. In our opinion, no child will ever understand the subject who is not taught that times move in 4, 2 and 3; that if each division is in doublets, it is termed "simple," and if in triplets, "compound," and that the office of the dot in compound time is to make each division move in three instead of in two. To derive a double time from a triple one, must therefore be a manifest absurdity, and cannot but lead to a misapprehension of the whole matter. We are glad to find the necessity of counting audibly and firmly insisted upon; and much praise must also be given for the excellent remarks upon the position of the hands, the formation of the touch, and the advisability of always practising upon a good instrument. We presume that there is some error in the translation here and there, although as a rule Herr Mannheimer has acquitted himself of his task very creditably. In proof of our assertion, however, we may ask the meaning of the following sentence; "Pieces written in E, B, F♯, A♯, D♭ sharp and G♭ sharp must be introduced in the materials for instruction just as frequently as those in C, G, D, A, F, B♭ and E♭ sharp."

Choral Songs for School and Home. For one, two, or four voices. Composed by Robert Jackson.

In the preface to this collection of choral pieces we are told, as usual, that it is published to "meet a want," but, considering the number of such works which we are constantly called upon to notice, we can scarcely imagine that such a want is very generally felt. We are by no means disposed to think it necessary for a composer to apologise for adding to an already extensive store; for should his pieces suit the public taste, they will be certain to find ready purchasers, and should they not do so, the author's opinion of their fitness for the special purpose for which they were intended will never force them into notice. Mr. Jackson's music, he tells us was mostly written at first for two voices; and that "in adopting the four-parts care has been taken to keep as much as possible the original arrangement intact, so that the songs may be adapted to those schools where only first and second trebles are available." This has been well done; and as the melodies throughout are sufficiently pleasing to catch the ear, we may commend these little compositions to teachers, with a conviction that they will become popular with a class. The harmonies are appropriately simple, the voice parts flow smoothly, and—what is a matter of the utmost importance—the words are selected with much care and judgment.

Lamborn Cock.

Allegretto Grazioso, for the Pianoforte. By Charles Gardner.

Under the modest title of "Allegretto Grazioso," Mr. Gardner has given us one of the most refined and graceful sketches we have yet seen from his pen. Commencing with a melodious legato subject, in D minor, accompanied lightly with quavers, we have a second theme, in A major, with an arpeggio accompaniment, which forms an excellent contrast, and is repeated with good effect in the tonic major of the piece. On the return to the minor we might perhaps feel a slight sensation of monotony—as no variation of accompaniment is introduced—were it not for the unexpected major chord, which gives much brightness to the concluding four bars. There is such real artistic feeling shown throughout this unpretentious composition that we feel convinced its author might with confidence attempt a work of far higher importance.

Two Musical Sketches for the Pianoforte: the "Exile" and "Gleaner." Composed by C. H. Couldery.

We have already noticed some light pieces by Mr. Couldery, the distinguishing character of which has been excessive tunefulness, and although the two now before us faithfully preserve this recommendation to popular favour, we can scarcely say that they evince any sign of advancement upon those previously reviewed. Indeed the pursuit of mere melody is often an ignis fatuus, which leads young composers astray, as much as the constant striving after learned harmony, and we are always glad therefore when we see an artist—after having thrown off a number of "Sketches" to feel his way—forsaking this fascinating path and entering upon the high road to a more enduring fame. The syncopated accompaniment in the first of these pieces gives character to the theme which, although "pretty," is somewhat common-place, and the broken arpeggios with which it is afterwards accompanied seem rather forced in to cover its feebleness. The second piece, termed the "Gleaner," we like better. Commencing with a diminished seventh in F sharp minor, the opening theme, in A major, comes with welcome freshness; and although the Sketch is light in texture, there is much to commend in the treatment of the subjects. Pianists, who care not for display, will, we think, be pleased with these two bagatelles.

William Czerny.

Chanson Nègre. A Lively Story. Deux Feuilles d'Album. Two Minstrel Songs. In memoriam. Adagio from the Sonata in D major.

Composed for the Pianoforte by A. Ergmann.

This group of sketches for the pianoforte will be welcomed as the trifles of a clever musician jotted down in his leisure moments, although we can scarcely say that they fulfil the expectations raised by the same composer's three pieces noticed in these columns a short time since. The "Chanson Nègre," appropriately marked "Alla Banjo," has some character; but the melody, in F major and D minor, becomes somewhat wearisome. The second piece reminds us of Schumann; but it is well written, and sufficiently spirited to justify its title. Of the two pieces which come next on the list we infinitely prefer No. 2, which has a good theme, in A minor, with a well marked subject in the relative major. No. 1 of the "Two Minstrel Songs," in F major, has a graceful cantabile melody, with an effective figure for the left hand, and although but little is attempted in the piece, a pianist with a trained touch may rely upon its success with a drawing-room audience. No. 2, in D, is merely the conventional "Song without words," the theme played with the thumb of the right hand; but the triplets, after the double bar, contrast well with the opening subject. The Adagio from the Sonata is a fair specimen of the composer's power of writing in a more classical form; and although the movement is somewhat dry, it is well planned, and the details satisfactorily carried out. We should of course prefer to notice the entire Sonata; but presuming that creative artists must feel their way gradually with the public, we are disposed rather to praise Herr Ergmann for what he has done than to blame him for what he has not.

"CONSECUTIVE FIFTHS AND SEVENTHS."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—In your review of Dr. Stainer's "Theory of Harmony," you lately called attention to the admirable way in which he has treated the subject of "consecutive fifths." As far as I can understand Dr. Stainer's view of the case, he seems to conclude that consecutive major fifths ought not to be excluded by a hard-and-fast rule, but that each instance must be judged of by its effect on the ear. The instances which he brings forward from the works of the great masters certainly seem to commend this view to one's common sense; and, if this be the case, would it not be well for our leading musicians to consider whether this test of ear should be the guiding principle in this matter rather than a rigid, unbending rule? And, at the same time, would it not be well to place some restriction upon the use of "consecutive sevenths," which composers are now in the habit of using rather freely in modern anthems and hymn-tunes? Surely the effect of consecutive sevenths upon the ear is often harsh and grating. As an instance of how reviewers of music sometimes fail to notice the presence of consecutive fifths, it happened to the writer some few years ago to have a Communion Service favourably reviewed in the Musical Times and in two other journals, but in no case did the reviewers notice the presence of consecutive fifths between alto and tenor in the opening portion of the Kyrie. I can only account for this by concluding that the effect upon the ear was not harsh, and therefore the consecutives did not attract attention.

Yours faithfully,

Herbt. H. Woodward.

[The use of "consecutive sevenths" is, we believe, sufficiently restricted in all good treatises on harmony. We are aware that they are sometimes introduced with very unpleasant effect in modern music, and should, in such cases, be disposed to attribute them either to the ignorance or heedlessness of the writer. It is much the same with consecutive fifths.—Ed. Musical Times.]

DR. STAINER'S "HARMONY."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Though your reviewer's explanation of the harmonical crux on p. 407 is perfectly intelligible and satisfactory, I, for one, cannot admit that the explanation with which he credits Dr. Stainer is equally so. I fail altogether to perceive how the mere altering of C♯ to D♭ could justify anyone in calling the particular combination there quoted a chord of the "dominant minor thirteenth in the key of B♭, resolved on the tonic." There is an extraordinary jumble of ideas in this theory. In the first place, a chord of the thirteenth is simply the suspension of the dominant harmony, with its added ninth, over the tonic fundamental bass. It is major or minor according as the ninth is major or minor. It is the ninth which gives the name to the chord, inasmuch as the ninth would form the interval of the thirteenth with the tonic bass, if the intervals were counted upward in proper gradation. In the particular instance quoted by your correspondent, all the characteristics of the chord of the thirteenth are absent. The suspension does not resolve upon the same bass. The ninth (D♭) does not resolve according to rule—in fact does not resolve at all, but simply sharpens into the major mode of its own harmony; and instead of its being the ninth which names the chord, it is the minor third of the presumed tonic which forms the interval of the thirteenth with the bass. If F had been selected as the tonic instead of B♭, the explanation would have been somewhat nearer, as far as the mere naming of the chord is concerned, since D♭ is the minor ninth of the dominant C, and forms the interval of the thirteenth with the tonic F. But in that case also, the explanation fails, because every dominant chord bears a major third, and in this instance, the third, E♭, is minor; besides the resolution should have been into the tonic F upon the same bass.

In glancing at the example given from "Faust," one is struck by an interesting singularity. It is that any dominant chord with its seventh may be superposed upon the dominant chord of the seventh which lies a major third below it, and the product of the two resolutions conducted in the normal manner will give a combination representing the lower tonic harmony. All the care necessary is, to make the upper dominant resolve into the minor mode of its tonic. In the quotation under discussion, the upper combination is the dominant chord of A; the lower combination is the dominant harmony on F, the third below. The upper dominant resolves into D minor; the lower into B♭ major; and the connection of the two chords is so close that the lower tonic takes the upper intervals as constituents of its own harmony.

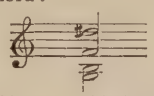
I am, sir, yours truly, E. J. P.

[We regret that, as Dr. Stainer is at present abroad, we have been unable to forward our correspondent's interesting letter to him, in order that he might fight his own battle, which he is doubtless well able to do. In our own note last month, we expressed our preference for Richter's designation of the chord in question as "an altered chord of the dominant ninth." As we were asked how Dr. Stainer would explain it, we gave what we thought—and still think—the correct account from his standpoint. Our reason for believing that he would call it a "dominant minor thirteenth" is, that on p. 84 of his book we find the following given as an example of this chord:—



which, if the ninth (A) were added above, would be identical with the chord from "Faust" under discussion. Dr. Stainer does not admit on his system "the suspension of the dominant harmony . . . . upon the tonic fundamental bass" at all, nor does he allow the existence of "altered chords."—The Reviewer of Stainer's "Harmony."]

LISZT'S "ST. ELIZABETH."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Allow me to correct a slight error in your last No. of Musical Times. You say, in noticing Mr. W. Bache's Concert, that Liszt's "Legend of St. Elizabeth" was then performed for the first time in England. In June, 1870, I assisted at a performance of the same at a New Philharmonic Concert at St. James's Hall, under Dr. Wyld's direction. The error is not an important one, at the same time the fact is better for being correctly stated. Yours, &c.,

March 9, 1876. John Lawrence.

P.S.—The soloists on that occasion were Titiens and Stockhausen, but the work did not produce much impression.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

Bishop Auckland.—The first Concert of the Auckland Musical Society was given in the Town Hall, on Friday evening, the 10th ult., when Handel's oratorio, the Messiah, was performed, with full band and chorus of 150 performers, under the conductorship of Mr. Kilburn, a local amateur, to whose exertions the Society owes its existence. The principal vocalists were Miss Clelland (soprano), Miss Edith Clelland (contralto), Mr. Whitehead (tenor), and Mr. Thornton Wood (bass). Encores were awarded to Mr. Whitehead for his singing of "Thou shalt break them," to Miss Clelland for "I know that my Redeemer liveth," and to the choir for an excellent performance of the "Hallelujah!" The band numbered about 35 performers, and was most efficiently led by Mdlle. Bertha Brousil. The trumpet-playing of Mr. Robinson fully merited the hearty applause it received.

Bristol.—On Monday evening, the 28th February, the Bristol and Clifton Orchestral Society gave a Concert at the Colston Hall. The band, which consists of about forty-five performers, with Mr. A. W. Waite as leader, was most ably conducted by Mr. Geo. Riseley, (organist of the Cathedral and of the Colston Hall Co.) The programme included the overtures, Die Zauberflöte (Mozart), Oberon (Weber), Ruy Blas (Mendelssohn), and Rosamunde (Schubert), and Haydn's Symphony in D, The Clock. Mendelssohn's "Organ Sonata No. 5, in D," was played by Mr. George Riseley. The recitative and aria "It is enough," from Mendelssohn's Elijah, and the songs "Infelice" (Verdi's Ernani) and the "Signet ring" were well sung by Mr. Lawford Huxtable.——On Wednesday evening, the 8th ult., a second lecture was given at the Colston Hall, by Mr. F. Todd, on the "History of Sacred Music." Illustrations selected from the works of the several composers of sacred music from the earliest times, were given by a choir of twenty voices, led by Mr. E. Cook, and accompanied on the organ by Mr. George Riseley.

Birmingham.—A special Choral Service was held at St. George's church on the evening of the 22nd ult., the music consisting of selections from the compositions of the late Dr. Dykes, the Anthem being "The Lord is my shepherd" (23rd Psalm). The sermon was preached by the Rev. G. H. Stanton, M.A., and the offertory, amounting to £20, will be given to the fund now being raised for the family of Dr. Dykes. Dr. Belcher presided at the organ.

Calverley.—On Shrove Tuesday, the Calverley Choral Society gave its first Concert in the Mechanics' Hall, commencing with the first part of St. Paul; solo vocalists, Miss Wheater and Mdlle. Patti Hargreaves, who was encored in "But the Lord is mindful." The second part of the programme consisted of glees and songs. Jackson's "Sisters of the sea," Gounod's "Soldiers' Chorus," and Bishop's "Now tramp," were well rendered by the Choir, which showed careful training, under the directorship of Mr. Shuttleworth, the conductor. Mr. Calvert presided at the piano, and Mr. Kellet at the harmonium.

Clifton.—On Monday, the 20th ult., two performances of the principal parts of Bach's Oratorio The Passion (St. Matthew), were given, under the direction of Mr. James C. Daniel, at the Victoria rooms. The artists were, Madame Lemmens-Sherrington and Mdlle. José Sherrington (soprano), Miss Emily Dones (contralto), Mr. Bernard Lane (tenor), Mr. Law (bass), Miss Emma Barnett (pianoforte), and the Chevalier Lemmens (Mustel organ). At the conclusion of the Oratorio there was a selection of sacred music.

Cork.—On Monday evening, the 6th ult., an entertainment in connection with the Young Men's Association of the parish, was given in St. Luke's schoolroom. The programme consisted of choruses, solos, &c., and readings and recitations by some of the members. The musical portion was undertaken by the choir of the church, assisted by some members of the congregation. Mr. Sandford was encored in "The Soldier's tear," and Mr. Romley gave "Rock'd in the cradle of the deep" in good style; Rossini's duet "Oh Maiden fair," by Miss Belcher and Mr. J. H. Scott, was also re-demanded. Miss Goold played "Le chant des Naïades," and for an encore gave "Home, sweet home." The audience was very large and enthusiastic.—— A series of performances have been given during the past month by Signor Campobello's Italian Opera Company, which were well supported. The principal artists who have appeared have been, Mesdames Campobello-Sinico, Ferminet and Howson, and Signori Vizzani and Campobello, together with a powerful chorus and excellent orchestra. The performances were under the direction of Mr. Levey.

Crewe.—The Philharmonic Society gave a highly successful performance of Judas Maccabæus on the 21st ult. The principal artists were Madame Billinie-Porter, Mrs. Bradnock, Mr. T. Hunt, and Mr. W. T. Briggs. Mr. Chapman conducted, and Mr. Young presided at the harmonium. The band and chorus were considerably strengthened from other towns.

East Twickenham.—A Concert was given at the Montpellier Lecture Hall by the East Twickenham Choral Society (Mr. J. C. Dunster, conductor), on Tuesday evening, Feb. 29th. In the first part of the programme the choruses, "And the glory of the Lord," "He trusted in God," and "All we like sheep," from the Messiah, were sung with precision and steadiness. Vocal solos by Miss Terry, Mr. H. Little and Mr. Kenningham, and Weber's Concert-Stück, with the orchestral accompaniments, well played by Mr. Dunster, ended the first portion of the programme. The second part was devoted to Dr. Sterndale Bennett's "May Queen," in the performance of which both chorus and orchestra acquitted themselves in the most satisfactory manner. The solo vocalists were Mrs. Wingrove, Miss Terry, Mr. Kenningham and Mr. A. E. Twiss. Mr. H. J. Stark, Mus. Bac., Oxon., presided at the piano, and Mr. Deane led the band.

Edinburgh.—The Annual Concert of the University Musical Society took place on the 22nd ult., in the Town Hall. The choristers, composed of past and present students, numbered rather above two hundred; the solo vocalists included a distinguished baritone amateur, Mr. Burn Callander; and the students contributed two solo singers and one pianist. The conductor was Professor Oakeley. According to custom, the opening number was "Condiscipuli Canamus," Professor Maclagan's words set to music by Professor Oakeley, the organ accompaniment being played by Mr. Kirk. The choruses and part-songs included the "Vintage chorus" from Loreley, "The winds whistle cold," "Gadeamus igitur," two new songs by the conductor, "Regna il terror" (Tancredi), and the Barcarole from Masaniello. The principal instrumental piece was Mozart's E flat Symphony, which was given with character and feeling. The overtures were Stradella, Freischütz, and Masaniello. A student, Mr. Galletly, gave, in conjunction with Mr. Carl Hamilton, a good reading of the adagio and finale of Beethoven's Duet Sonata, for pianoforte and violoncello, in A, Op. 69, and further contributed two pianoforte solos, a "Lied" in D flat by Esain, and Heller's Tarantella in A flat. Professor Oakeley accompanied the songs on the piano.

Enniskillen, Co. Fermanagh, Ireland.—The members of Mr. Arnold's Choral Class gave their first Concert on Friday evening, February 25th, in the Protestant Hall, when selections from Handel's Messiah, Mendelssohn's Elijah, St. Paul, &c., were very creditably performed. The solos, "I know that my Redeemer," "Then shall the Righteous," "O rest in the Lord," and "Lord God of Abraham," were well sung by Miss Bagot, Miss Emily Graham, Miss Graham, and Mr. W. R. Cooney. The part-songs included "Blow, ye balmy breezes," Young; "Ah could I with fancy stray," Hatton, (encored); and "Sweet and low," Barnby. Songs were also given by Messrs. Arnold, Black, Leddall, Trimble, and McKeague. Beethoven's Sonata in F, Op. 24, for piano and violin, was played by Miss Gray and Mr. Arnold, and a clarionet Fantasia (Reissiger) by Herr Werner. Mr. Arnold conducted.

Freemantle.—A lecture upon Music and Musical Compositions was delivered in connection with the Freemantle Mutual Improvement Association, at the Church Schoolrooms, on Thursday evening, the 2nd ult., by Mr. Thos. Miell, jun. Mr. J. Cockburn, one of the vice-presidents, occupied the chair, and introduced the lecturer, stating that the proceeds were to be devoted to the augmentation of the library fund. Mr. Miell commenced his lecture with a brief notice of the history of music from the earliest period, referring to the system of notation, the laws of harmony, and in illustration of some remarks on operatic music, performed a selection from the opera of Masaniello. He then alluded to the works of various composers, giving a short biographical sketch of each, the first being Dr. Wm. Croft. Illustrations from the compositions of Henry Purcell, Charles Dibdin, Henry Carey, Sir H. R. Bishop, and J. L. Hatton were given. Mr. Henry G. Thorn was the vocalist. The Chairman proposed a vote of thanks to Messrs. Miell and Thorn for the lecture and illustrations, and Mr. C. Roud, as Secretary, on behalf of the committee, tendered them their best thanks.

Golcar.—On Tuesday evening, the 14th ult., a musical festival was held in the Baptist Chapel by the Golcar Choral Society and the Chapel Choir, consisting of selections from Handel's Messiah. They were assisted by members of the Huddersfield Choral and other neighbouring societies. The music for the brass instruments of the band was arranged by Mr. H. Pearson, the conductor. The choruses were admirably rendered, the most noticeable being the "Hallelujah," "Awake the trumpet's lofty sound," "Fixed in His everlasting seat," "Let their celestial concerts," and "For unto us a child is born." The accompaniments on the organ were well played by Mr. J. E. Pearson, organist of Holy Trinity Church, Huddersfield. Mr. J. H. Pearson excited great interest by the manner in which he rendered Handel's Sixth Organ Concerto. The solo vocalists were Miss Holroyd, Miss Whitaker, Miss Vevers, Miss M'Gowan, Mr. S. Whitwam, Mr. Humphrey Taylor, and Mr. George Mellor.

Great Malvern.—On Thursday, the 16th ult., Mr. Haynes's Motett and Madrigal choir gave its first Concert, on which occasion the greater part of Judas Maccabæus was sung. The solo parts were taken by Madame Thaddeus Wells, soprano, Mr. W. Mann Dyson, tenor, and Mr. O. Millward, bass. An efficient string band, with pianoforte and harmonium, formed the accompaniment. Mr. W. Haynes conducted: the concert was in every way a great success. The Society, although only started last October, is already in a flourishing condition, and it is proposed to introduce at future Concerts some ancient and modern music comparatively unknown in England.

Kearsley, near Manchester.—The members of the Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. James Eaton, gave an excellent miscellaneous Concert, in aid of the Church Building Fund, on Wednesday evening, the 15th ult., before a large audience. The programme consisted of glees, part-songs, &c., by the Society, and a pianoforte solo, played by Mr. Robinson. Mr. Whittaker and Mr. Eaton were the solo vocalists.

Leicester.—The last Concert of the Musical Society for the present season took place on Monday evening, the 13th ult., at the Temperance Hall. The chief feature of the performance was Handel's Serenata, Acis and Galatea. The principal singers were Mrs. Thaddeus Wells, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Robson and Signor Foli. The band was strengthened for the occasion. The Anemoic Union assisted in the wind parts. The choruses generally were very creditably sung, especially, "O the pleasure of the plains," "Happy we," and "Galatea, dry thy tears." The performance was conducted by Mr. Nicholson, and was altogether one of the best efforts of the Society this season. The second part of the concert was miscellaneous.

Llantrisant.—On Wednesday evening, the 8th ult., the Llantrisant Brass Band gave a Concert in the Town Hall. The programme was well selected and capitally rendered. The vocalists were Miss N. A. Davis, Messrs. E. A. Leah, T. Everson, and Geo. F. Martyn. The Llantrisant Hand-bell Ringers played some selections which were well received. Mr. R. Martyn conducted, and Mrs. D. Llewellyn presided at the pianoforte.

Manchester.—The recent Concert of the St. Cecilia Choral Society, under the able conductorship of Mr. Hecht, at the Free Trade Hall, drew a large and appreciative audience. The members of the choir are all, or nearly all, amateurs, but the intelligent manner in which they sing suggested greater labours than amateurs are generally supposed to give, and it is seldom the good fortune of the conductor of a non-professional choir to command such a splendid array of vocal talent. On no previous occasion has this excellence been so equally distributed. The sopranos are as bright and fresh as ever, but the other departments of the choir have perhaps never been so satisfactory. Bach's Cantata, "My Spirit," with which the Concert opened, is so pathetic and so characteristic of the genius of the composer, that it is surprising it is not better known; and it is to be regretted that only a single performance of such a work could be heard. Schumann's Faust music was quite a surprise, and if the scenes given on this occasion may be accepted as a fair specimen of the whole, we have no hesitation in saying that it will attract the English public far more than the same composer's Paradise and the Peri. Schumann has admirably taken advantage of the mystic character of the poem, and his fancy has seldom had a more appropriate subject. Sullivan's part-song, "Say Watchman," is one of his happiest inspirations, and the "Shepherds' Chorus," from Schubert's Rosamunde was welcomed, if only as a contrast to the prevailing sadness of most of the first part. An admirable performance of Beethoven's Concerto in C major, by an amateur, must also be mentioned as a feature in the programme. The band, carefully led by Mr. Straus, added considerably to the success of the evening; and the good understanding between the choir and the orchestra was very creditable to the energetic and accomplished conductor, Mr. Hecht, who could not do more for the St. Cecilia Society if it were his own private undertaking. ——Under the title of the "Manchester Cathedral Glee and Choral Union" a Society has lately been formed, with every prospect of ultimate success. It is proposed to give four concerts during the season, under the able direction of Mr. J. Kendrick Pyne, organist of the Cathedral, who is appointed permanent conductor of the Association.

Maidstone.—A sacred Concert was given in the West Borough Congregational Church on Friday, Feb. 25th, in aid of the Organ Fund. The first part of the programme consisted of selections from Handel's oratorio, Judas Maccabæus, the second part being miscellaneous. The solo vocalists were Mrs. Day, Miss Somerton, Messrs. Crowe, Airs, and Jefferies, and Master P. R. Day. The choruses were given with great precision and care. Mr. T. G. Day conducted.

Melbourne, Derbyshire.—A Concert was given by the Glee and Madrigal Society on Shrove Tuesday, the first part consisting of a selection from Handel's Judas Maccabæus, which was very efficiently performed by both instrumentalists and vocalists. The choruses "Mourn, ye afflicted children," "O Father whose Almighty power," and "We never will bow down," were especially well executed; as also were the airs "From mighty kings," Mrs. Wilson; "Arm, arm ye brave," Mr. Field Baldwin; "O liberty," Miss Haimes (cello obbligato Mr. Adcock), and "Sound an alarm," Mr. T. Bullock. The second part consisted of songs, glees, &c., including Macfarren's "Pack clouds away," by Mrs. Hay-Gordon (violin obbligato Mr. Hay-Gordon). The concert was for the benefit of Mr. W. G. Parkinson, organist of the parish church, who has given his services as accompanist for several years, and the result was highly gratifying. Mr. Wilson conducted.

Norwich.—On Tuesday, Feb. 29th, Mr. James Darken gave the first of a series of Classical Concerts before a large and appreciative audience. The artists were Herr Joachim (violin), Signor Piatti (violoncello), and Mdlle. Marie Krebs (pianoforte). The vocalists were Miss Enriquez, and Mr. Shakespeare. Mr. Kingston Rudd accompanied. The programme was of the highest artistic excellence.

Oxford.—Handel's Jephtha was given on the 9th ult. by the Philharmonic Society. The artists engaged were Miss Annie Butterworth (contralto), Miss Julia Wigan (soprano), Mr. Wilford Morgan (tenor), and Mr. Lambert (bass). As a whole the Choir sang fairly well. Miss Wigan was enthusiastically applauded at the conclusion of the airs, "The smiling dawn of happy days," and "Tune the soft melodious lute," and Miss Butterworth was very successful. Mr. Wilford Morgan sang "Waft her, Angels," with excellent effect, and met with an unanimous encore. Mr. Lambert gave the solos allotted to him with care and precision. The whole was efficiently conducted by Mr. Taylor, Mus. Bac., New College.

Rusholme.—The second Concert of the Choral Union was given on the 26th February, before a large audience. All the glees, part-songs, &c., were sung in an excellent manner, and great credit is due to the conductor, Mr. James Hindle, for the pains he has taken in bringing the class to its present efficient condition. The soloists received well deserved encores.

Ryde, Isle of Wight.—By special request the Messiah was repeated in the new Town Hall, on Monday, the 13th ult., by the Ryde Choral Union, assisted by the orchestral band of the Marine Artillery; vocalists, Messrs. Cross and Hansen (bass and tenor, of Salisbury Cathedral), Miss Bradley, R.A.M., contralto; Miss Brown, soprano, and a choir of seventy voices, the whole under the direction of Miss M. F. Fowles, organist of St. James's church, who conducted with a valuable bâton of ivory and gold presented to her by the members of the Union, in recognition of her attention, courtesy, and great ability. The Oratorio was rendered throughout in an accurate and satisfactory manner.

Stratford, Essex.—On Tuesday, the 7th ult., the West Ham Philharmonic Society gave the second Concert of the eighth season in the Town Hall. The performers were all amateurs, members of the Society. The first part of the concert consisted of a new and unpublished work, a Motett, by Miss Oliveria L. Prescott, student at the Royal Academy of Music, and Dr. Hiles's Cantata, "The Crusaders." The Motett, a setting of the 12th Psalm, for soprano solo and chorus, was very well received. The soloists were the Misses F. and G. Jones, Messrs. Gowar and Stevens. Mr. Kitson accompanied on the piano, Mr. H. Dart on the harmonium, and Mr. J. S. Bates conducted.

Woodford.—A fashionable audience was gathered together at a Concert given by Mr. and Mrs. Buxton, at their residence at Knighton, on the 29th February, in aid of a village hospital in that neighbourhood. The assistance was obtained of Miss A. Williams and Madame and Mr. Patey, who, with a choir of 60 voices, gave a highly successful performance of Gade's Cantata, The Erl King's Daughter, Mr. Walter Latter and Mr. W. Cobbett contributed a fine rendering of Dussek's B flat Sonata, for piano and violin, the Allegretto movement being especially noticeable. The second part consisted of vocal solos and part-songs. Miss Williams had to repeat Carola's "So far away." Madame Patey received an ovation in Giordani's "Caro mio ben," and Mrs. Buxton, with Miss Gadsden, elicited an encore for Campana's "Tel Rammenti." The part-songs by the choir, under the careful direction of Mr. Latter, were capitally sung.

Yarmouth.—A pianoforte recital and lecture on the great musical composers was given on Tuesday evening, Feb. 29th, in the Town Hall, by Herr Louis Löffler; E. P. Youell, Esq., in the chair. The method adopted by Herr Löffler was to give a short lecture on the composers in the order of the names on the programme, and to follow this up by a performance on the pianoforte of selections from the works of these masters. In this way the lecturer dealt with Handel, Mozart, Hummel, Beethoven, Weber, Mendelssohn, Liszt, and Thalberg, giving a short account of the life of each of these great composers, and pointing out its chief incidents. At the conclusion of the recital, the Chairman paid the highest compliments to Herr Löffler, and a vote of thanks was passed to the Mayor for the use of the hall.

Yeovil.—A Concert was given on Thursday, the 16th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. Loaring, when a very interesting programme was performed, including Handel's "How vain is man," Hullah's "Storm," "When the swallows homeward fly," Abt, "The Market chorus," Auber, and the overtures to Fra Diavolo and Guy Mannering.

AGENTS REQUIRED IN EVERY TOWN FOR

THE NEW PEDAL ATTACHMENT FOR PIANOFORTES.

MR. J. HAMILTON begs to inform Organists, Organ Students and others, that his invention for attaching Pedals to Pianofortes is meeting with great success and is much approved of, as the subjoined testimonials will show. The new action is entirely noiseless, and its simplicity and cheapness must ultimately supersede the cumbrous, expensive, and rattling organ action as usually applied. It can easily be attached to a pianoforte, as it is sent complete, with printed instructions "How to attach." The pedals are manufactured of well-seasoned hard wood, and are similar in scale and compass to the pedals made for organs of the present day.

A set of Radiating and Concave Pedals (30 notes, C to F), with action, price £5 5s. Or Straight Pedal Board, with action, price £4 4s.

TESTIMONIALS.

Claremont Villa, Mansfield, Notts,
January 31st, 1876.

Sir,—I am very pleased with the Pedals and Action, which, by the aid of your printed instructions, I have attached to my Pianoforte. It all answers exceedingly well, and good pedal practice can be got at a small outlay. I hope your pedals will be universally adopted.

I am, yours truly,
ARTHUR MARCHANT,
Organist and Choirmaster, St. John's Church.

Buntingford, Herts., Jan. 22, 1876.

Sir,—After nearly twelve months' constant use of a set of your Pedals, I have much pleasure in saying that I am perfectly satisfied with them in every way. You are at liberty to use this in whatever way you please.

I am, yours truly,
J. G. SMITH,
Late Private Organist of Tyntesfield.

ORGAN-TONED HARMONIUMS.

W. HATTERSLEY & CO.'S CELEBRATED ORGAN-TONED HARMONIUMS, which for Durability, Sweetness of Tone, and Rapidity of Touch, are unequalled by any other maker.

These splendid instruments are manufactured only by W. Hattersley & Co., with improved sound board, in double veneered cases, and from well-seasoned material, and have been tried side by side with the best English, American, French, and German Harmoniums, and have been pronounced to be far better both in quality of tone, variety in the stops, repetition in touch, and predominance of the treble over the bass. The large instruments, with double action, and several other improvements, are nearer to the organ than anything yet made.

W. H. & Co. have now enlarged their Manufactory and increased their hands, so that they may be able to keep up to the demand, which has been so pressing of late.

THE MUSICAL TIMES
AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.
MAY 1, 1876.

MUSICAL ENGLAND.

THAT the art and practice of Music is making rapid strides in England is a fact which must be apparent to all observers; the evidence is to be found in every circle, high and low, amateur and professional; indeed, the great advance of the divine art within half-a-century is so wonderful that, were it not for the recorded statements of several accurate observers, we should hesitate in believing in such a marvellous transformation as has taken place within the short period specified. An extract or two touching on the state of English music but a very few years since may serve to encourage earnest musical workers and thinkers, who daily plod on in their appointed tasks and labours of love, but who are prone to fancy that they are not able at all times to discover an adequate reward in the results produced.

In 1826, a distinguished Prussian Prince, rejoicing in the magnificent name of Pucler-Muskau, was a visitor to this country, and he thus described a musical evening in England: "Before I left Brighton I was forced to be present at a musical soirée, one of the severest trials to which foreigners in England are exposed. Every mother who has grown-up daughters, for whom she has to pay large sums to the music-master, chooses to enjoy the satisfaction of having the youthful 'talent' admired. There is nothing, therefore, but quavering and strumming right and left, so that one is really overpowered and unhappy. And even if an Englishwoman has the power of singing, she has scarcely ever science or manner. The men are more agreeable dilletanti, for they at least give one the diversion of a comical farce. That a man should advance to the pianoforte with far greater confidence than a David, strike with his forefinger the note he thinks his song should begin with, and then entonner like a thunder-clap (generally a note or two lower than the pitch), and sing through a long aria without rest or pause, and without accompaniment of any sort except the most wonderful distortions of the face, is a thing one must have seen to believe it possible, especially in the presence of fifty people. Sometimes the thing is heightened by their making choice of Italian songs, and, in the total ignorance of the language, roaring out words which, if they were understood by the ladies, would force them to leave the room. It did not appear to me that people constrained themselves much in laughing on these occasions, but such vocalists are far too well established in their own opinion to be disturbed by that: once let loose upon Society, they are extremely hard to call off again."

Such is a picture of English music of fifty years ago, kindly painted for us in Prussian blue, and which may perhaps be regarded as a little highly coloured: we will therefore turn to another, by Thomas Oliphant, the well-known musical antiquarian, who in 1836 wrote thus: "As to the performance of vocal chamber music in this country, what is it?—I will endeavour to describe it as it exists in the metropolis, where we may fairly suppose it ought to be the best. Some young lady, we will suppose is asked to favour the company with a song: I will bet ten to one that her book opens mechanically at "Di piacer," "Una voce poco fa," or some such piece, which none but a prima donna of the first rank can hope to execute, but here an unexpected difficulty arises, the lady cannot accompany herself! some kind-hearted soul, although totally unaccustomed to accompany a singer, is prevailed on to undertake the task: and between the two the song is perpetrated, amidst the loud outward plaudits and inward ridicule of the company, while the pleased mothers congratulate each other on the talents of their respective daughters. This is no overcharged picture, full many a time have I witnessed it; full many a time have I been selected as one of the victims to warble to the best of my ability, treble, tenor, and bass by turns, in all kinds of Italian duets, trios, &c., from "E ben per mia memoria" down to "O pescator dell' onda," until I have wished povero Pippo, young ladies, myself, fisherman and all, at the bottom of the Adriatic. A glee may possibly be wished for as a change in the entertainment. To accomplish this is nearly as difficult a task as one of the labours of Hercules. One can only sing the first line of this, another the second line of that; a third does not understand the C clef: at length two young ladies and their brother, or perhaps some good-natured uncle, who may chance to possess a cracked voice, half tenor, half bass, starts off with the "Red Cross Knight," the bass solo being most stoutly accompanied by the singer with one finger on the pianoforte."

One more quotation will suffice, and we find it in a lecture delivered at Gresham College in 1838, by the Musical Professor of that day, Edward Taylor: he said, "The essential difference between the Elizabethan age and the present, as far as regards music, is this: at that time the English people were singers, they are now listeners only. At that time performers were few; but unpaid or unprofessional performers were many. The relative proportions have now changed. At that time a person, otherwise well-educated, but unable to sing from notes, was rarely to be found; at this time such a person, out of the musical profession is still more rarely encountered."

How astonished the Prince and Professor would be could they revisit musical England of to-day. Musicians, both amateur and professional, abound; good music is to be heard in every circle; each country town, nay, almost every village, has its own musical society or societies; the difficult and deep Passion music of Bach is performed in numberless churches, and even in the Corn Exchanges of far-away country towns. The metropolis itself is rich in enthusiastic amateurs and professors, whose numbers and capabilities may be judged from their performances in the numerous Oratorio and other concerts given at the Albert Hall, and by their latest triumphs at St. James's Hall in the great B minor Mass of Bach. Musical food, too, is so abundant, thanks to the far-seeing liberality and energy of our great music publishers, that as much music by our acknowledged classical composers may now be bought for one shilling as would have cost one pound only fifty years ago.

If it be true, then, that the general state and culture of music has improved, doubtless the estimation in which English musical professors and amateurs are held by other nationalities has also greatly changed for the better within these few years; and if we do not occupy that position as a musical nation which perhaps we are entitled to, may not one of the causes be found in our own self-depreciation? As long ago as the reign of Charles the First, complaint was made of the want of a national spirit as regarded English music, and it is referred to by several authors of the period. One of them, Henry Lawes—a musician to King Charles, and so highly esteemed by Milton, that he inscribed a sonnet to him,—published a collection of "Ayres and Dialogues," with a preface, in which he says, "the productions which our fashionable critics choose to like must all be born beyond the Alps, and this is so notorious that, not long since, I heard some young gentlemen hearing some songs, which I had set to Italian words, publicly sung, they concluded they were born in Italy, and said they would fain have such songs to be made by an Englishman. Had they laid their scene a little nearer home, there had been more colour, for a short air of mine (near twenty years old) was lately revived in France, and publicly sung to words of their own as a new-born piece, without the alteration of any note. A sorry trifle (a man would think) to be raised from the dead, after twenty years' burial. But there are persons, bred in Italy, who ascribe to us more than we do to ourselves—able musicians, who do wonder to see us thirsty after foreigners. For they can tell us, if we knew it not, that music speaketh the same language as in France or Italy. The concords and discords and their right use and treatment is the same, the passions and reflections of man the same, and England hath not wanted those well skilled in the art, and able to shew its powers, both of majesty and beauty."

It is a question whether English musicians were not, even then, themselves to blame to a great extent for the state of things described by Lawes. Surely the example of Lawes's own master, John Cooper—a distinguished musical composer and performer on the fashionable instruments of the day, the lute and viol-da-gamba—must have had a very baneful influence. He was the foremost musical man of the time, and instructor to the children of King James the First; but, by changing his honest patronymic John Cooper into Giovanni Coperario, he cast dirt on the tomb of his father, as the Turks would say. What advantage could he expect to gain from such a paltry and ill-conceived disguise? It must have been palpable to everybody, and could only have resulted in the degradation and disparagement of English music and English musicians.

The pernicious example set by John Cooper in the reign of James the First, has had many followers, and we may ask "Cui bono?" The adoption of a foreign name may at first, perhaps, be regarded as a secret, and intended to remain so, but eventually the truth leaks out, and can then only be looked upon with sorrow or pity; the former, if the charge had been made, because the owner was ashamed of his fatherland; and the latter, if adopted from vanity. Another small item which perhaps contributes to a general result, is the too frequent adoption by composers and publishers of a foreign tongue for the titles of their instrumental pieces, which could equally well, or perhaps better, be described in plain English. A still more absurd custom of the present time is that of professional ladies, who, whilst in single-blessedness, bloom and are admired as Miss —, but immediately they become annexed to a husband and protector, suddenly burst forth as full-blown Madames, thrusting aside the good old-fashioned mother-tongued Mrs. Why is this?—great singers of days gone by were well content to wear their blushing honours as plain Mrs.: witness Mrs. Cibber, Mrs. Billington, Mrs. Salmon, Mrs. Dickons, Mrs. Knyvett, &c., indeed, at one time it was common to honour all lady-singers, married and unmarried, with the title of Mrs. —. Of course, more than one instance will occur to the memories of all of us of some distinguished lady who, having allied herself to a foreigner, has appropriately and rightly assumed the title of Madame.

But surely the now almost universal habit we have pointed out of the adoption of the title Madame by English women is a thing to regret in the interests of English art, for in the majority of cases of the present day, the ladies have previously to their marriages obtained a foremost place in the estimation of the public by simple merit only, and we are quite sure they would have lost nothing had they elected to be called Mrs., as their English mothers and grandmothers had before them. Of course, there are certain difficulties to be met, but none which ought to be pronounced insurmountable; it would hardly be fair to expect a lady who had become renowned as, say, Miss Smith, to wholly renounce that title on wedding with Mr. Robinson by calling herself Mrs. Robinson, as she would thereby probably lose the advantage of her old reputation, and have to create a new one; but why should she not at once boldly call herself Mrs. Smith, or Mrs. Smith-Robinson; perhaps Mrs. Robinson (late Miss Smith) would do for a time until the public became well advertised of the improved and altered condition of things; some fair lady may be able to suggest a better solution of the difficulty, we only plead for the use of the English prefix of Mrs., and the abandonment of the mis-use of the foreign one of Madame. This, to some, may seem a small matter, but straws occasionally indicate the direction of the wind, and we English people, who are very prone to cry out about the patronage of foreigners to the exclusion of native talent, should do all we can to let the public know that we value and honour our birthright. If native English artists apparently become anxious to de-nationalise themselves and to assume something of a foreign stamp, can we blame the outside public if they begin to imagine that a foreign name is essential in a candidate for musical honours? A writer in a daily contemporary has pointedly remarked, "From the surroundings of the court downwards, persons of foreign extraction, or imbued with foreign sympathies, enjoy an amount of influence in England which would be impossible in any other country, and is rapidly becoming intolerable in this, and our extraordinary habit of depreciating ourselves on every occasion plays into their hands."

Many other aspects present themselves of the subjects we have merely touched upon, but it is difficult to discuss them at length without becoming personal. We therefore invite the earnest and kindly consideration of our readers to the few hints thrown out, and hope some good may result; fully believing with Shakespeare that "Nought shall make us rue, if England to itself do rest but true."

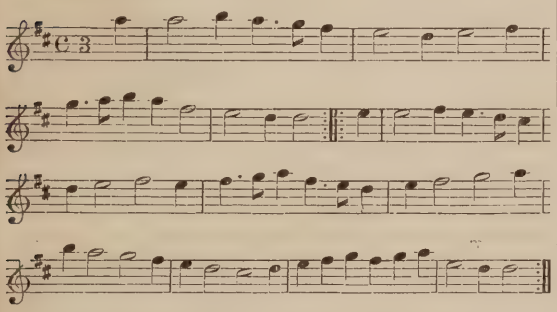
DID LOCKE WRITE VOCAL MUSIC FOR MACBETH?

Stage history at the period of the Restoration is but imperfectly chronicled. We have to depend much upon Downes's "Roscius Anglicanus," and his information is sometimes vague, and not always reliable. For instance: he mentions Sir William Davenant's version of Macbeth, with music by Matthew Locke, as having been brought out in 1672, a date which, upon the faith of this statement, has always been followed. But it is probably not the true one; or if it is the correct date of Davenant's production, Locke's music was written for an earlier version of the play, as I shall now endeavour to prove.

In a rare little volume, entitled "The Pleasant Companion; or, Lessons and Instructions for the Flageolet," by Thomas Greeting, 1680, there is a tune called "Mackbeth," with the initials at the end, "M. L." those of Matthew Locke. The same tune occurs as "The Dance in the Play of Mackbeth," in a volume entitled "Apollo's Banquet for the Treble Violin, set forth in New Theatre Tunes, Ayres, Corants, &c.," 1669. It is found again in a small volume called "Musick's Delight on the Cithren," 1666. Thus we find that Locke's music was composed at least six years earlier than the date assigned by Downes.

The three curious works here mentioned are upon my shelves. The first and third are written in tablature; the second is in the ordinary notation. I extract the tune from the latter volume, which is a remarkably interesting one, containing as it does so many "theatre tunes." Among them I may point out "Sir Martin Marall's Jigg," "The Jovial Crew," "The Mulberry Garden," "The Opera Tune by Mr. Lock," "The Witches' Dance" (query Macbeth?), "Mr. Lock's Tune," "Mr. Banister's Farewell," and "The Indian Queen."

"THE DANCE IN THE PLAY OF 'MACKBETH.'"



The question that now arises is, Did Locke compose music for an earlier version of this play, or is Downes wrong in his date? Again, what music did Locke write? Did he compose vocal music at all? It was not unfrequently the custom at this date for two or more composers to share the music of a particular play. Thus, in the "Tempest," as altered by Shadwell, in 1673, the vocal music was composed by Pelham Humphrey and John Banister, the instrumental, by Baptist Draghi, and the introductory and act music, by Matthew Locke. Some such arrangement as this may have been the case with regard to "Macbeth." At any rate, there is no evidence, except the statement of Downes, to show that Locke wrote any of the vocal music to "Macbeth;" and we have shown that he is wrong in one material part —the true date of that music which he attributes to this composer. As Locke certainly wrote the instrumental music for "Macbeth," the probability is that he did not write the vocal. Who composed the vocal music to Davenant's version of this play is still unknown, and it is a question only to be settled by some fortunate discovery.

Perhaps it will be interesting, as the book is before me, to give "The Witches' Dance," which, it may safely be concluded, formed part of Locke's instrumental music to "Macbeth."

"THE WITCHES' DANCE."

DR. SAMUEL SEBASTIAN WESLEY.

It is but two months since that we recorded the death of one of our most distinguished church-musicians, Dr. Gauntlett; and it is now our painful duty to announce that another certainly not less eminent worker in the same field of art has been taken away. Dr. Samuel Sebastian Wesley, the organist of Gloucester Cathedral, died somewhat suddenly at his residence, Palace-yard, Gloucester, on the 19th ult., at the age of sixty-six.

Dr. Wesley was the son of an even more celebrated composer than himself — Samuel Wesley, whose motetts, "In exitu Israel" and "Exultate Deo," are familiar to our concert-goers through their performance by Mr. Henry Leslie's choir, and deservedly rank as masterpieces. The subject of the present notice was born in London, in 1810. At the age of nine he was chosen chorister at the Chapel Royal, St. James's, and, when only seventeen years of age, in 1827, was appointed to his first post as organist at St. James's Church, Hampstead-road. He was subsequently organist at St. Giles's, Camberwell, and other churches in and near London, and in 1832, became organist at Hereford Cathedral. Thence he went to Exeter Cathedral in 1835, to Leeds parish church in 1842, to Winchester Cathedral in 1849, and to Gloucester in 1865; this last appointment he held till the time of his death.

As a performer on the organ Dr. Wesley had few equals. In his extempore playing he was especially great, combining fertility of invention with scientific combination in a way in which few could approach him. It is, however, upon his compositions for the Church that his fame will chiefly rest hereafter. He has published numerous Services, of which a Chant Service in F is perhaps the best known, while many of his anthems are stock pieces in our cathedrals. Among these may be named, "Ascribe unto the Lord" "Blessed be the God and Father," and (probably the most popular of all) "The wilderness and the solitary place." He also distinguished himself as a composer of hymn-tunes—his "Aurelia" in Hymns Ancient and Modern, is well known throughout the length and breadth of the land. Numerous admirable specimens of his workmanship may also be found in The Hymnary and other modern tune-books. His most important contribution to this department of music, however, is his "European Psalmist," which is well-known as one of the finest existing collections of psalmody. For the instrument on which he was so great a master he published but little.

Owing to his naturally retiring and sensitive temperament, Dr. Wesley was less generally appreciated than he deserved. He was a genuine artist who has left his mark upon music in this country, and the place which has become vacant by his decease will not easily be filled.

The prospectus of Her Majesty's Opera, being unusually barren of promises, may nevertheless introduce a season unusually brilliant in results. A first appearance in England will be made by Mdlle. Mila Rodani, who is cast for some of the principal soprano parts; and a new tenor, Signor Stagno, is evidently intended to be made much of during the thirty nights over which the season will extend. There can be no doubt that M. Faure will be found a valuable acquisition to a company usually somewhat weak in baritones. The revival of Cherubini's "Medea," with Mdlle. Tietjens in the character of the heroine, is the only event of special interest announced; but the success of "Lohengrin" last season will no doubt justify the lessee in giving the disciples of Wagner many opportunities of again hearing this Opera. The 29th ult. is named in the prospectus as the opening night, the performances still being given in Drury Lane Theatre, pending the completion of what Mr. Mapleson insists upon calling the "Grand National Opera House," on the Thames embankment.

We have often been struck with the incongruity of character in the compositions displayed in many of the music-shops of our metropolis, pianoforte works by accredited writers being placed in the same window with glaringly-illustrated comic songs. It appears, however, that this peculiarity is even more observable on the other side of the Atlantic, for in a recent advertisement of an American publisher we see "Our Patriot Flag," "God is love," and "Tommy make room for your Uncle." Perhaps where one house issues such varied vocal pieces as we have named, it would be well to divide the list into two parts, so that all may know precisely where to look for the class of song they require; for it certainly does appear strange to read in a catalogue of instrumental works, headed "New Music for February," Bach's Fantasia in C Minor, and the "Lightning Bug Galop."

Much has been said lately about musical degrees, and attention has been drawn to the questions submitted to those who desire to acquire these distinctive marks of honour. As a rule, the tests appear well suited to gauge the theoretical knowledge of the student; but may not a person have thoroughly mastered the subject upon which he invites examination without being able to answer the following queries, which we find in a recent paper prepared for candidates seeking the degree of Mus. Doc.?—

"Describe briefly the contrivances in the human ear for receiving musical sounds.

"Write down one of the extant Greek melodies.

"Give examples from the works of Gounod of the following:—

a. Delayed progression.
b. Variation of a key as a means of intensifying expression.
c. Use of the harp in orchestra.
d. Imitation of natural sounds by instrumentation.

"Why can the song of birds be very seldom written down musically?"

"Oboy's London Letter," which regularly appears in the Music Trade Review, continues to furnish the Americans with news as reliable as the announcement, upon which we recently commented, that the Dean and Chapter of Worcester had been compelled, "by the pressure of public opinion," to give their Cathedral for the Triennial Festival. In the number published on the 1st April (an appropriate date, by the way,) "Oboy" informs his readers that Sir F. Gore Ouseley has "finished an oratorio, 'Hagar,' which is to be performed at the Brixton Angelltown Institute." Seeing that this work, produced at the Hereford Festival of 1873, was most extensively criticised by the metropolitan and provincial journals; and that, in consequence of its success, it was given in the following year at the Crystal Palace, it seems almost incredible that it should be mentioned as a new oratorio, especially by one who dates his letter from London, and prides himself upon faithfully recording English musical events.

The performance of Bach's Mass in B minor, under the direction of Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, occurs too late for notice in our present number; but at the rehearsal, which took place on the 24th ult., at St. James's Hall, not only the brightness and excessive accuracy of the chorus singing, but the care with which the work, in all its details, had been prepared, elicited the most enthusiastic marks of approbation from the listeners, amongst which were most of the eminent musicians now in the metropolis.

The "Musical Bee," which took place at the Assembly Rooms, St. John's Wood, on the 10th ult., under the presidency of Mr. Brinley Richards, assisted by Messrs. Wallworth and Wingham, resulted in drawing forth more amateur talent than could have been fairly calculated upon. To criticise the endeavours of the various competitors would be an unnecessary task; but we may say that the pianoforte-playing, both of works known and unknown to the performers, and the sight-singing—especially of one gentleman, who read a song of Handel's with an accuracy and intelligence which surprised even the examiners—were of a very high order of merit. Mr. Stroud L. Cocks—to whom we are indebted for the idea of these meetings, and who doubtless selected the valuable musical prizes which were plentifully distributed—deserves every credit for so successfully carrying out a project which in time, must unquestionably have the effect of healthfully stimulating the taste for classical works amongst the general public.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The series of Saturday Concerts at the Crystal Palace is now concluded, the interest having been well sustained to the last. Taking up our record where we left it last month, we have first to notice the very fine performance at the concert of the 1st ult., of Raff's violoncello concerto, by Signor Piatti. Joachim Raff, one of the most prolific of living composers, is gradually obtaining in this country the recognition which he has long since received in Germany. Three of his symphonies have already been heard here, and a fourth (No. 2, in C major) is among the promises for this season at the Philharmonic Concerts. His concerto for the violoncello is, like many of his other works, remarkable for cleverness of construction rather than for decided originality of invention. It is, however, so melodious, and so admirably written both for solo instrument and orchestra, that with such a rendering as it received from Signor Piatti, its success could not be other than certain. At the same concert an overture entitled "Les Muses," the last composition, we believe of the recently deceased Alfred Holmes, was brought forward for the first time, but without producing any great impression.

A very excellent performance of Beethoven's "Mount of Olives," the solo parts being given by Madame Osgood, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and Signor Foli, occupied the greater part of the afternoon on the 8th; but the special novelty of this concert was the first production at the Crystal Palace, of Spohr's Concerto for clarinet in C minor, Op. 26. Though hardly one of its composer's greatest works, the Concerto is full of graceful melody. The solo part, which is very showy, and, in some passages of great difficulty, was played to absolute perfection by Mr. G. A. Clinton, whose tone, execution, and phrasing were alike above reproach. Mr. Clinton is certainly one of our finest clarinettists, and we shall hope to hear him on some future occasion. At the same concert a quartett-movement for strings, by Schubert, was given, according to the modern most objectionable fashion, by all the strings of the orchestra. The performance was admirable; nevertheless the result was a mere caricature of the composer's intentions.

The concert of the 15th, as regards its programme, one of the most interesting of the season, was unfortunately one of the least successful as regards the performance. The specialty of the afternoon was Brahms's Cantata "Rinaldo," for tenor solo, male-voice chorus, and orchestra. Owing to the concert taking place at Easter-time, a large number of the chorus were absent, not only from the performance, but from the final rehearsal; and as the music is very difficult, it was not only necessary to omit the concluding chorus altogether, but the rest of the work was, as far as its choral portions were concerned, very ineffectively given. On the other hand, the tenor solo part was splendidly sung by Mr. Edward Lloyd, and the semi-choruses were given to perfection by the London Vocal Union, under the direction of Mr. F. Walker. The Cantata itself is one of Brahms's noblest and maturest works; but those who heard it on this occasion for the first time would form but an imperfect idea of its beauty. Mendelssohn's Cantata "To the Sons of Art," was given at the same concert, and the opening number was Schumann's Festival Overture, Op. 123. This clever work is founded on the old "Rhein-wein-lied," which is sung by the chorus at the end of the overture: nearly the whole of the subjects are taken from various portions of the melody.

The concert last noticed concluded the regular winter series, but on the following Saturday (the 22nd) Mr. Manns's benefit concert took place. On such occasions the esteemed conductor usually presents a very attractive programme, and the present was no exception. In addition to Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony, and the last two movements of Chopin's concerto in F minor, which were most admirably played by Miss Anna Mehlig, the instrumental portion of the concert comprised three works, which were novelties at Sydenham. The first of these was the late Sir Sterndale Bennett's orchestral prelude to the music of Sophocles' "Ajax," which was first produced at one of the Philharmonic Concerts in 1872. Two romances by Schumann, for oboe and piano, were charmingly given by M. Dubrucq, one of the first living oboe-players, and Mr. Franklin Taylor. The third novelty was interesting, from the fact of its being a small unpublished work by Mendelssohn. It is a little duet for harp and piano, entitled "The Evening Bell," written in 1829, during his first visit to this country, for his friend Mr. Thomas Attwood, by the kindness of whose son, the Rev. George Attwood, a copy was furnished to the Crystal Palace. It is an unpretending little trifle, of no special musical interest, and was excellently rendered by Messrs. E. Lockwood and Franklin Taylor. Among the vocal music should be mentioned two new and graceful songs, "Zuleika," and "Little Birdie," from the pen of Mr. Manns, both of which (the former sung by Mr. E. Lloyd and the latter by Madame Patey) were very successful.

The season of concerts now concluded has been no less rich in novelty than its predecessors, forty-five works, of more or less importance, having been brought forward for the first time. Of these, twelve were by English composers. Though the performances of the chorus have too frequently left much to desire, Mr. Manns cannot be too warmly complimented on the splendid playing of his orchestra, which has fully maintained its reputation as the finest in this country, and probably also as the equal of the best continental orchestras.

ALEXANDRA PALACE.

By his revival of Handel's "Esther" before Christmas, Mr. Weist Hill conferred a benefit upon the musical public; and had he done nothing more during his first season of office at the Alexandra Palace, he would still have earned the gratitude of musicians. He has, however, increased their obligations by the production, on the 1st ult., of "Susanna," one of Handel's works which is even less known than "Esther." This oratorio was announced as performed on this occasion for the first time during the present century, and there is no reason to doubt the correctness of the statement. The song "If guiltless blood be your intent," and the chorus "Righteous Heaven" have been given at one of the Handel Festivals at the Crystal Palace; but with the exception of these two numbers, we do not remember to have heard a single note of the music in public.

"Susanna" was composed in the year 1748, very shortly after "Solomon," and a more striking contrast than that exhibited by these two works can hardly be conceived. The traces of Handel's peculiar style are equally visible in both oratorios, but they show us entirely different phases of his genius. In "Solomon," as our readers are doubtless aware, the chief interest centres (as in most of Handel's oratorios) in the choruses: the songs, with two or three exceptions, are of secondary interest. "Susanna," on the other hand, belongs to a small group (including also "Hercules" and "Alexander Balus"), in which the reverse is the case; the choral portion of the work is comparatively unimportant, while the solos are of especial value. There are in all but nine choruses in the present work, and of these only "How long, O Lord," "Righteous Heaven," and the introduction of "O Joachim!" can be said to be in Handel's grandest style. The songs, on the contrary, are throughout the work remarkable, not only for their intrinsic musical beauty, but for their dramatic truth of expression, being worthy of comparison in this respect even with those of "Samson."

The subject of the oratorio is certainly not an attractive one, nor is it rendered more so by its treatment. In its original form the libretto is not only one of the worst specimens of doggerel which Handel ever set to music, but it is also in many places so coarse in its expressions that one wonders how respectable ladies a century ago could sit it out. In the octavo edition, however, which was used at the Alexandra Palace on this occasion, sundry judicious alterations of the text were made (as has occasionally been found desirable in some of the other oratorios—e.g. "Solomon" and "Theodora"); and thus the offensiveness was reduced within the smallest possible limits. It is probable that the audience did not trouble themselves much about the words at all, in the presence of music of so much beauty and power as the whole scene between Susanna and the two Elders in the second part of the oratorio. Handel has written nothing more charming, more seductive in its beauty, than the song of the First Elder "Blooming as the face of spring" to which the air of the Second Elder, "The torrent that sweeps in its course" is in such admirable contrast, while the succeeding trio, "Away, away, ye tempt me both in vain," is one of the finest pieces of dramatic characterization to be found in the whole of its composer's works. Among other fine solo numbers of the oratorio may be named the songs "Clouds o'ertake the brightest day," and "Kneeling at the throne of glory," Ye verdant hills," and "The oak that for a thousand years," in the first part, and at least an equal number in the second and third, the mere enumeration of which would be of little interest to those who do not know the music, while it would be unnecessary to those who do. By virtue of its solos, "Susanna" must take a high rank among its composer's oratorios.

The performance of the whole work was a most admirable one. The part of Susanna was excellently sung by Miss Anna Williams, that of her husband, Joachim, by Miss Julia Elton, and those of the two Elders by Mr. W. Shakespeare and Signor Foli, while Miss Marie Arthur and Mr. C. Tinney sustained the subordinate soprano and bass parts. The chorus-singing was extremely good throughout, a fact which is the more creditable both to singers and conductor, as the music was not only unfamiliar but decidedly more difficult than in most of Handel's oratorios. The organ was ably played by Mr. F. Archer, who accompanied all the recitatives with great taste. We congratulate Mr. Hill on returning to this legitimate method in place of the traditional scraping of the violoncello. The additional accompaniments to the work, by Mr. J. Halberstadt, were both effective and discreet—more so, in our opinion, than those which he had previously written for "Esther," in which the brass was in places obtrusive. The revival was so completely successful that we trust "Susanna" will be repeated at an early date.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The season at this establishment has been progressing during the past month in that quiet, uneventful manner, which, although offering no attraction to the music-loving public, seems sufficiently satisfactory to those who "go to the Opera," as they fulfil other fashionable duties. Mdlle. Albani, Mdlle. Thalberg, and Mdlle. Marimon have been warmly received, the first-named lady returning to us much improved, both in vocal and histrionic power. The débutante, Mdlle. Rosavella, has timidity and inexperience to overcome before she can take a firm hold of the audience. The part she chose for her first appearance—Violetta, in "La Traviata"—gave her frequent opportunities of proving that she has a voice of extensive compass, the scena "Ah fors e lui," in spite of its difficulty, being the great success of the evening, but her manner is somewhat constrained at present. Signor Carpi, who appeared last season in the character of Lohengrin, is gradually advancing in public estimation; and Signor Bolis created such a favourable impression as Edgardo, in "Lucia," that we are inclined to expect much from him during the season. The first incident of any interest to musicians will be the production of Wagner's "Tannhäuser," which is announced for the 6th inst.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

Presuming that a funeral service is a legitimate composition to place before a Philharmonic audience at St. James's Hall, we may congratulate the Society upon the second presentation of Brahms's "Requiem," which was given on the 6th ult., and applauded with a vehemence most complimentary to everybody concerned in its execution, however such audible expression of satisfaction might shock the sensitive nature of those who felt the religious purport of the work. The originality displayed in this "Requiem" prevents anything like comparison with those masterpieces which have been bequeathed to us by the great composers who have passed away; it must be judged only as the earnest outpouring of an artist who feels the importance of his mission and dares to think for himself. Many of the movements are masterly specimens of constructive power; and the orchestral colouring, although in parts somewhat overladen, is generally in excellent tone with the subject of the text. The baritone solo, with chorus, "Lord, make me to know the measure of my days," may be cited as one of the most impressive numbers of the work; and the choral pieces are written with due regard to the solemnity of the words, and a careful avoidance of mere display. The fault so observable in modern German music, of over elaboration, is less apparent in this than in many other of the works of this composer; and, save where restlessness of tonality induces restlessness with the listeners, we have but little fault to find with the modulations so frequently occurring throughout the work. In the solos, Mrs. Osgood and Mr. Wadmore were exceedingly effective, the lady's rendering of the somewhat difficult music allotted to her evidencing the result of careful and intelligent study. Another important feature in the programme of the evening was the fine performance of Spohr's violin Concerto in E minor, by Herr Joachim; and when we add that the purely orchestral works were Beethoven's Symphony in D (No. 2), and Mendelssohn's Overture, "Ruy Blas," it will be seen that the concert was in every respect of the highest interest. Mr. Cusins, who conducted as usual, deserves every credit for the excellent manner in which he directed Brahms's "Requiem."

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Six scholarships have been competed for at this Institution during the past month. The first was the Lady Goldsmid Scholarship, consisting of two years' free education in the Royal Academy of Music, for female pianists between the ages of 14 and 21 years. It was presented to the country by the lady whose name it bears. The examiners were:—Sir Julius Benedict, Messrs. F. R. Cox, M. Garcia, F. B. Jewson, Brinley Richards, Harold Thomas, and the Principal. There were 43 candidates, and the scholarship was awarded to Miss Ethel Goold. Highly commended: Miss Margaret Bucknall. Commended: Miss Edith Brand, Miss Borton, Miss Burnett, Miss Gilbert, Miss Goldsbro', Miss Heathcote, Miss Percival, Miss Thurgood, Miss White. The second was the Sterndale Bennett Scholarship, founded by subscription as a testimonial to the late Sir Sterndale Bennett, Principal of the Royal Academy of Music from 1866 to 1875, and open for competition to British-born subjects biennially in any branch of music to male candidates between the ages of 16 and 21 years. The Examiners were Sir Julius Benedict, Messrs. F. R. Cox, F. B. Jewson, H. C. Lunn, Walter Macfarren, A. Randegger, and the Principal. There were nine candidates, two of whom, not having passed the preliminary literary examination, were excluded from the competition; and the scholarship was awarded to Mr. Tom Silver. The third was the Sir Francis Goldsmid Scholarship, two years' free education in the Royal Academy of Music, for female pianists between the ages of 12 and 16 years, who show the greatest promise of artistic excellence. The scholarship was awarded to Miss Clara Cooper. Highly commended: Miss Kate Robinson. Commended: Miss M. Hann, Miss Ehrenberg, Miss Ducat, Miss Gibson, Miss Shapley, Miss Silberberg. There were thirty-five candidates. The fourth was the Parepa-Rosa Scholarship, instituted by Mr. Carl Rosa, in memory of his late wife. This consists of two years' free musical education in the Royal Academy of Music, to be contended for by British-born female vocalists, not having been students at the Academy, between the ages of 18 and 22 years. The examiners were Messrs. F. R. Cox, E. Fiori, M. Garcia, A. Randegger, P. Sainton, Walter Macfarren, T. A. Wallworth, and the Principal. There were 22 candidates, and the scholarship was awarded to Miss Clara Samuell. Highly commended: Miss Ida Patterson and Miss Ethel Winthrop. The fifth and sixth were the Professors' Scholarships, founded by the professors and their friends, for the advancement of orchestral studies; two years' free musical education in the Royal Academy of Music for the best player on the violin, and the best player on any other orchestral instrument. The examiners were Messrs. F. R. Cox, M. Garcia, H. C. Lunn, Walter Macfarren, A. Randegger, Brinley Richards, P. Sainton, and the Principal. There were eight candidates, and the results were as follows: for the violin, Miss Julia de Nolte. Highly commended: Miss Ada Brand. For the double bass, Mr. Alfred Harper.

We learn, from the report of the General Committee of the Birmingham Triennial Musical Festival, that the following will be the main features of the proposed programme for the Festival of August next:—Tuesday morning, "Elijah" (Mendelssohn); Tuesday evening, Cantata, "The Corsair" (Cowen), and miscellaneous second part; Wednesday morning, new Oratorio, "The Resurrection" (Macfarren); Wednesday evening, new sacred Cantata, "Zion" (Gade), and miscellaneous second part; Thursday morning, "The Messiah" (Handel); Thursday evening, Cantata, "The Crusaders" (Gade), and miscellaneous second part; Friday morning, "The Last Judgment" (Spohr); "Last Supper" (Wagner), and Mass, No. 1, in C (Beethoven); Friday evening, "St. Paul" (Mendelssohn). The chief novelty of the Festival will be the Oratorio of Mr. Macfarren, in which the principal solos will be sung by Mr. Santley. The Danish composer, Niels Gade, will be represented by a new sacred Cantata, and by a secular Cantata, "The Crusaders." Mr. F. H. Cowen's new Cantata, "The Corsair," is based on Byron's poem; and Richard Wagner's sacred Cantata, "The Last Supper," is described as a grand composition for voices and orchestra. Engagements with most of the principal singers have already been concluded; the choral rehearsals are proceeding with regularity, and the band is now in process of organisation.

AT the second and third of Mr. Willem Coenen's "Chamber Concerts of Modern Music," the selection of works was extremely interesting. Brahms's Quartett, for strings, in C minor, produced at the second concert, will assuredly assert its right to be again and again heard at performances devoted to chamber compositions, for we are satisfied that increased familiarity with its many beauties will render it a favourite both with audiences and executants. The "Adagio" is a charming movement, and its popular character of course ensured it a warmer welcome than was accorded to the rest of the composition, the elaborate nature of which could not be appreciated by the most attentive listener at a single hearing. Schumann's Trio for pianoforte, viola, and clarionet, in which the concert-giver was ably supported by Messrs. Zerbini and Lazarus, produced a marked effect, the melodious third movement displaying Mr. Lazarus's exquisite tone and power of expression to the greatest advantage. Mr. A. C. Mackenzie's quartett—played at these concerts, and commented upon by us last season—was well received, the brilliancy and certainty of touch exhibited by Mr. Coenen in the difficult pianoforte part being the theme of universal admiration. One of the most interesting features in the programme of the third and final concert, on the 13th ult., was Raff's Sonata in D major, for pianoforte and violoncello, rendered to perfection by Messrs. Coenen and Daubert. The second movement, marked "Vivace," is a perfect gem, and fairly took the audience by surprise, the two artists so thoroughly sympathising with each other throughout as to cause a murmur of satisfaction at the conclusion, which, to the credit of the executants, was not seized upon as an encore. Schumann's string quartett in A major (Op. 41, No. 3), and Gernsheim's pianoforte quartett in C minor (Op. 20), were also important items in the programme, and were received with the warmest marks of approbation. Mr. Coenen, with the modesty of a true artist, has but rarely put himself forward alone at these concerts, but on this occasion he performed a solo of his own composition, "Caprice Serenade," with a delicacy of touch and brilliancy of finger which made us long to hear more of his playing. The refined and melodious subject upon which this little sketch is based—alternately sung with the right and left hand, and surrounded by the most graceful passages of ornament—will recommend it to all who cultivate the highest order of drawing-room music; for should those who attempt it not be gifted with the composer's executive powers, even moderately played, we are satisfied that the piece would make its way. Before closing our notice, we must not forget to make special mention of Mr. Wiener's violin solos, which elicited the most enthusiastic applause, and also to award a word of praise for the vocal pieces contributed at the second concert by Miss Sophie Ferrari, and at the third by Miss Wilhelmina Gips.

THE St. George's Glee Union's usual monthly concert, given on the 7th ult., was entirely sacred, the first part being devoted to a selection from Haydn's "Creation," the solos of which were sung by Miss Goldsmith and Messrs. J. Jekyll and Conrad King, the first of whom gained great applause by her excellent rendering of "With verdure clad." The choruses were tolerably well sung by the choir, "The heavens are telling," being especially worthy of mention. The accompaniments were excellently played by Miss Secretan and Mr. Geo. F. Smith, R.A.M. Mr. Garside conducted with his accustomed ability. The second part was miscellaneous, and included several vocal pieces, in which Misses Bessie Spear, White, and Goldsmith, Messrs. A. Wilkinson, Jekyll, Coles, and Tom Ellis took part with much success, the duet, "Quis est homo," from Rossini's "Stabat Mater," by Miss Goldsmith and Miss Bessie Spear, being one of the best performances of the evening. The second part was conducted by Mr. Joseph Monday.

WE extract the following remarks from the "Scottish Guardian," of the 1st ult.:—"A very enjoyable Organ Recital was given in the University Music Classroom on 30th March, by Professor Oakeley. The emphatic applause of the student part of the audience was doubtless meant as a 'counterblast' to Professor Blackie's newspaper attack on the University concert. Our versatile Professor of Greek, on his return from that concert, penned a letter to the Scotsman finding grievous fault with the programme, of which, in his opinion, the 'national music' of Scotland ought to have formed the main element. Out of this letter grew a correspondence, which has day by day filled a large space in the leading Edinburgh journal, and in the course of which the Professor returned to the charge to denounce in unmeasured terms the teaching in our schools of any other music than that of Scotland. The Professor of Greek is but one out of many Scotsmen who are capable of having their patriotic emotions touched by a Scotch song, but are so incapable of entering into music in any higher form that they will sit with weariness or even disgust through the performance of the finest symphony ever composed. Such persons ought assuredly not to pretend to a pleasure in music which they do not feel; but neither ought they to fling words like 'false culture,' 'snobbery,' and 'flunkyism' at the heads of those whom superior susceptibility or higher training has enabled to enjoy the great masterpieces of musical art. As an instance of the competency of the letter-writers who have followed in the Professor's wake to discuss musical questions, one of them considers that the symphony 'is to be recommended chiefly as a vigorous exercise of the throat, but cannot be called music in the highest sense of the term'. Another likens a Scotch air to 'the carol of the lark,' any of Schubert's lyrics being by comparison but 'the chattering of a magpie.' Nowhere but in Scotland could the correspondence columns of an influential newspaper be filled for weeks with a discussion whether or not national melody is the highest existing form of musical art. Let us hope that the efforts of Professor Oakeley to lead the young generation to an acquaintance with and love of the divine art may materially aid in wiping away the reproach of Scotland, that she is the only country in Christendom which, until very recently, had not advanced beyond the merest rudiments of music, and has never produced a musical composer."

THE Aldermanbury Musical Society gave a concert under the patronage of Mr. Alderman and Sheriff Knight at the Foresters' Hall, Wilderness-row, on Monday, the 3rd ult. The artists were Miss Marian Stringer, Miss Florence Talbot, Miss Louie Wood, and Mr. S. Crome. "The God of Israel," "To Thee, great Lord," "Bridal Chorus" (Rose Maiden), and "O hush thee, my babie," were excellently sung by the choir. Miss Stringer was highly effective in "With verdure clad," "The beating of my own heart," &c. Miss Talbot and Miss Wood also deserve favourable mention. Mr. Crome was heard to great advantage in "Now heaven in fullest glory shone," and "Twenty years." Pianoforte solos were also contributed by Mr. Fred. H. Cosens and Mr. J. Green, R.A.M. The concert was conducted by Mr. Geo. Shinn.

AN excellent concert took place at the Birkbeck Institution on the 12th ult., under the direction of Mr. Stedman, when he was assisted by Miss Annie Sinclair, Miss Marie Duval, Miss Dones, Miss Lizzie Turner, Mr. George Fox, Mr. Richard Blagrove, and Mr. Henry Parker, all of whom were successful in their rendering of the respective pieces allotted to them. Among the novelties introduced were a new ballad, "Dover Bay," by F. R. Statham, sung by Mr. George Fox, and a "Valse de Concert," composed and performed by Mr. Henry Parker, both of which were well received.

A special service was held on Thursday evening in Passion week, at Holy Trinity, Haverstock Hill, when Dr. Stainer's setting of the "Miserere mei Deus," and Handel's "St. John Passion" were sung by a choir numbering one hundred voices, assisted by a band. The solo parts were rendered by Masters Connor and Potter, Messrs. Goodwin and Speer, of the choir of St. Botolph's, Aldersgate, and Mr. Herbert Wilson, of All Saints', Margaret Street. Mr. J. J. Stephens, organist of St. John, Clapham Rise, presided at the organ, Mr. T. A. Blake, organist of St James, Croydon, at the pianoforte (kindly lent by J. Broadwood and Sons), and Mr. J. R. Murray, organist of St. Botolph, Aldersgate, and Holy Trinity, Haverstock Hill, conducted.

On Wednesday evening, the 5th ult., Mr. Ferdinand Praeger delivered a lecture entitled "An Hour's Musical Gossip," at the Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts. The lecturer commenced by saying that the stiff orthodoxy of most musical professors of the present day—their incessant hunting after consecutive fifths and eighths—reminded him very much of the master singers of the 15th and 16th centuries. He then proceeded to explain the origin and peculiar rhythm of most dances, and described the characteristics of the national dances of various countries. He also explained most clearly the origin of, and accounted for the peculiarities of all pastoral music. The lecturer thought it a pity that the art of composition was not more taught amongst the young, as it would tend greatly to increase originality if they were taught to express their own thoughts and feelings rather than to imitate those of others. In illustration of the lecture, Mr. Michael Dwyer sang two songs from Wagner's "Lohengrin," and two manuscript songs by Mr. Praeger, which were deservedly applauded.

The Organ Recital at the Bow and Bromley Institute, by Mr. C. J. Frost, on the 8th ult., was extremely good, the performer showing much manipulative skill and a thorough knowledge of the highest school of pedalling, which qualities were especially exhibited in his playing of Bach's fugue in B minor. Batiste's "Elevation" in F major, with its effective variations, gave great satisfaction, as also did an "Allegro, un poco maestoso," by B. Tours. An "Adagio," by E. Silas (in D major), was very attractively rendered; and a charming melody by H. Smart (in G major) also received full justice. The performer gave two specimens of his own composition, announced in the programme as being in course of publication with others by the same author. These were well performed and warmly applauded. The vocal illustrations were successfully sung by Miss Harries, R.A.M., who was encored in two of her songs. Dr. W. Spark was the organist at the Recital on the 22nd ult.

The concluding Concert of the season of the Bow and Bromley Institute took place on the 24th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. W. G. McNaught, the energetic and painstaking trainer of the Tonic Sol-fa Choirs, whose prize choir of certificated singers sang the choruses and part-songs in a very effective manner, especially the choruses from Purcell's "Macbeth" music, and the same composer's "Come if you dare" (solo by Mr. Stedman). Miss Lizzie Evans, who has a telling voice, Mr. Stedman in the "Pilgrim of Love," and Mr. Wharton in "Honour and Arms," secured the warm appreciation of a large audience. A selected number of the Crystal Palace Band, under the superintendence of Mr. George Webb, played most of the accompaniments, and also gave the gavotte "Louis XIII.," and two Overtures, in good style. Mr. Alfred Carder took his usual duties at the organ and pianoforte with his accustomed skill. The Committee of this Institution, with their obliging Secretary, Mr. William Foster, have earned the thanks of all musical people for their continued efforts for the advancement of the love of good music in their district by means of the Monday Evening Concerts and Saturday Organ Recitals.

We are informed that at the concert in aid of the Cheesemongers' Benevolent Institution, (held on the 19th ult. at the Royal Albert Hall), one thousand guineas, at least, was realised, and that this sum will be forthwith handed over to the Institution.

The Passiontide and Easter services at St. Stephen's, Lewisham, have been marked by some special features. On Thursday evening, in Passion week, Mendelssohn's "Christus" was performed with excellent effect. On Good Friday evening a special service was held, which included a short selection from the "Messiah," and the solo and chorus "With Jesus I will watch and pray," from Bach's "St. Matthew Passion," solo by Mr. G. F. Carter, of Westminster Abbey. The Rev. Canon Gregory preached. On Easter Sunday morning the English version of Gounod's "Messe Solennelle" was sung. The above were given with instrumental accompaniments, and were under the direction of Mr. C. Warwick Jordan, Mus. Bac., Oxon.

Miss Amy Stewart (a pupil of Herr Sauerbrey), gave a pianoforte recital, at Langham Hall, on the 5th ult., when she played with much success selections from Chopin, Schubert, Beethoven, Schumann, and Heller, and two compositions by Herr Sauerbrey. Madame Sauerbrey sang Schubert's Serenade and Mozart's "Voi che sapete." The room was well filled.

At the sixth trial of new compositions by the "Musical Artists' Society," held at the Royal Academy of Music on the 1st ult., amongst the many interesting works given may be mentioned a trio in D, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, by Mr. F. E. Gladstone; a romance, for pianoforte and violoncello, by Mr. E. H. Thorne; Ferdinand Hiller's "Suite Moderne" (excellently played on the pianoforte by Mr. George Wheeldon), and two pianoforte solos by Mr. J. B. Calkin, effectively rendered by the composer. Two well-written songs by Mrs. O'Leary-Vinning—the first sung by Miss Marion Severn, and the second by Miss A. Butterworth—elicited warm applause. Mr. Arthur O'Leary and Mr. Eaton Faning presided at the pianoforte.

A Sacred Concert was given by Miss Marian Pocklington, at Wellington Hall, Barnsbury, on the evening of Good Friday, when she was assisted by Misses A. Barnet and Elmore, and Messrs. H. Horscroft, J. Hayden, and P. Locton King. A varied programme was well rendered, several pieces being re-demanded.

At the Alexandra Palace Symphony Competition, the first prize has been awarded to Francis Davenport, and the second to C. Villiers Stanford. Judges: Professor George Alexander Macfarren, Mus. Doc., Cantab., and Professor Joseph Joachim. There were 38 Symphonies submitted.

Mr. William Goodwin, whose death occurred on the 1st ult., was a man whose honourable career had earned for him the respect and esteem of the many musicians, both professional and amateur, with whom, during the last fifty years, he had been associated. He was well known as an excellent musician—although in his professional capacity as copyist and librarian, such exceptional acquirements were but rarely called forth—and at the approaching Festivals his loss will be severely felt by the numerous artists who had learned to value his uniform kindliness of manner and punctuality in business.

The singers of the Societies "Verein" and "Sangerkranz" performed before the Queen during her stay at Coburg.

A correspondent asks us whether the "Pianograph," a machine for registering upon prepared paper any notes played on the pianoforte, is still in existence; and, if so, where it is to be procured. Can any of our readers supply the desired information?

unusual—phase of Haydn's genius; here we have the cheerful genial writer, whose sacred music is the reflection of his own kindly and happy nature, and of whom it is recorded that he once said that the thought of the Divine goodness inspired him with such joy that he believed he should even set a Miserere to lively music.

The present work is in three movements which follow one another without a pause. After a symphony of eight bars, the chorus enters in unison, but with full harmony in the orchestra, with a subject apparently founded upon the eighth Gregorian tone. At the words "All the earth doth worship Thee" the chorus break into harmony with a florid accompaniment for the violins, such as may be found in the masses Haydn wrote for Prince Esterhazy. From this point the music flows along in one stream of melody, the only objection to which is that (as is often the case with our composer) it is certainly rather light in style for sacred music, up to the words "We believe that Thou shalt come to be our Judge." We abstain from attempting any detailed description of the music, simply because such description would be at best very imperfectly intelligible without the aid of musical quotations. It will suffice to say that the interest never flags, and that whatever may be thought as to its suitability for church purposes, there will hardly be two opinions as to its being equally pleasing to sing and to listen to. At the words "We therefore pray Thee, help Thy servants," the key changes from C major to C minor (Adagio). This more solemn vein of thought, however, is of very short duration—only ten bars; and at the very next verse of the hymn, "Make them to be numbered with Thy saints," Haydn is back again in the major (Tempo Primo), and as lively as ever. At the "Vouchsafe, O Lord," a rather long transition into the relative minor occurs, and the style of the music becomes somewhat more devotional. The concluding verse, "O Lord in Thee have I trusted," is treated fugally. No one was ever happier than Haydn in his contrapuntal writing, and the present specimen—a fugue on two subjects—may compare with the best examples to be found in his masses. Toward the end of the movement the strict style is abandoned, and a somewhat extended coda is introduced, an important feature of which is the new subject in the bass (pp. 27, 28 of the present edition), in which, at the words "Let me never be confounded," the voice falls through the interval of a diminished seventh from A♭ to B♮.

Though it cannot be said that the re-publication of the present work will add anything to Haydn's renown, it is none the less a welcome addition to the octavo series; and from its extremely pleasing character, and only moderate difficulty, will be likely to prove very acceptable to choral Societies in search of a novelty.

O ye that love the Lord. Anthem. Composed by Sir George Elvey.

A FOOT-NOTE on the first page of this piece informs us that it is taken from the author's Festival Anthem, "The Lord is King." If our memory serves us correctly, that work is written with orchestral accompaniment; and in this fact we find a probable explanation of the continuous figure of triplet quavers in the pianoforte (not organ) part of the present piece. The whole accompaniment, indeed, is strongly suggestive of violins; and we can hardly help thinking that had Sir George Elvey written it for the organ, he would have adopted a different style of treatment. The chorus is very melodious, and written in the free imitative style of which Mendelssohn in his sacred music has given us so many happy examples. The present piece is Mendelssohnian in feeling rather than in phrases. From the nature of its accompaniment it is in its present shape adapted to chamber rather than to church use; but a judicious organist would find little difficulty in making such slight modifications, without in any way altering the spirit of the original, as would render the instrumental part effective on the organ, in case it should be desired to introduce the Anthem in divine service—such modifications, we mean, as he would make, for instance, in accompanying on the organ such a chorus as "He watching over Israel" in Elijah, in which a continuous triplet figure is also a prominent feature.

An Evening Service—Cantate Domino and Deus Misereatur. By ROBERT TAYLOR.

THE present service, though unpretentious in form, being mostly for unison chorus, and requiring no detailed notice, deserves a word of commendation for its melodious character, and still more for its excellent and musicianly workmanship. We read it through in the course of our reviewing duties just after perusing a quantity of the weak and "shiftless" trash so often sent to the unfortunate critic, the only appropriate place for which is the waste-paper basket; and only those who have passed through similar experiences can imagine the relief of finding a work written by one who really knows how to modulate decently, and whose ideas of rhythm, and still more of harmonic progression, are not of the vaguest and crudest kind. Mr. Taylor's harmonies are always well chosen, and he has a good feeling for musical contrast. As an instance of this we may cite the happy effect of the change from F to D major at the words "Praise the Lord upon the harp." The whole service, in short, is excellent, and so easy as to be practicable for any choir of even ordinary attainments. We may point out that a ♯ has been omitted before the B in the organ part on the first bar of the third page.

St. Cecilia's Day. A Cantata, in Vocal Score. Composed by J. B. Van Bree.

THE publication of this Cantata in Novello's well-known Octavo edition will be a boon to Choral Societies desirous of increasing their répertoire by the introduction of good but unhackneyed compositions which shall be attractive to a general audience. Van Bree was a prolific composer, having produced Masses, Psalms, Overtures, Quartetts, and several dramatic works, amongst which may be mentioned "Sappho," which is said to have obtained a brilliant success. The melodious character of the Cantata before us will be a certain passport to its public acceptance. The choruses are extremely simple in construction, and the Recitatives which string them together, although not lengthy, are well written and effective. The florid air, with Recitative, "Frascati, clad with beauty," and the solo, accompanied by the chorus, "Give way now to pleasure," will require a light soprano voice; but they are both so exceedingly tuneful as to ensure success. Judging from the pianoforte arrangement, we should imagine that some beautiful effects are contained in the full score, which we find is also published. The accompaniments are by no means difficult; and for a drawing-room piece, with a small choir, the Cantata will be found most available.

Sunday Musings. Six short pieces.
Children's Fancies. Easy Sketches.
Harvest Home. A Pastoral Sketch.

Composed by Ridley Prentice.

OF the six pieces under the title of "Sunday Musings," only two have been forwarded; and indeed by the list on the title-page, these appear to be all that are yet published. They are well written, though somewhat dull; but by many who associate this characteristic with music suitable for Sabbath performance, will be no doubt warmly welcomed. The first of the "Children's Fancies" has a lively melody, in 6-8 rhythm, for the principal subject, followed by a somewhat harsh double pedal, scarcely in character, we think, with the title—"The Fairies"—which the composer has given to the piece. No. 2, of these "Easy Sketches" is headed "Listen," but we can hardly see why. The theme, in A minor, is extremely attractive; and young players will find some good practice throughout this little trifle, which occupies but three pages. "Harvest Home" is a more ambitious composition, and decidedly the best of the number now under notice. The subject is bright and spirited; and if we except an abrupt transition from major to minor and back again, in the first page, the piece is thoroughly to our mind. The pastoral feeling is well preserved, and we can cordially commend the composition to the attention of amateur pianists.

Gavotte (Festivale). By Alfred B. Allen.

This piece was composed for and performed at Mr. Kuhe's Brighton Festival during the present year. We should imagine that, being originally intended for an orchestral work, its effects are much enfeebled in the pianoforte transcription before us; but the theme is melodious, although we cannot say that the "Trio" is much to our mind, the three consecutive fifths between the inner part and bass, in the 8th bar, being, to us, particularly disagreeable. By the way, we cannot understand why the diminished 7th on G♯ should be written as a ♯ 6-5 when it resolves to a 6-4 on the dominant. Surely the root is the same whether it resolve to a 7th or a 6-4, and varying notation like this is very apt to perplex a performer. Should Mr. Allen doubt how this chord ought to be written, let him refer to Beethoven's Sonata in E flat (Op. 31, No. 3), where in the 5th bar of the first movement, he would be rather surprised, we think, to find F♯ instead of G♭.

The Silent Land. Part-song for unaccompanied Choral Singing. The words from Longfellow's "Hyperion." Composed by Alfred R. Gaul.

We are particularly pleased with Mr. Gaul's part-song. There is a delicacy of treatment in the setting of the words throughout which convinces us that the composer has thoroughly studied his subject before committing his thoughts to paper. The composition is replete with melody, and some phrases are of remarkable beauty, as one instance of which we may cite that ending at the first double bar, to the words "Thither, oh thither, into the silent land." The voice-parts are written with much purity, and consequently flow so smoothly as to offer no undue difficulties to the singers. The song has been given this season by Mr. Henry Leslie's choir; and we also find that it has been sung by the Birmingham Festival Choral Society.

The Sun in golden splendour. Four-part Song. Words by H. C. Harrison. Composed by Henry Grimshaw.

We can scarcely wonder that this song rises not beyond the level of respectable common-place, for the poetry is just of that sort, headed "words for music," to be found in the old magazines especially addressed to the "fair sex." Such an incongruous mixture of well-worn materials we have not met for some time; and for the life of us we cannot make out what the "cloister'd Nuns" have to do with the matter, save to sing "Ora pro nobis, Sancta Maria," at the end of each verse. In justice to the composer, however, we must say that the voice-parts are most carefully written, and the harmonies unexceptionable throughout. Mr. Grimshaw may do better when he works with a more sympathetic partner.

Clarendon Press.

A Treatise on Musical Form and General Composition. By the Rev. Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley, Bart., M.A., Mus. Doc.

As professor of Music at the University of Oxford, we presume that the author of this Treatise is anxious to record his convictions on every point connected with the science, in order that students who present themselves for examination may be previously acquainted with the musical faith of their master. Whether this is an unmixed benefit we will not now stop to enquire, but there can be no doubt that the thoughtful and carefully-written works which have preceded the one before us must inspire the utmost respect for an artist who might, if he pleased, hold his official position in dignified silence. There is evil as well as good in the dissemination of a well-considered book on "Form and General Composition in Music," for, as a rule, persons who have, what is termed a "turn" for composing, are so surrounded by flatterers, and have so little power of judging themselves, that when they have thoroughly laid hold of the principles of "form," as given by such an authority as the Oxford Professor, they are too apt to believe that by mere industry and perseverance they can accomplish all that is necessary to produce works which shall enlist the attention of the world. On this point, indeed, the author of this book appears to think with us, for he says "it may well be doubted whether the composition of new melodies, worthy of the name, can be acquired by rules or definitions at all;" but as later on he declares "there is reason to believe that the power of originating good melodies is latent in many persons who are ignorant of their own faculties, and have, therefore, never cultivated them," it is obvious that he thinks the rules given in his book will develop this latent faculty, and that poetry, in fact, can be drawn forth by teaching a man the measure and form of verses. With an expression of our dissent from this view of the subject, we close any objection which a careful perusal of the Treatise has called up, and passing from the "abuse" to the "use" of the work, give our hearty assent to most of the rules it contains. The little melody, in C major, which is analysed in periods, phrases, and strains, and harmonised in various ways, is extremely well suited for the purpose, and the explanations are most lucidly written. The examples, selected from the works of well-known composers, are very good as illustrations of regular and irregular forms of melody, and the Sonata, composed for the purpose by the author, in imitation, as he states, "of the regular Mozartean epoch," is better than all the letterpress descriptions that can be given of this class of composition. As a help for students who have natural creative genius, the Treatise will be found most valuable; but it will not make composers of those who have waited for such a work to arouse their dormant musical faculties.

Augener and Co.

We return no more. Song. Words by Mrs. Hemans. Music by H. L. M.

As we may charitably suppose the composer of this song to be an amateur, we cannot conceive why he should court criticism outside the circle of his admirers by sending the composition for review. The ignorance of the commonest rules displayed in almost every bar of this effusion may be accepted as a proof that the author has not even studied enough to be doubtful of his powers; and we advise him therefore, before venturing again into print, to take counsel with those who know better than himself as to the advisability of endeavouring to gain that "little knowledge" which may convince him of his "danger." In justice to the publisher, we must not omit to mention that the song is "Author's property."

Strive, wait, and pray. Song. Words by Adelaide Procter.

Sea Swallows. Song. Words by George March.

Hush? The Murmur of the River. Song. Words by Russell Gray.

True for ever. Song. Written by the Lady John Manners.

Composed by Virginia Gabriel.

Presuming it necessary that songs made up of the commonest materials must, for commercial purposes, be written, it is good, at least, that they should be as inoffensive as those before us; for whatever may be said of their artistic value, we have not to arraign the composer for any glaring violation of grammatical rules. The first on our list is, we think, the least attractive, the dragging crotchets in the accompaniment at the commencement imparting a heaviness to the melody scarcely in sympathy with the character to the words. "Sea Swallows" is much better, the simple theme, in F minor, contrasting well with the more impassioned phrases which follow; although the conventional burst in the tonic major, with the triplet accompaniment, is perhaps somewhat losing its effect, by such constant repetition, even with a drawing-room audience. We have copied the note of interrogation after the word "Hush" on the title-page of the third song, although we have not the faintest idea what it means. The soft triplets running throughout this composition in the accompaniment give some little interest to the melody; but the disguise is too thin to deceive any but those for whom the music is manufactured. "True for ever" is, to our mind, the most genuine ballad of the four; for, if we except a somewhat abrupt modulation from C to E flat, and back again, in the space of four bars, both melody and accompaniment flow smoothly and agreeably throughout. Certainly, little is attempted, but that little is well done.

Charles E. Hutchins, Medford, Mass., U.S.

The Sunday School Hymnal and Service Book. Edited by the Rev. Charles E. Hutchins.

Though there exists an extensive literature of hymns for children, there are, we believe, but few collections in which provision is made for music as well as for words. One has been compiled, if we are not mistaken, by Mr. Curwen, who, by his Tonic Sol-fa movement, has done so much to popularise music among the young; and last year a Children's Service Book, containing many excellent features, was published by the Rev. H. Martyn Hart. The present volume is of interest, as showing what is done across the Atlantic for a similar object.

In a note accompanying the volume, its editor, with a modesty by no means too common, says, "I do not venture to think that it has merit enough to entitle it to any notice in your valuable paper." We are very happy to be able to disagree with him. The book is a really commendable effort to enlist the sympathies of children in divine service. Its contents are very varied. We have first a form of prayer for opening and closing school; then a short choral service for morning and evening prayer, the words of which are taken, with some slight modifications, from our Book of Common Prayer, the music being Tallis's. We next find the Litany and two or three Offertory Sentences with music. Then come the Canticles, &c.—the Venite, Gloria in Excelsis, Te Deum, Benedicite, Jubilate, Benedictus (abridged), Magnificat, and others. Some of these which are directed to be sung as Canticles are not so used in our English Service, e.g., Psalms 92 and 103, both of which, however, appear in a considerably shortened form. After this is given a selection of Psalms with Chants, occupying in all some twenty-four pages. The music is all familiar to us in this country, being by well-known Cathedral writers, and the pointing of the Chants is clear and good. After a nearly, if not quite, complete collection of the Collects from the Book of Common Prayer, we reach the Hymns and Tunes. Of these there are 174; and the volume is completed by the addition of 42 Carols for various Church Festivals.

It will be seen from this summary that the work before us is very complete. With the selection of the Hymns, &c., we are of course less immediately concerned than with the musical portion of the book; but it may be said in passing, that the editor appears to have exercised very good taste in choosing not only such hymns as are suitable for the young, but also such as are of acknowledged excellence, and in many cases of considerable poetical merit. From a musical point of view also, the Sunday School Hymnal is on the whole very satisfactory. Many of the best tunes from our modern collections are to be found in it, and sufficient care has been taken to select such as are of a melodious character, and likely to be popular with children. Only in a few cases, which it is needless to particularise, are we disposed to take exception to any of the music admitted. One or two trifling slips (probably oversights) in the harmony have caught our eye as we examined the book; but these are so few that we can on the whole recommend the arrangement no less than the selection. From the fact of the copy before us bearing on its title the words "twentieth thousand," it is evident that the book has had a large sale in the United States. We may add that it deserves it.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

DR. STAINER'S "HARMONY."

To the Editor of the Musical Times.

Dear Sir,—In your March number, in answer to an inquiry, an explanation of a chord in Gounod's "Faust" is given. Two selections of this dark problem are offered, Richter's system being doubtless preferable by its simplicity, but I would, with due deference both to Stainer and Richter, attempt a yet more simple explanation. In these days of Teutonic furore it may seem like heresy in music to offer the Italian system of Counterpoint as an expositor of knotty questions in dispute, yet, in this instance, it offers us a helping hand to get out of this apparent slough of despond. The chord in question cannot be considered as a legatura di nono (suspension of the ninth), because that would require preparation as well as resolution. The Do sharp need give no trouble, for it is simply an augmented fifth and has no influence on the character of the chord whatever. What is the chord then, you ask? The Sol is an appoggiatura having no value or consideration in harmony; the Do sharp is an augmented fifth to be treated in harmony as if Do natural; the Mi flat is the minor seventh to the dominant Fa which ascends to a tonic Si flat. Thus it is nothing more than a cadenza semplice, and the only wonder is that it should have created such a pother with any educated musician. This explanation is made according to that system which was studied and practised by Leo and Durante, Sarti and Tomaso Trajetta, the two Scarlattis and the two Guglielmis, Pergolesi and Cimarosa, Cherubini and Mercadante, Feneroli and his pupil Phil. Trajetta, my beloved master.

Truly yours,

Albert G. Emerick.

Philadelphia, March 21, 1876.

ALOYS HENNES'S "NEW METHOD FOR THE PIANO."

To the Editor of the Musical Times.

Sir,—In justice to myself and to "Hennes's System of teaching music," I trust you will insert the following lines in your largely circulating and valuable paper. Your reviewer alludes to "some error in my translation here and there," and as a proof of his assertions he quotes the following sentence, the meaning of which he asks to know:—"Pieces (written) in E, B, F♯, A♯, D♭ sharp and G♭ sharp must be introduced in the materials for instruction (Unterrichts material, French: morceaux d'étude) just as frequently as those in C, G, D, A, F, B♭ and E♭ sharp." Every English musician will agree with me that this means simply: pieces with 4, 5, 6 sharps or flats must be practised by the beginner with the same facility as such in C, or with only 1, 2, or 3 sharps or flats. Perhaps such kind of pieces your reviewer, with that of the "Choir," may find "particularly interesting." What might your diffident critic have said if he had seen another not less formidable list of the most celebrated English musical authorities, such as F. E. Gladstone, Turle, Dr. Spark, Dr. Garrett, Fred. Archer, Esquire, Sir Fred. Gore Ouseley, Sir Robt. Stewart, Sir Julius Benedict, and many more; as well as of the English Press, headed by our excellent Concordia and the severe Figaro, Daily Telegraph, Standard, Court Journal, Public Opinion, Illustrated London News, The Queen Newspaper, who all find Hennes's Method attractive and adapted for the purpose. And why, I may ask, have musical authorities like Carl Reinecke, M. M. Gevaert, Samuel J. Grégoire, and F. E. Gladstone, Esq., adopted

Hennes's Method for the musical education of their own children? Perhaps your reviewer will be able to answer. His assertion "to derive a double time from a triple one must be a manifest absurdity (these are his words) and that $\frac{6}{8}$-time cannot be derived from two bars of $\frac{3}{8}$," etc., is a matter of opinion, which Hennes himself will be able to justify. But your reviewer will admit that six is a multiple of three, and that any child of the smallest capacity will easily understand when told that two halves make a whole, and that twice $\frac{3}{8}$ make $\frac{6}{8}$, and when the whole is divided into eight equal parts, six of these have their origin in twice three eights. Experienced teachers know that such kind of explanations enter much easier into a child's comprehension than merely technical and scientific terms and expressions, like "a division in doublets is termed 'simple,' in triplets, 'compound,' etc." But I must quite agree with your critic when he says, "that the book would have been more warmly received had it been presented to the English public with less prefatory eulogium. "A good wine needs no bush." I have only to add, that we all know from experience, that excellence, usefulness and merit will not always at first be sufficiently appreciated: and therefore your reviewer ought to have avoided the expression "if the child can be persuaded or forced into wading through the whole of five courses." There is no "wading through" nor "forcing" needed, but the child wants only to be gently guided through 250 most melodious and pleasant pieces of music, which the child can, (and does frequently) sing, of which the five courses consist. They constitute, as is admitted by thousands of teachers, a pleasant study and a real recreation for any juvenile beginner. Hennes's Method bids fair to become in due time "The universal piano tutor." Already four different editions (in German, in French, in English, and one without the explanations) represent the musical scholastic literature of the German Division at the Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia. Apologising for my encroaching upon your precious space,

I am, yours very truly,

H. Mannheimer.

[In proof of our desire to do justice to Herr Mannheimer, we print his letter precisely as we received it. If he believe, however, that a formidable array of favourable notices on his work—even including the "severe Figaro"—will in the slightest degree influence our own criticism upon it, we must tell him that he has mistaken the character of our journal. For ourselves, we confess that we find his explanation of the sentence about the keys of "A♯, D♭ sharp, G♭ sharp" somewhat more difficult of comprehension than the original assertion; but, as he admits that the method of teaching compound-time is "a matter of opinion," perhaps he may see that other subjects contained in the book he so warmly advocates are equally open to argument; and that when a publication is voluntarily sent for review, it is at least questionable taste to pen a long epistle merely to ask how the reviewer can have the temerity to say anything against it.—The Writer of the Notice.]

WHEN SHOULD "BENEDICITE" BE SUNG?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Can any of your readers inform me on what authority the Benedicite is used at so many of our churches during Lent? The Prayer-Book gives no directions whatever in the matter, and thus leaves it an open question; but one cannot help thinking that, however suitable it may be to the Spring of the year, it is very unsuitable to the season of Lent.

The song itself is very jubilant and inspiriting, and therefore, one would suppose, more suitable for festival use. It is also extremely telling and effective (when sung to appropriate music), and popular with our choirs; and it supplies an agreeable alternative for the Te Deum. It would, therefore, seem desirable to utilise it more often; and it appears to me, after careful consideration of the text, that it might very well be introduced on Saints' days (the last six verses from v. 27 being singularly appropriate), at Thanksgiving Services (especially Harvest Festivals and choral gatherings), on the Sundays in Advent, and also on those days when it would be appropriate to the lessons.

But I write simply for information, and trust that some of your clerical readers may be induced to favour me with their views on this interesting and important question.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

Choirmaster.

P.S.—In mentioning the Lessons, I was fully aware that it is customary in most places to sing the Benedicite when Genesis i. or Daniel iii. is read; but there must be many other occasions when it would be equally edifying and appropriate.

PROFESSOR BLACKIE AND PROFESSOR OAKELEY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—It is to be feared that Professor Blackie will not be induced to believe that he has been talking nonsense. If he could but recollect

> "Oh wad some power the giftie gie us
> To see ourselves as others see us," &c.

he might ask himself whether those who understand music, or those who do not, have the best right to lay down the law as to what constitutes musical progress. But "the old Professor" is too much accustomed to the flattery of his followers to care for what outsiders (especially if they chance to be Southrons and 'west-enders') think of him." It is useless to attack him with ridicule. The readiest way to bring truth home to the ignorant is in the form of parable, or to speak respectfully in the case of a learned man, by the aid of analogy. I propose to appeal from Philip drunk to Philip sober, that is from the Edinburgh patriot to the Edinburgh professor. Suppose that a person whose whole knowledge of Greek consisted in knowing the alphabet, were to accuse Professor Blackie and his disciples of being unpatriotic, false and affected, because they spent their energies on Greek poets instead of being contented with Ossian and Burns. Imagine "the old Professor's wrath" if one should say to him, "Why should Scotsmen prink themselves all over with what does not belong to them like the jackdaw with peacock's feathers? No, let us leave Homer, and Eschylus, and Shakspeare, and Dante, and such like foreigners to flunkeys and snobs, and stick to our own native bards."

It is plain that Professor Blackie is not aware that music is a language which must be learnt before it can be understood. What he appears to mean by love of music, is a condition of mind and body produced by one or more of such various elements as affection, passion, pride, vanity, memories of the past, association of ideas, and so forth, acted on strongly by the power that sound has upon the nervous system.

This sort of excitement is not love of music, though music appeals more or less to it, especially in public performances. M. Viollet le Duc has said much the same thing about Art that Herr Wagner has attempted to carry out in practice, viz., that all Art is one, whether architecture, sculpture, painting, music, or poetry, that each individual art is merely the form which creative imaginations make use of when they desire to impress their own ideas and feelings on those among their fellow creatures who possess receptive imaginations. It is probable that older writers have said the same thing, and that the idea is quite familiar to many who know more about ancient literature than about modern music. That the idea is a true one there can be no doubt, but one need be careful to distinguish between the idea in its first form, and the errors that may be produced by pushing it too far in practical matters. Man is so imperfect a being that he need constantly recollect the wise saying:—

> "Dicunt jus summum sæpe summa est malitia," or if you like it better in English, "For 'tis a common saying and a true, that strictest law is oft the highest wrong." And Bossuet gives us something of the same kind when he says, "La sagesse des hommes est toujours courte par quelque endroit."

I have wandered far from Professor Blackie thinking of Wagnerism, and had better bring this discursive and disjointed letter to an end. But before I finish, allow me to express a hope that Professor Oakeley may be able to persuade his venerable brother Professor that shouting with "lustihood" is not the way to improve the voice, ear, or understanding of musical students.

Your obedient servant,

Cheltenham, April 20. M. H.

THE RIGHT OF REPRESENTATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—The recent prosecutions by Harry Wall, the representative of "The Authors', Composers', and Artists' Protection Office," for the recovery of penalties for the singing, without permission of his clients, of songs, duets, and choruses selected from Balfe's and Wallace's operas necessitate a full exposure of the present unsatisfactory state of musical copyright, so that public singers may know what to buy, sing, and avoid. The 3 & 4 Wm. IV., c. 15, gives to the author or assignee of any opera, tragedy, farce, or other dramatic piece or entertainment, the sole right of representation in any part of the British dominions, and also enacts that if any person shall represent, or cause to be represented, without the consent in writing of the author or other proprietor, at any place of dramatic entertainment, any such production, or any part thereof, such offender shall be liable for each and every representation to the payment of forty shillings. The statute 5 & 6 Vict. extends the provisions of 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 15, to musical compositions. By various judicial proceedings, and notably by the cases Planche v. Braham (18 C. & P., p. 68) and Russell v. Smith (12 Q. B. R., 217), the singing of an isolated song is brought within the scope of the above statutes and decided to be a dramatic representation.

By the 22nd sec. of 5 & 6 Vict., c. 45, it is enacted that no assignment of the copyright of any dramatic piece or composition shall be held to convey to the assignee the right of representation unless an entry in the registry book at Stationers' Hall shall be made of such assignment, wherein shall be expressed the intention of the parties that such right of representation shall pass by such assignment.

The cases Lacy v. Rhys (4 B. & S., 873) and Marsh v. Conquest (10 L. T., N. S., 717), decide that the latter enactment does not apply to the assignment of a right of representing or performing, so that a search at Stationers' Hall will not always divulge in whom the right of performing is vested. By 5 & 6 Vict., c. 22, copyright endures for the life of the author, and for the further term of seven years, commencing at the time of his death, and is the property of such author and his assigns; but if such term of seven years expires before the end of forty-two years from the first publication, the copyright shall endure for such forty-two years.

From the foregoing it is seen that all compositions are not copyright, or, in other words, that by lapse of time copyright expires; and there must, at the present time, be a large quantity of excellent compositions free from the trammels of copyright law. Where copyright exists, several distinct interests may be involved: 1, the interest of the composer of the music in the right of performing; 2, the interest of the writer of the words; and, 3, the interest of the publisher or music-seller. Owing to the two first-mentioned interests in many cases not being both vested in the publisher, and owing to the publisher not giving notice of any reservation of rights of performance, public singers and concert-givers fall into the meshes of Harry Wall's Protection Office. Mr. Harry Wall, in one of his letters claiming two pounds from a lady amateur for singing the music of "Sweet spirit hear my prayer," from the opera of Lurline, at a charity concert, says: "This application is without prejudice to claim another forty shillings for the unauthorised performance of the words." If Messrs. Hutchings and Romer, the publishers of Lurline, do not find it their interest to permit the words and music of songs from this opera to be sung by amateurs and professionals, or if Messrs. Hutchings and Romer do not own the copyright in the performance in public of songs from the above opera, surely they ought, in common fairness, to give the public notice of any reservation of rights.

In another letter Mr. Wall writes: "I believe there is an informant in every town." I hope that amateurs and professionals will make a note of this, and avoid all music taken from Balfe's and Wallace's operas, if they do not wish to infringe on the rights of Mr. Wall's clients, and to involve themselves in law proceedings.

To the difficulties of programme-making may now be added the following process: The song having been purchased from the music-seller, the publisher must be written to, enquiring if the song can be sung in public without permission. If permission is required, it must be ascertained from whom obtainable. The publisher may not know, the protection office will not tell him, and the information may not, as I have shown, even be obtainable at Stationers' Hall. Having found the owner of the right of performing the music, and having, for probably a small consideration, obtained permission to execute the music, he will very likely be told that the copyright of the words is vested in some one else, whose permission must also be obtained. Mr. Harry Wall's stock-in-trade seems at present to consist mainly of the following, "Let me like a soldier fall," "The heart bow'd down," "When other lips," "The gipsy chorus," "My long hair is braided," "Scenes that are brightest," "There is a flower that bloometh," "I dreamt that I dwelt in marble halls," "This magic-wove scarf," and "Tapping at the garden gate."

I perceive that two large publishing firms have advertised catalogues of songs in which they hold the right of performance, and which can be sung without fear of any charge being made. It is to be hoped other publishers will follow their example, and so relieve singers and concert-givers (who make the market for musical productions) from the Harry Wall nuisance until the legislature compels publishers not holding the entire copyright to print on the title-page of their music "Right of performance reserved," in a similar manner as provided by the International Copyright Act, 15 & 16 Vict., c. 12, s. 8, which requires the notification on the title-page that the "Right of translation is reserved," when the author desires to reserve such right.

Yours truly,

Cheetham, Manchester, 18th April, 1876. J. Clelland.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Would it be too much to ask you in your columns to draw the attention of the new Copyright Commission, among which I notice the name of Sir Julius Benedict, to the late proceedings of Mr. Harry Wall, and the "Copyright and Performance Right Protection Association." The appointment of this Commission seems to give an opportunity for legislation on the subject, which might control in some measure the arbitrary proceedings of these gentry. It is not clear to me whether a performer is liable to the action of the proprietors of a copyright, or the Association as his Agent, or whether the Association recover the penalties under a general law in their own names, in the character of informers.

I am, Sir, Yours faithfully,

Cecil Burch.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

BERWICK-UPON-TWEED.—On the 28th March the Messiah was performed by the Berwick Choral Union, numbering upwards of one hundred and twenty voices, assisted by an orchestra from Edinburgh and Glasgow, including the Drechsler-Hamilton family. This is the first time an Oratorio has ever been given in Berwick, and the performance was a great success. Mr. Anderson conducted, and Mr. Barker presided at the harmonium.

BIRMINGHAM.—Mr. R. H. Rickard, gave a Pianoforte Recital at the Masonic Hall, on the 30th March, previous to his departure for Leipzig, to pursue his musical studies. The programme included two preludes and fugues by Bach, Beethoven's Sonata Appassionata, in F minor, Op. 57, Schubert's Impromptu, in A flat, No. 4, Op. 90, Liszt's transcription of the Tannhäuser March, a selection from Schumann's Fantasiestuck, Chopin's Ballade "La Favorite," Reinecke's Ballade, Op. 20, and Weber's "Concertstück," which were interpreted in a manner worthy of high commendation. In the last-named piece the orchestral accompaniments were given with judicious care and precision by Dr. Swinnerton Heap. Mr. E. Allely and Mr. Randell contributed vocal music, selected from the works of Handel, Mozart, Verdi, Blumenthal, and Hatton.

BOLTON, LANCASHIRE.—A Musical Service was given on Wednesday evening, March 29th, in the Wesley chapel, Bradshawgate. The Anthem "I was glad" (Sir G. Elvey), the "Credo" (Haydn's First Mass), "O Father whose Almighty power" (Handel's Judas), a selection from the Last Judgment, and Beethoven's "Hallelujah" (Engedi), were efficiently rendered by the chapel choir. Solos by Mr. H. Taylor (choirmaster), and Miss Fallows, were well sung, and the performance on the organ of Mendelssohn's Trumpet Overture in C, Guilmant's "Marche Funèbre et chant Seraphique," and the German Hymn, varied, by Mr. J. T. Flitcroft, the organist, were highly appreciated. A most interesting address was given during the interval by the Rev. John Rhodes, upon the subject of "Ancient and Modern Music compared."

CAMBRIDGE.—The members of St. Paul's Musical Society gave their third Concert on the 28th March, when selections from Mendelssohn's St. Paul, and songs and part-songs were well rendered. A pianoforte solo, by Miss Dennis, the able accompanist, was a special feature of the evening. The Concert was a success, and the profits were, as usual, devoted to the Cambridge Industrial School.——A Special Service was held in the church of All Saints, on the Wednesday before Easter, consisting chiefly of that part of the Messiah which relates to Christ's Passion. The choir (not increased beyond its ordinary strength) was accompanied (besides the organ) by a band of twenty-two instruments. The chorus "Behold the Lamb of God," was followed by the contralto air, "He was despised," sung with great feeling by Mr. E. J. Bilton, a feature being that the second part of the air, "He gave His back to the smiters," not usually given, was included. In the choral of Bach's "O sacred head surrounded," the congregation joined. This, as well as the other chorals was accompanied by the instruments alone, (as arranged by Mr. W. C. Dewberry, organist of All Saints), two verses being sung unaccompanied. The choruses "Surely He hath borne our griefs," "And with His stripes," and "All we like sheep," were effectively sung. The choral "O sinner lift the eye of faith," came next; and after the address and offertory the recitative, "All they that see Him," the chorus "He trusted," and the solos, "Thy rebuke," "Behold and see," and "He was cut off," which were given with taste by two regular members of the choir. After an interval for silent prayer, the service was concluded by the choral "O Love who formedst me to wear," which was joined in by the large congregation. The organ was played by Mr. Mountain, of S. Saviour's, Hoxton, and the service was conducted by Mr. W. C. Dewberry, A.R.A.M., organist and choirmaster of the church, to whose zeal and judgment the success of this choir is due.

CLAYTON.—On Tuesday evening, the 4th ult., a Concert was held in the National Schools, as a reunion of the Old Church choir. There was a good attendance, and the items in the programme, which consisted of vocal and instrumental selections, were well performed. The following local artists took part: Mrs. John Bairstow, Mrs. Jonathan Bairstow, Mrs. Gaunt, the Misses Northrop, Battersby, and Arnold, and Messrs. S. Ward, S. W. Whaley, A. Hirst, and B. Armitage. Mr. T. Ward conducted, and Mr. S. Ward was solo violinist.

CREWKERNE.—The Choral Society gave a performance of Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise, with selections from Saul and Samson, on the 18th ult. The principal soloists were Mrs. Cross Laver, Mr. Price and Mr. H. Cross, who were very successful in their several efforts. The choruses were well rendered; and the band, which was purely local and almost entirely amateur, was very satisfactory. Mr. J. Loaring conducted.

DERBY.—The performance of the Creation by the Derby Choral Union on Tuesday evening, the 4th ult., was in every way successful, and it must have been highly gratifying to the committee and all concerned in the management of the Society that the tenth season should have been brought to so brilliant a termination. The whole of the chorus-singing was eminently satisfactory, the subdued sotto voce tone of the choral accompaniment to "By thee with bliss" being most effective. Madame Helena Walker, Mr. Henry Guy, and Mr. Wadmore were the solo vocalists. The band was unusually strong, the wind department being of much better quality than on any former occasion. Mr. Woodward and Mr. S. Neville Cox presided at the organ.

DUNHAM MASSEY.—On the 22nd ult., a new organ, built by M. August Gern (late foreman of the works of Messrs. Cavaillé-Coll, of Paris), was opened at the church of St. Margaret, by Mr. J. Matthias Field, the organist, in the presence of a large congregation. The service was full choral, the permanent choir being considerably augmented. The Rev. Geo. London, of Altrincham, read the first, and the Very Rev. Dean Howson, of Chester, the second lesson, and the responses were given by the Rev. H. Hignett, of Ringway, Altrincham. The Rev. T. A. Stowell, of Salford, preached, and the Rev. Canon Gore, of Bowdon, pronounced the benediction. The organ, which will cost about £1,000, stands in the north transept, and is divided by a large window. It has been entirely re-built, only the pipes of the old instrument, which it is to replace, having been used.

EASTBOURNE.—On Tuesday, the 11th ult., Mr. J. H. Deane, organist of Trinity Church, gave a lecture at the Friendly Societies' Hall, on the works of J. S. Bach and the later works of Beethoven. Commencing with Bach's Passion (St. Matthew) Mr. Deane described the most important features of the work, and in illustration, four of the Chorals were sung by the Trinity Church choir, and a Soprano air rendered with much taste by Miss Douglas. Mr. Deane, in the course of his lecture, endeavoured to contradict the general assumption that the compositions of Bach, especially his fugues, are dry, laboured, and expressionless, and gave the following apt illustration in support of their real musical value and artistic merit, viz., that Bach considered his four parts as four friends holding an amicable conversation, and that no one was to speak unless he had something to say, and that any one versed in them must readily admit how characteristic this is of the part-writing in all Bach's fugues. Mr. Deane chose for an illustration the grand organ Fugue in A Minor, which he played on the piano, assisted by his daughter, who took the Pedal part. The other composition introduced was the Soprano air, "My heart ever faithful," being brought forward as a composition of a more jubilant character, in contrast with the Passion music. Before the second part of his lecture Mr. Deane introduced Moscheles's piano duet, "Hommage à Handel," and Cherubini's "Ave Maria." The performances illustrative of Beethoven were the first movement from the C minor Symphony, the Allegretto and Scherzo from the Symphony in A, and the song "Knowest thou the land?" Mr. Deane pointed out the grandeur and beauties of Beethoven's Symphonies, and in summing up, advised his hearers who had hitherto neglected Bach and Beethoven at once to set about the study of their works.

ECCLES.—The Eccles Amateur Choral and Orchestral Society gave the last Concert of the season on Wednesday, March 29th, in the Co-operative Hall. The programme consisted of glees, solos, selections from operas, &c. The vocalists were Miss Lowe, Mr. George Barlow, and Mr. Ashe. Mr. De Jong played a couple of solos on the flute with his usual taste and finish. Mendelssohn's Rondo Brillante, Op. 22, for pianoforte with orchestral accompaniments was well played by Mr. Lowe, the conductor of the Society. The "Shepherds' chorus," from Schubert's Rosamunde, with orchestral accompaniments, a choral March, written by Mr. C. B. Grundy, Bishop's "Echo song," by Miss Lowe, with flute obbligato, and a violin solo by Miss Mather, a member of the orchestra, were features of the programme. The overture to Le Nozze di Figaro, Haydn's No. 13 Symphony, and selections from Lucia di Lammermoor were very creditably performed by the orchestra.

EDINBURGH.—A special Organ Recital was given by Professor Oakeley on the 12th ult., in the Music Class-room. The invitations included the choirs of St. Paul's Church, York-place; St. Giles' Cathedral, and Morningside Parish Church, and pupils of George Watson's School; Edinburgh Educational Institution, Queen-street; Craigmount School; and the Edinburgh Educational Institution, George-square. A considerable number of the members of the Blind Asylum were also present. The programme consisted of a selection from the most popular pieces played by Professor Oakeley during the session, and was thoroughly enjoyed by the large audience. On the 15th ult. the Recitals were concluded by a performance of music appropriate to Easter eve.——Haydn's Passion was given for the first time in Scotland with much success, on the 8th ult., at St. Peter's Episcopal Church, by a choir of forty-five men and boys, with a string band and organ accompaniments. Ebenezer Prout's Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, composed with full orchestral accompaniments for the Dedication Festival at St. Paul's Cathedral, in January last, was also performed, both band and choir doing full justice to the work. Mr. G. F. Tendall, Mus. Bac., Oxon., organist to the Duke of Buccleuch and to St. Peter's church, conducted: and Mr. Head, assistant-organist, presided at the organ.

GLASGOW.—The directors of the Saturday Evening Concerts deserve great praise for their spirited enterprise in being the first to revive one of Handel's great works, Hercules, which was performed on the 1st ult., in the City Hall. The solo vocalists were Miss Banks, Madame Vaneri, Miss Palmer, Mr. Henry Hope, and Mr. George Perren. The choruses were given by the Glasgow Tonic sol-fa Society, conducted by Mr. W. M. Miller. The popular chorus, "Crown with festal pomp the day," was vigorously re-demanded. An important feature of the evening was the organ accompaniment of Mr. W. T. Best, and his playing of the March in the first act was rapturously encored.——On the 18th ult., Mr. Walter Forsyth, conductor of the Goranhill Choral Union, gave a Recital on the harmonium, in the Inglefield Hall, to a select audience. The programme, which was both attractive and varied, was well rendered and gave satisfaction. These Recitals are intended to be continued.

GLOUCESTER.—A Concert of the Choral Society was given in the Shire Hall, on the 28th March, when Professor Macfarren's Oratorio, St. John the Baptist, was performed with much success. On the conclusion of the first part of the programme the Mayor went to the orchestra, accompanied by Mr. W. Higgs, one of the vice-presidents of the Society, and presented the testimonials, which had been subscribed for, to Mr. J. A. Matthews, the hon. organist, and to Mr. John Hunt, the hon. conductor. These gifts consisted of handsome gold watches and chains, supplied by Messrs. Mann and Son, of the Cross. Mr. Matthews's was thus inscribed: "Presented to Mr. John A. Matthews, honorary organist of the Gloucester Choral Society, at the Shire Hall, Gloucester, on March 28th, 1876, as a mark of public appreciation of fifteen years' gratuitous services." Mr. Hunt's bore the following: "Presented to Mr. John Hunt, honorary conductor of the Gloucester Choral Society, at the Shire Hall, Gloucester, on March 28th, 1876, as a mark of public appreciation of twelve years' gratuitous services." In making these presentations the Mayor alluded in most complimentary terms to the zeal and energy displayed by Messrs. Matthews and Hunt in the performance of their duties, and the recipients of the gifts returned thanks in suitable terms.——On Easter Monday, Haydn's Oratorio, the Creation, was given by the Society. The attendance was not very large, but the performance was in every respect a success. The solos were exceedingly well rendered by Miss Allely, of Birmingham; Mr. Bywater, who was encored in the air "In native worth," and Mr. Brandon. The choruses were given with much effect. Mr. J. A. Matthews ably accompanied the Oratorio on the organ, and Mr. J. A. Hunt conducted.

GODALMING.—The Annual Concert in aid of the Young Mens' Association, took place on the 19th ult., in the Public Hall, before a large and fashionable audience. The first part was sustained by gentlemen of St. George's Chapel Royal, Windsor, and Eton College, and included "When evening's twilight," Hatton; "By Celia's arbour," Horsley; "The cloud capt towers," Stevens, and Haydn's trio, "Maiden fair," sung by Messrs. Marriott, Dyson, and Christian, which was heartily encored, as was also a song sung by the latter gentleman, "The gallants of England," Gatty. The second part was sustained by gentlemen of the Charterhouse schools. The entertainment was most successful, and a good surplus will be handed over to the Association. Mr. Cousins and Mr. Dyson conducted.

KEIGHLEY.—On Wednesday evening, the 5th ult., the Keighley Amateur Choral Society gave the Concert at the close of the fourth session, in the hall of the Mechanics' Institute. The Society, which is under the tuition of Mr. R. S. Burton, of Leeds, is composed of about fifty members. The pieces selected for performance were Gade's Erl King's Daughter and Mendelssohn's Athalie. The principal part, Oluf, was very creditably sustained by Mr. Swire Smith. Miss Jowett took the part of the Erl King's daughter, and Mrs. Wilson that of the mother. The piece was very well performed throughout, and the beautiful choral "The sun now mounts" created a very favourable impression. Athalie was in all respects an exceedingly well-finished performance. The soprano solos were admirably rendered by Miss Jowett and Mrs. Wilson; Miss Bastow sang the contralto solo with excellent effect. Mr. Burton accompanied on the pianoforte, and his solo, "The War March of the Priests," received well-deserved applause.

KIDDERMINSTER.—The third Annual Performance of Bach's Passion Music (S. Matthew) took place at St. Mary's Parish Church, at the service upon the eve of Good Friday, and was in every respect a success. The soloists were: treble, Master Arthur Everist; altos, Master T. Grove and Whitesmith; tenors, Messrs. Deacon, Mountford, and Percy; basses, Messrs. Muston and Cotton. The ordinary choir of boys and men was augmented by ladies and gentlemen of the congregation. The organ accompaniments were given with great taste and judgment by the organist and choirmaster, W. Taylor, Esq., Mus. Bac., Oxon., to whose skill and excellent training of the choir the careful rendering of the work is due.

LEEDS.—Mr. Broughton's fourth and last Classical Chamber Concert took place in the Queen's Hotel, on Friday, March 31, when an excellent programme was rendered by the following artists:—Herr Straus, Herr O. Bernhardt, M. Daubert, and Messrs. Bowling, Dearlove, and J. and A. Broughton. The Concert opened with Spohr's trio in E minor, Op. 119, which was finely played. Haydn's quartett in E flat, Op. 71 was admirably rendered, and was one of the most enjoyable features of the evening. M. Daubert contributed two solos, and Mr. Alfred Broughton gave a very poetical performance of a "Nachstück" and "Humoreske" of Schumann's. The Concert closed with Sterndale Bennett's Sestet, Op. 8, a work of much grace and beauty.

LINCOLN.—A Concert was given in the Corn Exchange, on Tuesday evening, March 28, at which the works performed were The Voyage (a Cantata, the words by E. S. Gibney, Esq., and the music by Dr. W. Mason,) and Endymion (a Pastoral, the poem by Vincent Amcotts, Esq., and the music by Edwin Aspa). The solo vocalists were Miss Marian Stringer and Mrs. Roberts (soprano), Mr. Dunkerton (tenor) and Mr. A. Phillips (bass). The band numbered fifteen, and the choir over sixty voices. Considering the difficulties which invariably mark the first performance of any musical work, the success which attended the rendering of The Voyage was flattering alike to composer and vocalists. The choruses, of which there are several, showed clearly the care which had been taken in the practices to secure precision and effect. Mr. W. Mason conducted very ably in both parts, and Dr. Mason performed the difficult part of presiding at both pianoforte and orchestrion, the combined effect of which was very pleasing.

LIVERPOOL.—A new Easter Anthem, "Thanks be to God," composed expressly for the occasion by Mr. James J. Monk, the organist, was sung at St. Saviour's Church, on the 16th ult. The anthem opens with a recitative for male voices, "And very early in the morning," in G major, followed by a tenor solo, interspersed with choral phrases in the same key, "Ye seek Jesus of Nazareth." This leads into a chorus, in D major, for the full choir, "Christ being raised from the dead," after which comes the final chorus in the initial key, "Thanks be to God." This chorus begins with a fugal subject and ends with broad choral effects of harmony. The composition is admirably adapted, both in music and the selection of the words for the celebration for which it was written.

MAIDENHEAD.—The fifth Concert of the Philharmonic Society took place on Wednesday evening, the 19th ult., when a performance of Rossini's Stabat Mater was given. The solo vocalists were Miss Jessie Royd, Madame Alice Barnett, Mr. Stedman, and Mr. H. Horscroft, whose efforts were much appreciated. In the orchestra were Herr Rosenthal, Mr. Amor, Herr Lutgen, and other familiar artists, who contributed largely towards the success. The chorus of the Society, though not large, was effective. One of the features of the second part was the highly artistic playing of the Adagio from the ninth Violin Concerto of Spohr, by Herr Rosenthal, which met the applause it deserved. Herr Max Schultz is to be congratulated upon his successful endeavours to cultivate a taste for good music in Maidenhead.

NEWMARKET.—A Recital of Organ Music was given at St. Mary's Church, by Mr. W. F. W. Jackson, on the 13th ult., which, in spite of the unpropitious weather, attracted a large and appreciative audience. The programme was of a classical character throughout, and especially appropriate to the season.

NORTH WALSHAM.—A concert was given on the 19th ult. by the North Walsham Amateur Musical Society at the National School-room. The first part of the programme comprised a selection from Carl Maria Von Weber's opera of Oberon, including the overture, which was given on two pianofortes by Mrs. Hadley, Miss Emily Shepheard, Miss Walker, and Mr. Horace Hill. The choruses, "Light as fairy foot can fall," "For thee hath beauty," and "Who would stay in her coral cave," were well rendered, and Mr. H. J. Minns sang, "O 'tis a glorious sight to see" with excellent effect. Miss Burton gave the Mermaid's song, "O 'tis pleasant to float," with good taste, and Mrs. John Wilkinson well merited the encore she received for her singing of "O Araby!" A duet for harp and pianoforte, arranged by Herr Oberthür, on airs by Donizetti, brilliantly played by Miss Viola Trust and Mrs Hadley, brought the first part to a close. The second part was miscellaneous. The accompanists were Mr. Horace Hill, Mrs. Hadley, and Mr. Walter Lain, organist of the parish church.

NORWICH.—The first of a series of classical concerts, promised by Mr. Darken, took place in St. Andrew's Hall, on the 21st ult. Beethoven's Septuor, arranged as a quintett for pianoforte, violin, viola, violoncello, and contra-basso, was well rendered by Miss Kate Griffiths, Messrs. C. Griffiths, H. Channell, J. Griffiths, and G. R. Griffiths. Miss Griffiths also played Chopin's Scherzo in B flat minor and three sketches by Schumann, Henselt, and Chopin. Mr. Griffiths contributed a violoncello solo by Goltermann, and Messrs. C. Griffiths and H. Channell a duet of Kalliwoda's for two violins. The concert concluded with Hummel's Trio in F, for pianoforte, violin and violoncello. The vocalists were Mdlle. Sophie Löwe and Mr. Vernon Rigby.

NOTTINGHAM.—The report of the Sacred Harmonic Society, just issued, announces that the season has been very successful in a musical point of view; but owing to depression of trade, a trifling financial loss has been sustained, and with a view to liquidating this, the members of the Society have given, during the past month, an extra Concert of glees, part-songs, madrigals and solos by the members themselves. During the next season, four grand performances are to take place, the subscription to which will be one guinea, as before. Mr. Henry Farmer remains the able choir-master and conductor, and Mr. Marriott, hon. sec. It has now been decided to commence an elementary instruction-class, under Mr. John Adcock, as a useful branch, and as a nursery from which to draw a supply for the chorus, which a large new Hall will enable the Society greatly to increase.

PARKGATE.—Haydn's Creation was performed in the United Methodist Free Church, on the 18th ult. The solos were given by Madame Helena Walker, Mr. R. Sutcliffe, and Mr. T. Brandon, each of whom elicited much applause. The choruses were well sung by the members of the Rawmarsh and Parkgate Sacred Harmonic Society. The band was led by Mr. Peck, and Mr. T. Brameld conducted.

RAMSGATE.—On Wednesday evening, in Lent, a special service was held at St. Mary's Church, a feature at which was the performance of Gounod's "There is a green hill far away," arranged as Solo and Chorus by Mr. J. Finch Thorne, the organist and choirmaster. At the Easter services the following compositions were amongst those performed: J. Baptiste Calkin's Te Deum in B flat; Dr. Stainer's Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in E; Sir John Goss, in A, and the Anthems "They have taken away my Lord" (Dr. Stainer), "Since by man came death," "Worthy is the Lamb," and the "Hallelujah" chorus. The mid-day celebrations on Easter-day and also on the Octave were fully choral, Marbeck's music being used on both occasions.

ROCK FERRY.—On Wednesday, the 19th ult., a Concert of sacred music was given in the Hotel Assembly-rooms. Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise formed the first part, and the second part consisted of various selections from oratorio music, including Costa's "I will extol Thee O God;" Handel's "Why do the nations?" Mendelssohn's "Cast thy burden upon the Lord," &c.; Beethoven's "Hallelujah" from the Mount of Olives, being the concluding piece. The principal soloists were Mrs. Billinie Porter, Miss Armstrong, and Mr. Alfred Brown, and the choir numbered forty voices. Mr. Billinie Porter was accompanist, and Mr. Armstrong conducted.

Selkirk.—The Annual Concert of the Selkirk Choral Union was given in the Volunteer Hall, on Thursday, March 30th. The first and principal part of the Concert was a successful rendering of Handel's Acis and Galatea. The soloists were Mrs. Smith (soprano), Mr. Byers (tenor), and Mr. Walker (bass), a member of the Union singing the air assigned to Damon, "Would you gain the tender creature?" The choruses were given with accuracy and expression, reflecting great credit on the conductor, Mr. W. A. C. Cruickshank, organist of St. John's Episcopal Church. The second part of the concert comprised songs by Mr. Smith and Mr. Walker, both of whom were enthusiastically encored; a selection from Mendelssohn's Open-air songs; and a few English part-songs. The accompaniments were played by Mr. Guild on the harmonium, and Mr. Head on the piano.

Slough.—A Musical Soirée was given March 29th, to celebrate the extinction of the debt on the new schools. Sir R. B. Harvey, M.P., presided, and an excellent programme was provided, including several glees, part-songs, &c. The vocalists were Miss E. Christian, Master Churchill, and Messrs. T. Smith, Mellor, and Christian. Miss Christian, who possesses a pleasing contralto voice, was loudly applauded in her songs, "Guardian Angels," "Violetta," and "Joyous life," Randegger, and took part in two duets with Mr. O. Christian, "The Sailor sighs," Balfe, and "See the land," Glover. Mr. Smith was highly successful in his song "Sweet Mary of the vale," Ransford. Mr. Mellor was pianist, and Mr. Christian conducted.

St. Andrew's.—On Thursday evening, the 6th ult., the Amateur Choral Society gave its annual concert in the Town Hall, in the presence of a large and appreciative assemblage. The choir numbered nearly fifty voices, the soloists were Miss Simpson, Mr. Davidson, Mr. D'Egville; pianoforte, Miss Jessie Tosh; harmonium, Mr. William Harrison; conductor, Mr. E. Salter. The first part of the programme consisted of Mendelssohn's 95*th Psalm*. The "Spring" portion of Haydn's Oratorio, The Seasons, formed the second part of the programme; and the third was miscellaneous.

Thorpe Hamlet.—A concert of vocal and instrumental music was given on the 19th ult., in the National School-room, in aid of the organ-fund of the parish church. Songs and duets were contributed by Miss Emily Harcourt, Miss Smart, Master E. Harcourt, and Mr. Thouless. Pianoforte solos by Mr. A. Bunnett were important items in the programme. Some overtures and the March from Le Prophète, played by the band, brought the entertainment to an end.

Theydon Bois.—The new organ was opened on Tuesday, the 18th ult., with a special Choral Service. Mr. J. R. Murray, organist of St. Botolph, Aldersgate, and Holy Trinity, Haverstock-hill, presided at the organ, and played a selection from the works of Hesse, Spohr, Mendelssohn, Handel and Bach.

The Edge, Painswick.—On Easter Tuesday, an Amateur Concert was given at the School-room, in aid of the fund for the organ, and for the enlargement of the vestry. The programme consisted of glees, part-songs, readings, and vocal and instrumental solos. The glees and part-songs, unaccompanied, were creditably sung. Miss Sumner sang "My angel lassie," and "Spinning," with excellent effect, the latter being enthusiastically encored. Mr. Heywood-Summer sang two songs with guitar accompaniment, both of which were re-demanded. The two duets, "When the wind blows in from the sea," and "I heard a brooklet gushing," were well rendered by Miss Andrews and Miss Sumner. The other soloists were Mr. F. H. Sumner and Mr. J. H. Davis (pianoforte), and Mr. H. Sumner (violin).

Toronto, Canada.—On the 31st March the Philharmonic Society gave a performance, for the first time in Canada, of Mendelssohn's Oratorio, St. Paul. The chorus and orchestra performed their parts in a very satisfactory manner, and great credit is due to Mr. Torrington, the conductor, to whose careful training the Society owes to a great extent the success which it has met with. The solos were taken by Miss Cathron, Miss Corlett, Messrs. Mitchell, Pearson, Schuch, and Warrington.

Uplyme, Devon.—The parish church having been closed several months for restoration, was re-opened on Easter Sunday. The services, both morning and afternoon, were fully choral; and the members of the choir, for the first time surpliced, acquitted themselves very creditably. Appropriate chants and hymns were sung, and Monk's Easter Anthem, "The Lord is my strength." A word of praise is due to the ladies for the floral decorations. The Rev. Brook de M. Egerton officiated at both services, and Mr. C. White presided at the organ.

Uxbridge.—The second Concert of the Choral Society, for the present season was given at the Public Rooms on the 20th ult. In accordance with the usual practice, the first part consisted of sacred music, and the second of secular, the former being a selection from Mendelssohn's Elijah. The whole of the choruses were true and evenly sung, especially "Thanks be to God," and "Be not afraid." The music of Elijah was well sung by Mr. Wadmore: Miss Marie Duval, and Miss Annie Butterworth were also highly efficient. The accompanists on the piano and harmonium were Mr. J. Walsh and Mr. T. Pettit; Mr. Miles conducted.

Warrington.—The "Musical Bee," given on Tuesday, the 18th ult., was a genuine success. The competitors were numerous and good; the audience large and thoroughly interested in the proceedings; and with the ex-Mayor in the chair, and Dr. Hiles as adjudicator, everything was necessarily managed genially and efficiently. The ex-Mayor (Mr. Chandley), in a short speech, remarked that the projectors of the Musical Bee had not been actuated by a desire to make a profit out of the undertaking, but to elicit from those who had cultivated music, a specimen of their talent, with a view to their own profit, and the instruction and entertainment of the audience. The competition was made as varied as possible by specimens of each class being given in turn. There was a very fair number of entries for all the subjects, with the exception of the quartett at sight, for which there were none at all, and the competitors came from all the surrounding districts, though local talent was, of course, the most extensively represented. Taken as a whole the singing was remarkably good, and appeared to exceed the expectations of almost everyone present, especially the singing at sight, which reflected great credit on the competitors. The prizes were all given in money, and were awarded, after a few introductory remarks, by Dr. Hiles, amidst the warmest applause.

Wellington.—The Harmonic Society gave a performance of the Messiah, in the Town Hall, on the 18th ult. The efforts of the Society were most kindly and ably seconded by Miss Aglio, Miss Rowe, the Rev. T. Randall (from Taunton), Mr. Upcott (from Cullompton), and Mr. Cox, the eminent Exeter tenor, who gave his services gratuitously, on finding that the receipts of the concert were to be given to the Taunton Hospital. Mr. Cox's rendering of "Thou didst not leave his soul in hell" was highly appreciated; Miss Aglio, in "He was despised," Miss Rowe, in "I know that my Redeemer liveth," and the Rev. J. Randall, in "The trumpet shall sound," trumpet obbligato by Mr. Crowe, were also features of the evening. The instrumental accompaniments of Miss Warren and Mr. Toms were admirable as usual. Mr. Manley conducted.

Wolverhampton.—The third and last Concert of the Wolverhampton Festival Choral Society was given at the Exchange, on Monday evening, March 27, when Rossini's Stabat Mater and Spohr's God Thou art Great were performed. The principal parts were sung by Mdlle. Johanna Levier, Madame Enriquez, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and Mr. Lander. The band was most efficient, and a similar meed of praise is due to the choir, which showed evidences of having good and well-drilled voices. Mr. Stockley conducted.

Westbury.—A farewell concert was given by Mr. Leach (who has recently been appointed organist to the Parish Church of Wokingham, Berks) on Tuesday evening, the 28th March, when several gentlemen assisted in the orchestra. In every respect the performance was highly successful, a well-chosen selection of popular music, both vocal and instrumental being most efficiently rendered. The applause was enthusiastic and general, although owing to the bad weather the attendance was not so good as could have been wished.

THE REV. THOMAS HELMORE'S

MANUAL OF PLAIN SONG.

NOW PUBLISHED.

An addition to the series of Works of Plain Song and Accompaniments, forming the several parts of this Manual, has just been brought out under the title of the "SECOND APPENDIX TO THE ACCOMPANYING HARMONIES OF THE BRIEF DIRECTORY."

8vo., Paper Cover, Two Shillings.

It will be found of great service to all who desire suitable harmonies, instrumental or vocal, or both, for use with the Psalter and Canticles Noted. It supplies a want long felt with regard to many of the Chants, as also to the fifth and sixth "Te Deum" in the second set of the Canticles, for which no corresponding harmonized arrangement has, till now, been provided. A short preface, brief general directions, and copious information as to sources from which its various portions are derived, add greatly to its utility and interest. The numbering of the various Forms of the Tones, and their several settings, as well as the references to the different Psalms and Canticles to which any one of them is set in the Plain Song books, are clear, and will add to the facility and interest with which the entire Manual (now wanting only the third Appendix to the Psalter and its Accompanying Harmonies for its completion) will be practically applied to the varying wants of Organists, Choirs, and Congregations. It is accented throughout in correspondence with the Psalter and Canticles Accented.

The fuller and more elaborate Accompanying Harmonies to the Canticles Noted, of which the two arrangements of the "Te Deum" from Baini and Alfieri; and the "Magnificat" from Orlando di Lasso, and Palestrina, are specimens, will form, when completed, an additional and supplementary volume for use in skilful choirs.

London: Novello, Ewer and Co.

(useful for places where only the Canticles are chanted). Also Two "TE DEUMS" for Choir and People, in the alternate verses; adapted from Latin arrangements by Alfieri and Baini; vocal Score and Organ Accompaniment, price 3s. Also the People's Plain Song, separate, price 1½d. Four-part Cadences for the Holy Communion 6d. The Carol for Christmas Morning, vocal score, 18mo. edition, 2d.; melody, 18mo., 1d.

A FESTIVAL ANTHEM,

BY

HUMPHREY J. STARK, MUS. BAC., OXON.

Octavo, 4d. net.

"This is a really good specimen of modern church music, being throughout well written, and in point of ideas above the average of merit. . . . The anthem as a whole is by no means difficult, and can safely be recommended as suitable for choral festivals. It is not only good, but thoroughly pleasing."—Musical Times.

"Has many points of interest."—Monthly Musical Record.

"There is a freedom of style in this Anthem which at first sight is undoubtedly taking. Even a nearer view leaves the impression that its composer is endowed by nature with no mean talent, that he has ideas in plenty, and that he manifestly commits them to paper with ease and celerity."—Concordia.

"It is an Anthem to be liked, and will prove effective without making much tax on the choir."—Choir.

From J. H. Saunders, Esq., Professor of Music.
Cliffe, Lewes, April 19th, 1876.
DEAR SIRS,—The pedals and stool came to hand this morning, so the instrument is now complete; and I must say it surpasses my expectations. The promptness of the intonation (which I rather feared about) renders the "percussion" action altogether needless. The tone is really beautiful. The Diapasons (great) round and full. The Oboe is thoroughly characteristic, and much resembles its prototype on the organ. The accessory stops (Coupler, Voix d'amour, Tremolo, &c.) all work well. The Pedals and the Swell are very effective. Indeed, as a whole, I feel I cannot say too much in its praise.
Yours truly,
J. H. SAUNDERS.
To Messrs. E. and W. Snell.

From E. Bandey, Esq., Organist, St. Cuthbert's Church, Bedford.
Goldington Green, March 10th, 1876.
GENTLEMEN,—The Harmonium arrived all right yesterday, and gives great satisfaction. I am delighted with the tone and touch, and the very prompt way in which the notes speak. I can assure you that when I require another I shall give you the order.
Yours respectfully,
E. BANDEY.

THE NEW PEDAL ATTACHMENT FOR PIANOFORTES.

MR. J. HAMILTON begs to inform Organists, Organ Students and others, that his invention for attaching Pedals to Pianofortes is meeting with great success and is much approved of, as the subjoined testimonials will show. The new action is entirely noiseless, and its simplicity and cheapness must ultimately supersede the cumbrous, expensive, and rattling organ action as usually applied. It can easily be attached to a pianoforte, as it is sent complete, with printed instructions "How to attach." The pedals are manufactured of well-seasoned hard wood, and are similar in scale and compass to the pedals made for organs of the present day.

A set of Radiating and Concave Pedals (30 notes, C to F), with action, price £5 5s. Or Straight Pedal Board, with action, price £4 4s.

TESTIMONIALS.

Claremont Villa, Mansfield, Notts,
January 31st, 1876.

Sir,—I am very pleased with the Pedals and Action, which, by the aid of your printed instructions, I have attached to my Pianoforte. It all answers exceedingly well, and good pedal practice can be got at a small outlay. I hope your pedals will be universally adopted.

I am, yours truly,
ARTHUR MARCHANT,
Organist and Choirmaster, St. John's Church.

ORGAN-TONED HARMONIUMS.

W. HATTERSLEY & CO.'S CELEBRATED ORGAN-TONED HARMONIUMS, which for Durability, Sweetness of Tone, and Rapidity of Touch, are unequalled by any other maker.

These splendid instruments are manufactured only by W. HATTERSLEY & Co., with improved sound board, in double veneered cases, and from well-seasoned material, and have been tried side by side with the best English, American, French, and German Harmoniums, and have been pronounced to be far better both in quality of tone, variety in the stops, repetition in touch, and predominance of the treble over the bass. The large instruments, with double action, and several other improvements, are nearer to the organ than anything yet made.

W. H. & Co. have now enlarged their Manufactory and increased their hands, so that they may be able to keep up to the demand, which has been so pressing of late.

BACH'S MASS IN B MINOR.

BY EBENEZER PROUT, B.A.

THE Masses of Bach occupy a peculiar position in church music. Not one of them is available for the ordinary service of the Roman Catholic ritual. With the exception of the great work which forms the subject of the present article, they are all "Short Masses," containing merely the "Kyrie" and "Gloria;" while, apart altogether from any question of difficulty, the very unusual development of the "High Mass in B Minor" (to give it the title by which it is usually known in Germany), renders it entirely unsuitable for church use. No composer was probably ever less influenced by practical considerations than Bach, who wrote only for his art and for his own satisfaction. Even in the "Church Cantatas" which he composed for his own choir, and of which a hundred are already published in the splendid edition of the Bach Society, while at least as many more still remain in manuscript, we are continually meeting with movements so complex and difficult that it becomes a wonder if they really were sung, and we are driven to the conclusion either that Bach had under his control the most magnificent band and chorus (in point of executive ability, that is, for it is known to have been numerically very weak) that the world has ever seen, or else that the performances of these works on Sunday mornings at the old Thomas-Kirche at Leipzig must have been a charivari sufficient to have made a sensitive musician stop his ears, and rush out of the building.

The extraordinary polyphonic complexity of Bach's music, which constitutes its great difficulty, seems with this wonderful composer to have been really the natural means of expression; it is impossible otherwise to explain the perfect ease and freedom with which the parts move, and the evident absence of effort in construction. To Bach, writing in ten or twelve parts seems to have been just as easy as four-part composition is to an average well-trained musician; nay, at times he seems, as if in the sheer exuberance of his strength, to set himself the most astoundingly difficult problems just to show how easily he can solve them. One interesting example of this may be cited. Everyone knows that Bach's part-writing is of such a kind that it seems impossible either to take from or to add to it; it is perfectly complete, and there apparently is no room for another note. Now the "Gloria" of his Mass in A is taken from one of the Church Cantatas, "Halt im Gedächtniss Jesu Christ." Both works are published by the Bach Society, and a collation of the two movements shows that in the Mass Bach has added a four-part chorus, polyphonic throughout, to what was either an orchestral interlude or a solo; and in other places has written entirely new chorus-parts in place of the old ones without changing a note of the orchestration. Such a feat would have been considered absolutely impossible had it not actually been accomplished.

To return, however, to the Mass in B minor. Of its history, the circumstances and date of its composition, but little is known with certainty. There is strong reason for believing that, like Bach's other masses, it at first consisted only of a "Kyrie" and "Gloria," and that the composition of the portion from the "Credo" to the end was an afterthought. In the first place, the autograph of the latter half of the work differs both in the character of its handwriting and in the kind of paper on which it is written from that of the former; and besides this, it is known that only the "Kyrie" and "Gloria" were sent by the composer in 1733 to the Duke of Saxony, Prince Frederick Augustus, when he petitioned for the rank of Capellmeister at the prince's court; and it is inconceivable that, if the whole work had been composed at that time, Bach should only have sent half. Beyond this, nothing is known as to the time when the Mass was written; for Bach, unlike Handel, was not generally in the habit of dating his manuscripts.

As in his other masses, so in the present, we find certain movements taken from his Church Cantatas, though frequently with considerable alterations. These movements are, in all, five in number, viz.:—

(1) "Gratias agimus," taken from the "Rathswahl Cantata," which was written in 1731.

(2) "Qui tollis," taken, with much alteration, from the opening chorus of the Cantata, "Schauet doch, und sehet."

(3) "Crucifixus," from the Cantata, "Weinen, Klagen."

(4) "Osanna," from an unpublished "Cantata gratulatoria in adventum Regis."

(5) "Agnus Dei," taken from a song in the Ascension Oratorio, "Lobet Gott in seinen Reichen."

The changes which Bach has made in all these numbers are very interesting; but it is impossible to illustrate the point in this notice, as it would be necessary to print large extracts from both versions, in order to make them intelligible.

A word or two must be said as to Bach's orchestration, before proceeding to speak of the various movements of the Mass. Few things are more striking to the student of Bach's scores than the contrast between his instrumentation and that of his great contemporary, Handel. The difference consists chiefly in the very much freer use which Bach makes of his wind instruments. It is comparatively seldom that Handel employs any except oboes, and these mostly play either with the violins or the voices; while in his songs any obbligato part for a wind instrument is of quite rare occurrence. In the "Messiah," for example, there is not a single song (with the solitary exception of "The trumpet shall sound") which has any wind parts at all. In Bach, on the other hand, it is hardly ever that we find a vocal composition in which the wind is not quite as important as the strings; he seems to be constantly trying new combinations; and, in the present work, for instance, there is more variety of tone-colouring than is to be met with in any one of Handel's oratorios.

The Mass is scored for the usual string quartett, two flutes, two oboes (in the "Sanctus" three), two bassoons, three trumpets, drums, and organ, in addition to which one movement contains a part for a horn. To obtain further variety, Bach uses two kinds of oboes, the ordinary instrument, and the oboe d'amore employing sometimes one and sometimes the other, according to the character of the music. The latter was of a quieter tone than the former; it was an oboe in A, a minor third lower in pitch, as is proved by the fact that Bach sometimes writes it as a "transposing instrument," just as the A clarinets are written in modern scores. In the "Magnificat" in D major, for instance, the oboe d'amore part is thus written throughout. One word more must be said about the orchestration. Bach's first trumpet parts are almost invariably written so high as to be absolutely impracticable now-a-days. He not only requires from the player rapid semiquaver passages of great difficulty, but he frequently writes the high C, and sometimes even D for the first trumpet. It has often been doubted whether such passages were possible at all. I had the opportunity some time since of talking on the subject with the greatest living authority on the matter, Mr. Thomas Harper, and he informed me that, by the use of a suitable mouth-piece such passages could undoubtedly be played with practice, but that modern composers write for the instrument in such a different fashion that a performer who played Bach's passages would lose the command of lip necessary for the music of the present day. It is, therefore, very doubtful if we shall ever have an opportunity of hearing, as they were conceived, the effects of these high trumpet notes, ringing out clear above everything else, and imparting to the music a peculiar brilliancy which nothing else can give.

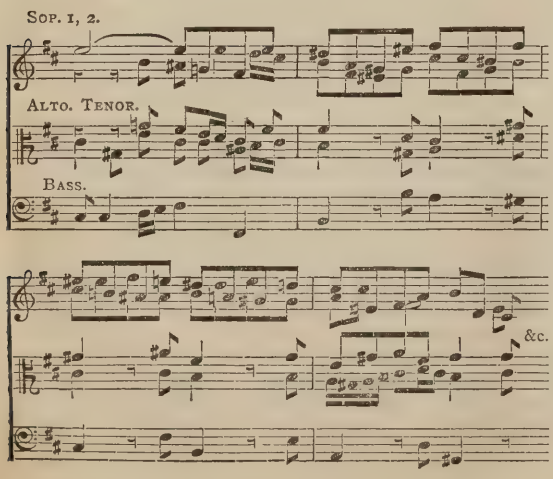
The "Kyrie" of the present Mass is written in three distinct movements, a plan only to be found adopted in exceptional cases, as, for instance, in Beethoven's Mass in D, and Cherubini's first and second masses, all of which are of unusual length. The first movement is a chorus in five parts (two trebles, alto, tenor, and bass) accompanied by strings, flutes, oboi d'amore, bassoons, and organ. After four bars of introduction, adagio, which it is needless to quote, a largo is introduced by a long prelude of twenty-four bars for the orchestra, when the voices enter fugally, the subject being first given by the tenors.

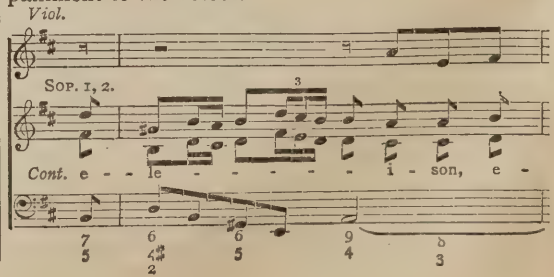
This beautiful chromatic theme is accompanied by the oboes and basses, making a four-part harmony. Those who are familiar with Bach's style will readily imagine what he would do with so promising a subject. With the entry of each successive voice the interest augments, and as the oboes continue their independent course for a while, we find some six-part writing of the most masterly clearness. The episodes, too, are of great beauty; but space will only permit the quotation of one short passage on the word "eleison"—

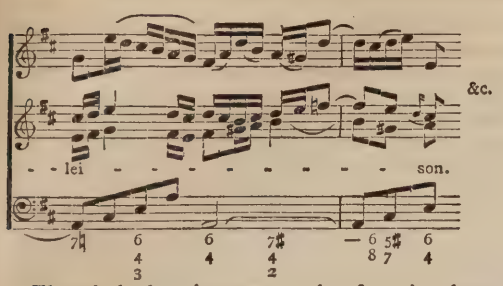


As all the voices are singing the same word, it is omitted for the sake of clearness. Such extracts as the above are, of course, most inadequate to give any idea of the whole; it is almost like the old joke of carrying about a brick as the specimen of a house; still, the quotation will help readers to imagine the style in which the movement is written. The wailing and supplicating tone of the music is continued to the very end, and the chorus is throughout not only characteristic of Bach, but one of his finest inspirations.

The following "Christe" is a duet in D major, for two trebles, accompanied by violins in unison, basses and organ. As a general rule (though with many striking exceptions, some of which we shall meet with later in the present work), Bach's music for solo voices is less impressive than his choruses. The reason for this is probably that he mostly treats his voices exactly as if they were instruments. It is the rarest thing to find a movement which is not written in the polyphonic style; consequently the voice, instead of having the melody, has only one melody out of several, all of which are of equal importance, and they are, moreover, instrumental rather than vocal in character. The present duet, for example, would be just as effective, if not more so, were the voice-parts played on two clarinets, as it is when sung. At the same time, it is impossible not to admire the skill with which the various parts are combined. The duet opens with a symphony, of which it will be sufficient to quote the first bars—

For the sake of readers who are not accustomed to the scores of the old masters, it may be as well to explain that "Continuo" is the term used in Bach's time for the figured bass. The violoncellos and double-basses played the lower line of the quotation, and the organist filled in the harmonies from the figures. The voice-parts in the duet move for the most part either in thirds and sixths, or in passages of imitation more or less strict. One short extract will show the way in which they are combined with the instruments, and will also illustrate what has just been said about the skill with which different subjects are brought together. It will be seen that the violins have the opening subject, here used as an accompaniment to the voices.



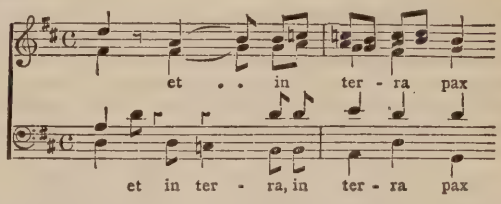


The whole duet interests rather from its cleverness than from its absolute musical beauty, being written in a style with which in our days we have little sympathy. The third movement—"Kyrie"—is a fugue in F sharp minor, alla breve, in which the instruments play in unison with the voices, excepting the basses, which have an independent part throughout a considerable portion of the movement. The subject of the fugue is first announced by the bass voices, accompanied by the instrumental basses and organ.

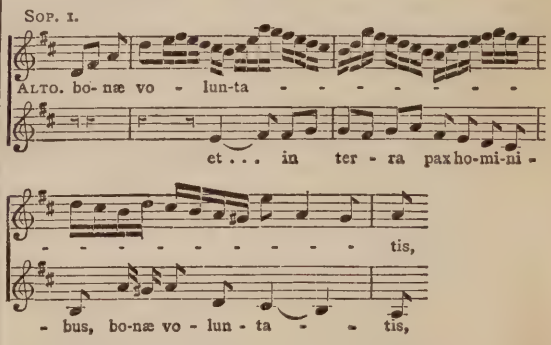
Here it will be seen that, as in the first number, the chromatic element is again in the ascendant. The fugue is treated in the strictest ecclesiastical style, with an abundance of close imitation; it is in complete contrast, and at the same time in most thorough keeping with the first setting of the words, and brings this portion of the Mass to a noble termination.

The "Gloria" is probably the longest, and certainly the most elaborate setting of the text ever written. It comprises no less than eight movements, nearly all of which are developed at considerable length. It commences with one of those grand polyphonic choruses in the construction of which Bach has never been equalled. Three trumpets and drums are here added to the score, the former instruments being very freely employed in solo passages of great brilliance. A symphony of twenty bars (the key of the movement being D major, the tempo vivace), in which the chief theme is announced by the orchestra, introduces the voices, the lead being taken by the alto and answered by the tenor.

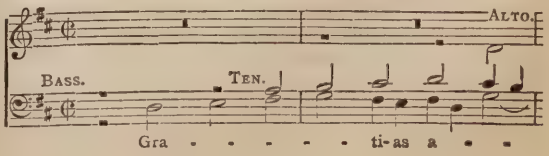
These bars are accompanied by two oboes and basses with independent counterpoint, the trumpets and drums marking the entry of each voice with an emphatic chord. At the next bar the full chorus and orchestra enter with magnificent effect. I would gladly quote the continuation of the passage, but no extract would do justice to it short of re-printing half a page from the full score; and as there are seldom less than eight real parts, and often ten or twelve, it is quite impossible to condense it clearly in a few staves. After a half-cadence, a short symphony leads to a full close on the dominant, upon the last note of which the trebles enter with the chief subject, now in A. In this key the music continues for some time, the voice-parts being mostly in free imitation with independent and florid accompaniments for the orchestra. A return to a full cadence in the original key leads to a change to common time, and the introduction of entirely new material for the "Et in terrâ pax." The jubilant tone which has hitherto characterized the movement gives place to quieter strains. The voices and organ begin thus:—

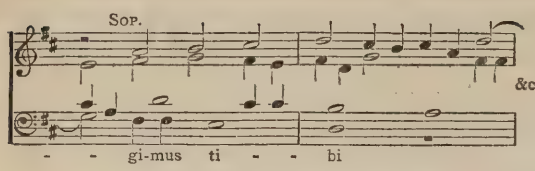


On the third quaver of the second bar the strings enter with the same theme in the fifth below, the flutes and oboes following suit at one bar's distance, close imitation being kept up till a full cadence is reached in E minor. The same theme is then treated by the orchestra alone in six-part harmony; after which it is made the subject of a very extended fugue, with a most elaborate counter-subject. One short quotation will give both subject and counterpoint. The first treble commences in the key of D, and, on the conclusion of the subject proper, continues with the "bonae voluntatis," while the alto answers in the fourth below.



In addition to these voice-parts, there is also full harmony in the orchestra. The five-part fugue is developed at much length, with abundance of episode and brilliant instrumentation. After this grand chorus, the following soprano solo, in A major, "Laudamus te," seems to fall somewhat flat. It is accompanied by a violin obbligato, stringed quartett, and organ. Both the voice-part and the solo violin are very florid in style, the former abounding in those "divisions" so often to be met with in the vocal music of that day; but the movement as a whole contains no feature on which it is needful to dwell. It is followed by a very fine fugue, "Gratias agimus" (D major ¢). This chorus is taken, with some not very important alterations, from a Church Cantata, written in 1731 for the election of the Town Council at Leipzig. The quotation of its chief theme will sufficiently indicate its character.





To save space, the words are given only with the bass part. The second theme for the "propter magnam gloriam tuam" is more florid than the first. Toward the end of the chorus occurs one of those passages which we shall never hear as intended, the theme of the fugue being given out by the first trumpet in its upper octave.

dominating over all the voices and instruments. When played at the recent performances at St. James's Hall by clarinets, the notes could hardly be heard.

SAMUEL SEBASTIAN WESLEY.

THE genius and productions of Samuel Sebastian Wesley demand more than a passing notice. The student of to-day must learn from the student of a bygone time how much the lamented master did towards making musical England what she now is. That he might have done more than he has is known and regretted by all. Still he has accomplished great things, and left a mark not easily blotted out nor widely understood.

Samuel Sebastian Wesley was reared in an atmosphere of music. Surrounded by those who could appreciate and encourage him, he went on from "strength to strength," until he became the most powerful exponent of Church music and organ-playing in this country. Would that the happiness and work of his youth had permeated his whole life. But alas! he never ceased to regret and to suffer from the wet blanket of discouragement, which was or he thought was, continually thrown over him, by ecclesiastical dignitaries, and by circumstances which surrounded him from his early manhood up to the day of his death. Even so recently as November, 1874, he thus writes to a friend:—

"And now for the flood-gate difficulties. I have moved from Cathedral to Cathedral because I found musical troubles at each. Until Parliament interferes to put Cathedrals on a totally different footing as to music, I affirm that any man of eminence will find obstacles to doing himself and his music justice which will render his life a prolonged martyrdom."

A prolonged martyrdom truly! How, then, could he be expected to compose, and to give to the world more and more gems of art, when he must have been constantly discouraged, and weary and sick at heart! And here it should be stated that his fine Service in E was not written for any Cathedral, but at the instigation of Mr. Martin Cawood of Leeds, from whom he received fifty guineas for the copyright.

Dr. Wesley's life-work may be divided into three parts:—(1) his Service music, Anthems, Hymns, &c.; (2) Secular Compositions; (3) Organ Compositions and playing.

Of his Services, those which bear the unmistakable stamp of his genius are the complete Cathedral Service in E (alluded to above) and the popular and ever-fresh Service in F. Both of these were written for use at the Leeds Parish Church, when Dr. Hook was vicar. The Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, forming the evening portion of the Service in F, are founded on a Gregorian tone, but the Te Deum is at once original and full of beauty, power, and devotional feeling. They are as different in their style, character and effect, from the setting of the old Ambrosian hymn by the elder Cathedral composers, as it is possible to conceive: and yet Wesley held in great reverence the services of Gibbons, Croft, &c.

Of his Anthems, it is impossible to speak too highly, or to over-estimate their great influence on Church music chiefly in use at the present day. Well do I remember the first rehearsal by the Cathedral Choir at Exeter of "The Wilderness,"—the astonishment and delight of the Vicars Choral with its rich and wonderful modulations,—its deeply religious fervour, its difficulties and grand effects. As one of the Choir-boys taking part in the lovely quartett at the end, "And sorrow and sighing shall flee away," I was intensely interested, and remember to this day the deep emotion which this inspiration excited in me. If possible, a still greater delight was afforded the choristers when they were first taught to sing the ever-fresh responsive duet, "Love one another with a pure heart fervently," which forms a part of the fine popular Anthem "Blessed be the God and Father." In the original edition of this Anthem, the composer states in a foot-note that "it was composed by request for the Service of Easter-Day at the Hereford Cathedral, on which occasion only trebles and a single bass voice were available!"

But there are several other Anthems not so well known, deserving the most careful perusal of the student. No musician unacquainted with it should lose any time in making himself familiar with "O Lord, Thou art my God," the elaborate eight-part Anthem Wesley wrote for his Doctor's degree at Oxford, when Dr. Crotch held the Professorial Chair. In this work there is a bass solo, "For our heart shall rejoice in Him," worthy of association with the best Oratorio songs of the great Masters. Then again, "Cast us not away from Thy presence," in E minor, short, but sublime in the dignity of its harmonies, and in their exact suitability to the words. The discords at the passage, "That the bones which Thou hast broken," should be especially noted for their peculiar power and effect. This six-voice Anthem was written at Helmsley, in Yorkshire, whilst the Doctor was confined to his bed with a fractured leg, the accident having occurred when returning from one of his fly-fishing excursions; for, be it known, the departed master was a devoted and successful disciple of Isaac Walton. To linger over these Anthems and point out innumerable passages of beauty and power would be a labour of love; but lack of space forbids. And here a passing word may be said of his Psalmody and Hymn-tunes. One of the latter, "Aurelia," has now a world-wide popularity, and deservedly so. It is a model for modern hymn-tune makers; broad, melodious, and majestic. His European Psalmist, over which he lingered so long that a goodly number of the original subscribers to the work died before its publication, contains many fine original tunes, and established favourites are harmonized with a master hand. Still the work did not fulfil the high expectations formed of it before its appearance, and it will probably be chiefly used as a valuable work of reference.

I must now pass on and say a few words on Wesley's Secular Compositions. These consist chiefly of Songs, Pianoforte pieces, and Glees. His first published song "You told me once," dedicated to Mrs. Hawes, and composed when Wesley was quite young, contains several of the elements of style and manner which he afterwards developed and made peculiarly his own. I doubt if a more charming song has been written than his setting of Byron's words, "There be none of beauty's daughters," (There is also a set of six sacred songs, the Collects, versified by W. H. Bellamy, published by Chappell and Co., one or two of which are in his happiest style.) Nor must Wesley's Glees and Part-Songs be forgotten. Of the former, the most elaborate and beautiful is "I wish to tune my quivering lyre;" among the lattter, "Shall I tell you?"

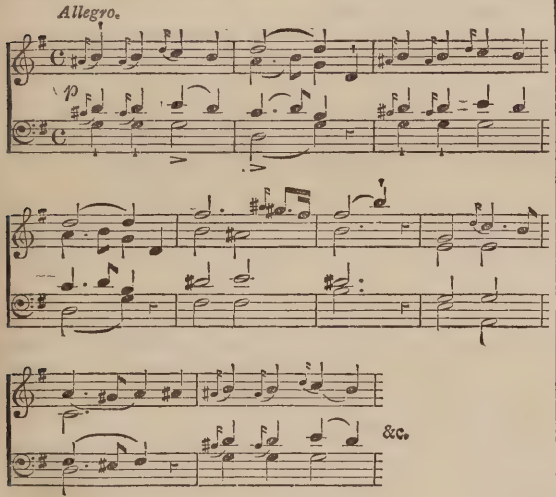
Many of the earlier pieces for the pianoforte which Wesley wrote afford beautiful examples of the versatility of his genius, though they are not so well known as their great merits deserve. His first pianoforte composition is a clever Introduction and Rondo on an air from Spohr's Opera "Azor and Zemira," dedicated to Mrs. Hawes. It was published by W. Hawes, 355, Strand. There can be no doubt that the young musician was greatly enamoured with the productions of Louis Spohr; indeed, to the end of his days he was a great admirer of the rich chromatic modulations and dramatic power of the celebrated Capelmeister of Cassel. Later on, Wesley published a Rondo in G, at Mori and Lavenu's, which every pianist should possess. Here is the theme:—



In 1842 he produced an elaborate March in C minor, followed by a brilliant Rondo in C major, the following being the opening phrase of each:—

MARCH.

RONDO.

This was published by Cramer and Co., and about the same time Wesley composed for a lady in Leeds a set of Quadrilles (Chappell and Co.), difficult, but beautiful, and in extraordinary contrast to the stuff usually produced for that favourite dance.

Wesley's published organ compositions are provokingly few. Beyond his variations on "God save the Queen," composed for the opening of the new organ at St. Mary's, Redcliffe, Bristol, and two sets of "Three Pieces for a Chamber Organ," dedicated to Lady Acland (who was his pupil when he was at Exeter); a fine Introduction and Fugue in C sharp minor; an Andante written for the inauguration of Willis's organ in the Agricultural Hall; a Voluntary, Grave and Andante in D minor and F major, composed for the Organists' Quarterly Journal, and a few smaller pieces, nothing was produced to sustain the splendid talents of one who possessed sufficient inventive power to have written a hundred Sonatas. But what he has left is sufficient to establish his individuality; and there can be no doubt that the careful study of the organ-pieces enumerated above must leave an impression on the mind of the earnest musician as pure and healthy as that produced by the best works of the great masters.

As an organist, Wesley, in his prime, stood first and foremost. He was unquestionably one of the earliest and most successful performers of John Sebastian Bach's grand organ pedal fugues; he was the first to introduce a greatly varied style and expression, and to infuse orchestral combinations and colouring into organ-playing; he was a splendid choir accompanist; and, lastly, he was certainly one of the finest and most dignified extempore players of his day and generation.

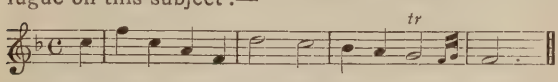
Those pupils who, like myself, spent day by day with him for many years, and who have listened to the performances of other organists of the highest fame, can truly testify to Wesley's greatness as a player, when he was in good form. It is idle to deny that he had not always his composing or playing cap on. He was wayward and difficult to persuade. And yet, when he did come out in all his power, it was with the stride of a giant, dwarfing all else into littleness.

His spontaneous introductions or preludes to anthems he liked, cannot easily be forgotten. They were always in harmony with the leading subjects in the composition, ever adding new beauties to the thoughts and works of the original writers.

For his concluding voluntaries, after the close of service, as well as in public halls, he frequently extemporized fugues of considerable length and perfect development. Having noted down many of his subjects on these occasions, I will here give one of the earliest, and one of the latest, from which he improvised with more than his ordinary power and success.

It was after evening service at the Leeds Parish Church, on Sunday, September 18th, 1842, that Wesley improvised a splendid fugue, which lasted about twenty minutes, on the following theme:—

Just thirty years afterwards, on Wednesday evening, July 31st, 1872, he went with Sir Henry Dryden (a distinguished amateur) and myself to the Leeds Town Hall, to hear the grand organ, and after expressing some little hesitation about playing on a large, strange instrument, he sat down and extemporized for half an hour in his former fine manner, concluding his performance with a well-wrought-out fugue on this subject :—



Sufficient has been said, it is hoped, to shew that Samuel Sebastian Wesley possessed a musical genius of no mean order, and that the honoured name of his father was worthily sustained and extended by his son, who never debased his art, but ever held up to himself an ideal of perfection, which, if he did not always realize, at least helped to place him amongst the most esteemed of musical heroes.

Leeds, May 22, 1876. WILLIAM SPARK.

THE model of the new Opera House, now erecting on the Thames Embankment, has been exhibited during the past month in the rotunda of Drury Lane Theatre. As far as we can judge, it appears to be not only the best, but the most commodious theatre ever built in this country. We of course expect that the fashionable portion of the audience shall be well provided for, and are not therefore surprised that the pit area should be entirely devoted to stalls, that all the private boxes should have ante-rooms, or that a subway should be erected from the Houses of Parliament and St. Stephen's Club. But we are glad to say that the general public has also been duly considered; for every seat is to be a fauteuil, even to the back of the gallery; and there appears no reason to doubt that humble pedestrians will be able to leave the house without being trampled under the horses' feet. In this respect then, at least, Mr. Mapleson may boast of having provided us with a "People's Opera House."

SOME time ago we commented upon the fact of Mr. Leighton, R.A., proposing, at a dinner of the Artists' Orphan Fund, "The Sister Art of Music," as one of the toasts of the evening, and ventured to express a hope that this acknowledgment of the claims of the art to take its place with painting and sculpture might lead to good results. Latterly, however, we have had a "Banquet to Literature and Art" at the Mansion House, and the Annual Dinner of the Royal Academy of Arts, and at neither of these gatherings do we find that one word was said about music. Considering how eloquently the Lord Mayor spoke about the "science of sound" and its high social position, when he wished to obtain funds for the National Training School of Music, we should have thought that at least some of the representatives of the art would have been invited to the Mansion House dinner; and it is also disappointing to find that the excellent example set by Mr. Leighton should not have been followed by some other artist at the Banquet of the Royal Academy. It is true that music has so many earnest workers amongst its own professors that the love for it is rapidly spreading with the general public; but the truth is manifest that for any recognition of its power from those whose thoughts are devoted to other arts, we must "wait a little longer."

THE "List of Graduates in the Faculty of Music from 1830 to 1876," recently issued, sets at rest all doubt as to the persons legally entitled to write Mus. Bac., or Mus. Doc. after their names. It is well known that no foreign Universities possess a faculty of Music at all, nor do the Universities of Scotland; and we cannot therefore be too grateful for this publication which—as is stated in the prefatory remarks—may be "commended to all lovers of honesty and fair dealing."

LOAN COLLECTION OF SCIENTIFIC APPARATUS AT SOUTH KENSINGTON.

This magnificent collection of scientific apparatus, drawn from all quarters of the globe, was inaugurated by a visit from the Queen to the South Kensington Museum on Saturday the 13th ult., and the Exhibition was thrown open to the public on the Monday following. It is open without payment on three days in the week, and on Wednesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays, by payment of sixpence. The mere catalogue of the contents exceeds six hundred octavo pages, and so many additions were made after this first edition was printed, that the next issue will probably exceed a thousand pages. The Queen was accompanied by the Empress of Germany, the Princess Beatrice, the Duke of Edinburgh, the Duke of Cambridge, and Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar.

The collection is divided into twenty-one Sections, and Sub-Committees have been formed out of the General Committee, in order that each department should be in the charge of those who are specially interested in that branch of science. The utility of the Exhibition is greatly extended by conferences, which are held in one of the large rooms in the building every day except Saturday, and at these conferences, which are from 11 to 1 and from 2 to 4, addresses are delivered to explain and to illustrate the uses of the various instruments in the rooms. The arrangements already made extend to the 2nd inst. Thus, addresses on Physics, including Astronomy, were delivered on the 16th, 19th, and 24th ult. On Mechanics, including Pure and Applied Mathematics and Measurement, on the 17th, 22nd, and 25th. On Chemistry, on the 18th and 23rd. On Biology, on the 26th and 29th; and on Physical Geography, Geology, Mineralogy, and Meteorology, on the 30th ult., and on the 1st and 2nd inst. The nature of the subjects discussed may be judged by the arrangements for the Section of Physics at the morning sitting on the 19th ult.: "Professor Tyndall, D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S.—On the Reflexion of Sound. Dr. Stone—On Just Intonation and Limits of Audible Sound. Mr. Bosanquet, M.A.—On Instruments of Just Intonation. Mr. F. Galton, F.R.S.—On the Limits of Audible Sound. Professor W. G. Adams, M.A., F.R.S.—On the late Sir Charles Wheatstone's Acoustical Discoveries. Mr. W. Chappell, F.S.A.—On Ancient Musical Science. Mr. J. Baillie Hamilton—On Æolian Instruments." This sitting extended half-an-hour beyond the prescribed time, owing to the number of subjects. Professor Tyndall showed that no material through which air could penetrate—neither heavy curtains, nor even eight folds of felt fastened together—could intercept the passage of a wave of musical sound, but that the interposition of any substance impervious to air, such as the hand, a card, or thin piece of oiled silk, or even a cambric handkerchief thoroughly soaked in water, would effectually bar its passage and reflect it. A musical sound was produced by him in a long glass pipe, laid horizontally, and directed to the orifice of a thin jet of gas so elongated as to be only just short of the flaring point, and the pipe at a distance of about two yards from the flame. It was essential that the sound-wave should be directed to the orifice of the jet of gas, for it had no effect when pointed to the body of the flame or to the nut below the orifice. When rightly guided, the flame proved to be a test of extraordinary delicacy for the presence of musical vibrations, the sound-wave causing it to flare immediately in wreaths somewhat like the smoke of expiring candles. Professor Tyndall next showed that ordinary air when occurring in compressed layers, was capable of reflecting or echoing sound as effectually as a solid wall. In fact, at every passage of a sound-wave from a rarified or heated, to a non-heated or condensed atmospheric layer, acoustical reflexion would be obtained. To prove this, a series of gas jets were ignited beneath the orifices in a tube in such a manner as to heat successive layers of the air through which the musical sound was to be transmitted. The test-flame immediately became quiescent—the transmission of sound being as thoroughly intercepted as when the hand had been interposed. This would account for the variable effect upon the ear from the sounds of large bells. Standing, for instance, at the end of the Serpentine, in Hyde Park, and listening to the mid-day toll of Big Ben, it was by no means an unusual thing to hear, perhaps, the first one or two strokes with great intensity of sound; the third might appear somewhat less loud; the fourth faint; the fifth fainter still; and the sixth might be absolutely inaudible. The next note might probably make itself faintly heard; and, by the time we arrived at the twelfth, the original intensity might be restored. All this time the air might be beautifully clear, and free from any trace of mist. As a matter of fact, however, what might be termed acoustical clouds were floating about, and it was to their existence and interposition that we owed the variation in the effect produced. These invisible clouds were nothing more than masses of air of non-homogenous density, and were due to local radiation of heat, to evaporation, &c. These are the principal points of Dr. Tyndall's lecture, the time of which was limited to half-an-hour; and he was warmly applauded. Dr. Stone then followed with some remarks upon just intonation, and upon the limits of audible sounds. The tiny pipes which were made by the late J. H. Griesbach, were upon the table; and Dr. Stone explained that their sounds were too high to be audible to any but most exceptional ears; but that, by sounding two together, the resultant tone which they created, perhaps two octaves below, was audible to all, and a satisfactory proof that the pipes were actually sounding. He mentioned that the late Sir Charles Wheatstone had obtained the same results from very minute harmonium springs, and that the Professor of the University of Oxford, the Rev. Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley, Bart., had proved that sounds might be too low for hearing, by stretching a string of sixty-four feet in length, which was only audible at the half, and that to very few ears, while the quarter of the length was audible to all. A string displaces so much less air than an organ pipe that the pipe would be audible at a lower pitch than the string. Dr. Stone referred to Mr. A. J. Ellis's Duodene Harmonium, which the maker had declined to exhibit, and to Mr. Bosanquet's harmonium, which divided the octave into fifty-seven intervals. Mr. Bosanquet afterwards explained the objects of his instrument briefly, and played upon it during the recess. The subject may be familiar to many readers from the elucidatory paper printed in the "Transactions of the Musical Association," or from the newspaper reports of that meeting. Mr. Francis Galton, F.R.S., followed Mr. Bosanquet, and reverted to the limits of an audible sound. He had constructed a very minute whistle at the end of a pipe, which looked like a black riding whip, but the handle was an elastic india-rubber ball, by compressing which he sounded the whistle. Only one or two gentlemen in the room could hear any sound from it, but Mr. Galton had experimented upon many of the animals in the Zoological Gardens, and had found that some had a more delicate sense of hearing, or could hear higher sounds than man. He gave the palm over all to the cat. Professor W. G. Adams, M.A., F.R.S., next took up the subject of the late Sir Charles Wheatstone's musical and acoustical discoveries, but more briefly than he had already explained some of them at the Musical Association. The time allotted was too limited to enable the learned professor to advance beyond that point, and many regretted it. Mr. W. Chappell, F.S.A., followed Professor Adams, and selected the subject of ancient musical science. He said that having been curious to learn the musical systems in prehistoric ages, he had taken models of some ancient Egyptian pipes at Turin and in the British Museum, and had new pipes constructed from them. It was a custom of the ancient Egyptians to deposit a small musical pipe and a straw of large Egyptian barley, or a reed, beside the dead body in the tomb, and some of these tombs in which these pipes had been found were as ancient as the pyramids. The pipes are like shepherds' pipes to be played by a straw or reed at the end, like the hautboy, but they are cylindrical pipes, not conical. It seems to have been complimentarily supposed that the dead man would feel so happy when he awoke from death, that he would like a pipe to play upon, and the straw of barley was obviously intended to supply a stock of reeds, for a few of the remaining pipes have the remains of similar reeds within them. This is the case as to one of the pipes in the British Museum, and another at Turin, while the straws which were placed beside the pipes are preserved in the British Museum and in the museum at Leyden. Mr. Chappell was indebted to Dr. Stone's assistance in trying the pipes in various ways to find out all possible notes which could have been produced. In one case it was necessary to sink the reed within the pipe to elicit its tones. This contrivance had evidently been resorted to in order to protect the fragile straw from injury, and it exemplifies in anticipation the concealed reed in the drone of the bagpipe. Another pipe was drilled through a little below the reed, and it could not be sounded at all until these holes were closed. By covering them with a film of gutta-percha, instead of the fish-bladder which had probably been used, the tones were rendered slightly tremulous, and assimilated more to the human voice. This is the principle of the old English pipe called the Recorder, to which Shakespeare refers in Hamlet and in A Midsummer Night's Dream. The Recorder was simply the old English flute blown, like the flageolet, at the end, but with a hole drilled through it to be covered with bladder, to produce the vocal quality of tone through the slight vibrations of the bladder. Who would have supposed that these two principles, the bagpipe reed and the Recorder are as old as the Pyramids! Four Egyptian pipes were selected for experiment, and two proved to be tenor pipes and two treble. No long bass pipe has been hitherto found. The Recorder pipe is in the British Museum. It is a treble pipe upon the pentaphonic or Scotch scale, and it agrees absolutely in pitch with the present tuning of the black keys of a pianoforte or harmonium. It has four holes, is 10⅛ inches long, and has five notes in its ordinary scale, thus:—

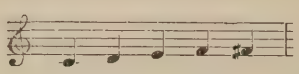
The other treble pipe is much longer and is on the diatonic major scale. It is one of the Turin pipes, 14⅛ inches long, with six holes. The fundamental note of this pipe was not obtained, but it yielded six notes of the ascending scale of E major, lacking only the D sharp and E to complete the octave:—

The two tenor pipes are exactly one note above the other in pitch. Of these, the Turin pipe, which has the sunken bagpipe reed, is 23⅜ inches long, and it has but three holes. The notes are those of a Diatessaron, or fourth, from the B flat above the bass cleff to E flat:—

The second of the tenor pipes is much shorter, and has four holes. It is in the British Museum, and is only 8¾ inches long. The notes are:—



The F sharp at the end is peculiar. Possibly it may have been intended for G, and thereby would have made a Fifth, as in one of the above scales, but again, it may have been intended to supplement a treble pipe, for we see that the Egyptians played treble, tenor, and bass pipes in concert, in the fourth dynasty of Egypt. (See the plate of the Tomb of Tebhen in Chappell's History of Music, p. 65.) And now, the peculiar discovery through these pipes is, that we have been enabled to look back "into the dark backward and abysm of time," before the minor scale came into use in Egypt. Through the Greeks we inherited the minor scale which has therefore been reputed as the more ancient, but Pythagoras learnt the science of music from Egyptian priests, who flourished at far less ancient dates than the pipes from which these models are taken.

The lecturer then explained how the minor scale had been formed out of two tetrachords of a major scale, as the tetrachords of C and the tetrachord of F, (B, C, D, E, and E, F, G, A,) by joining them together at E, so as to reduce the number of notes to seven, "because there were but seven planets." We pass over this because it has been printed, and also his description of the ancient Hydraulic Organ, of which Dr. H. Stone exhibited a working-model on the table, which he had made from the description in Chappell's History of Music. The air was pumped in, the water rose, and on touching a key, the organ-pipe sounded a fully sustained tone. Mr. J. Baillie Hamilton was then called upon to exhibit and to explain his combinations of wind, spring, free reed, and string. Mr. Hamilton has made great advances since his last lecture at the Musical Association. First giving a history of previous attempts, including the earlier of his own, founded upon the discoveries of Mr. Farmer, he exhibited a coiled string of flattened wire, enclosed in a box of one foot in length, from which he produced the tone of a twenty-foot diapason pipe, by attaching the string to the tongue of a harmonium. The pure diapason tone has hitherto been the chief difficulty of attainment. Mr. Hamilton has also discovered a second means of obtaining all varieties of quality from the diapason to the horn, by attaching wire springs of different forms to the tongues of harmoniums. These vary from the double circle to the double lozenge form, sometimes the one lozenge half above the other. These can be better judged of by hearing, than by description, and all who are curious should visit the Exhibition at a time when Mr. Herman Smith is there to explain and to sound them. In the mean time, Mr. Hamilton has clearly shown the possibility of constructing an organ without pipes, and of so diminutive a size as to become a drawing-room instrument.

There is some intention on the part of the authorities to continue these conferences on certain evenings to be fixed hereafter. The Museum is open free till 10 o'clock p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Saturdays, and it will be a great convenience to many if the design of the conferences can be carried out.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

THE opening night at this establishment introduced Signor Stagno (a tenor who has not been heard in this country for some years) in the character of Faust, a trying part, and one but ill-suited to his requirements, for the declamatory portions are beyond his power, and his voice is too worn to give due effect to the love scenes. There was much, however, to admire in Signor Stagno; for he has a good stage presence, and shows much intelligence in his acting and singing, his progress during the month in other characters, especially Roberto, in Meyerbeer's "Roberto il Diavolo," being deserving of warm praise. In the same opera Mademoiselle Von Elsner made her début as the Princess Isabella, but scarcely succeeded in winning the sympathies of the audience. Her best display was in the aria, "In vano." Mademoiselle Titiens has returned with her voice in finer order than ever, and has appeared in many of those parts which she has made so thoroughly her own, before crowded audiences. Madame Christine Nilsson, too, is one of the principal attractions of the season; and M. Faure has joined the company, making his first appearance as Mephistophiles, in Gounod's "Faust." The usual operas have satisfied the usual subscribers; but musicians are anxiously looking for the promised production of Cherubini's "Medea," with Mademoiselle Titiens as the heroine.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

THOSE who, on the production of "Lohengrin" last season were somewhat astonished at finding it not only teeming with beautiful melody, but in other respects very much like many operas with which they were acquainted, must have been still more surprised at hearing for the first time, on the 6th ult., the much-talked-of "Tannhäuser;" for in this composition we have, in addition to the usual impassioned love-scenes, with solos and duets, some very important pageant music, which strongly reflects the style of the composers with whose works opera-goers are tolerably familiar. But it must be remembered that we have learned our Wagnerian lesson strangely enough in this country. By means of that missionary Association termed the "Wagner Society," much of the composer's music written only for performance on the stage has already been heard in the concert-room; and operatic managers, who work in the world of art as we work in the world of commerce, have thought proper to commence the selection of Wagner's operas with a comparatively early work, "Der Fliegende Holländer," then to take a leap to "Lohengrin," and afterwards to go back to "Tannhäuser," so that we should advise all who are unacquainted with the composer's theory, as logically set forth in his "Opera and Drama," to trouble themselves but little with the manner in which a certain principle is worked out in these compositions; but, dismissing especially the conventional trivialities of the modern Italian Opera, to see and hear these musical dramas, and judge for themselves how far they fulfil the requirements demanded by the lyric stage. Viewed in this light, then, we pronounce "Tannhäuser" a noble work. Based on a legend which, although mythical, has enough of human interest to enlist the sympathies of an audience, and musically coloured with a fidelity which forcibly demonstrates the truth of Wagner's assertion that a composer should be his own poet, this opera must of necessity grow in public estimation until the fashionable Italian disguise with which it is now presented to us shall be thrown off, and a welcome accorded to it by the people in its native costume. It is a peculiarity of all the works of this composer that they defy criticism upon any special points, the music in all cases so springing from the drama that in attempting to analyse the one, we must of necessity analyse the other. No pretty song for the soprano, no high C "from the chest" of the tenor, no sensational passage "a due" are patched in to evoke a storm of applause, and convert the stage into a flower-garden; the standard of art erected by the composer at the commencement of his work is never for an instant degraded; and from the first to the last scene one beautiful tone-picture is before us, the effect of which is not shown by audible marks of approbation at certain details, but by the burst of applause when the fall of the curtain, at the end of each act, gives time for reflection upon what has been passing before us. The story of "Tannhäuser" is excellently adapted both for dramatic and musical effects. The opening scene, the "Hill of Venus," the view of Wartburg Castle, and the "Tournament of Song," are excellently contrasted, and effectually test the varied powers of a composer. That Wagner has fully availed himself of all the opportunities is unquestionable; and if in some places the scenes are unduly lengthened, it cannot be said that the composer himself shows signs of weariness, for the dramatic interest is well sustained to the end, the death of the hero being associated with some of the finest music in the opera. The execution of the work was generally excellent. A more poetical and refined rendering of the character of Elizabeth than that of Mdlle. Albani it is impossible to imagine, and her exquisite singing, especially of the Prayer to the Virgin, created a marked effect upon the audience. Mdlle. D'Angeri marred the whole of her execution of the music allotted to Venus by the constant vibrato, a defect which we presume is now beyond hope of remedy. Signor Carpi's Tannhäuser was coarse in parts, but he sang well, and warmed towards the end so as to leave a tolerably favourable impression at the conclusion of the Opera. One of the great successes of the evening was M. Maurel, who gave the whole of the music of Wolfram with a purity of style and truth of expression worthy of the highest praise. A good word must also be given to Signor Capponi, who played the part of the Landgrave; to Signor Pavani for his rendering of the impassioned air in the "Tournament of Song," and to Mdlle. Cottino, who gave the unaccompanied song of "The Shepherd" well in tune. Considering the difficulty of the music, every praise is due to the members of the chorus, who must have worked hard to attain so good a result. It is true that the pitch of the choir and orchestra was occasionally at variance; but the best effects were precisely in the most intricate portions of the opera, in confirmation of which we may mention the perfection with which the whole of the finale to the second act was sung. The orchestra was thoroughly efficient, the overture being so finely played as to elicit an encore—to the detriment, of course, of the continuity of idea insisted upon by Wagner—and the whole of the picturesque and elaborate accompaniments being played to absolute perfection. The scenic arrangements were excellent, the "Hill of Venus" only excepted, a common-place and ineffective scene representing the abode of the goddess, and a conventional ballet taking the place of what should have been a carefully-prepared series of varied dances, as described in the libretto. The "Tournament of Song" was a magnificent spectacle, the gorgeous dresses of the assembled guests, and the bright armour of the soldiers, forming one of the most brilliant exhibitions of light and colour ever seen on the stage. As usual in the performance of Wagner's Operas, the applause was chiefly reserved for the conclusion of each act, Signor Vianesi (the conductor) being included in the call for the artists at the end of the performance. With "Lohengrin" and "Tannhäuser" now fairly before us, it is possible that we may eventually pass, through "Tristan und Isolde," to the "Trilogy;" but whatever their ultimate fate with an English audience, there can be no doubt that we are largely indebted to Mr. Gye for including so abstruse a work as "Tannhäuser" in his scheme of the season.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

THE principal feature of the concert on the 1st ult. was the first appearance of the Russian pianist Rubinstein, after an absence of many years caused, as it has been freely stated in the interval, by the coldness with which he was received on his last visit to England. We can scarcely imagine that he will have any reason to complain of the welcome given to him on the present occasion, for the applause with which he was greeted completely silenced the few dissentients who believed that his marvellous powers were not always tempered by that judgment which separates the intellectual exponent of art from the miraculous worker of wonders. We regret that his Concerto in E flat, which he performed, is the latest, for it shows that the rhapsodical style exhibited in his former works has deepened beyond hope of cure. The first movement is utterly without interest, and the Finale has so common-place a theme that the attention is solely centred upon the dazzlingly brilliant passages with which it is dressed up. The Andante has some melodious phrases; and, at least by contrast, seemed to possess a musical value; but vociferous marks of approbation were accorded indiscriminately throughout the Concerto, and judging from the demeanour of the listeners, it would seem as if one of the greatest works in art had been presented to them. To pass from the composition to the composer, we may say that Herr Rubinstein's grasp of the instrument and command of tone were displayed so advantageously throughout his rendering of the Concerto that it took the whole of the time elapsing between the parts of the concert to cool down the enthusiasm of the audience sufficiently to appreciate the less demonstrative beauties of Beethoven's Symphony in A, (No. 7), with which the second part commenced. We can remember the time when the classical feeling which ruled the counsels of the Philharmonic Society would have prevented the introduction of such showy, pretentious, and shallow music as this Concerto; but modern Germany has invaded this country, for better or worse; and as we are destined therefore to listen to the good, bad, and indifferent works which the invaders bring us, we can only express a hope that the difficulties of Herr Rubinstein's most recent importation are so stupendous that nobody but the composer will dare to grapple with them before a public audience. As if to prove to us that all styles are equally easy to him, the great pianist played, with a calm and artistic feeling, a theme of Haydn's, with variations; and followed this by a rendering of Beethoven's "Waldstein" Sonata, which, if not according with the reading of those who modestly fancied that they understood the true meaning of this composer's works, at least evidenced his right to be accepted as one of the greatest executive artists of the day. The vocalist at this concert was Miss Catherine Penna, who sang with much grace and refinement two expressive songs by Herr Rubinstein. The programme of the fourth concert, on the 15th ult., included Bach's "Suite" in B minor, and Mendelssohn's "Scotch Symphony," the solo pianist being Herr Bärth, who created a marked effect by his performance of Henselt's Concerto in F minor.

BACH'S MASS IN B MINOR.

THE earnest thanks of all artists are due to Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, and those associated with him in the presentation of Bach's greatest work at St. James's Hall, on the 26th April. That a composition of such magnitude and extreme difficulty should be undertaken chiefly by amateurs is a proof of the growing interest in the highest class of music amongst those who really love the art for its own sake; and we are pleased to record the unexampled success of the Mass with the general audience, not only because we accept it as a sign of the increasing appreciation of Bach's music, but because we hope that it may stimulate this fine body of choristers to attempt some other of the many works of the great masters which have unfortunately been suffered to fall into neglect. Although Mr. John Hullah and Mr. Henry Leslie have given portions of the B minor Mass at the concerts under their direction, the performance of the entire composition, for the first time in this country, was reserved for the forces collected together by the zeal and energy of Mr. Goldschmidt, who—assisted by his no less enthusiastic partner, Madame Lind-Goldschmidt—has thrown a heart into the work which could scarcely fail to produce the grandest results. Musical students have of course for years been acquainted with the power and sublimity of what is known as "Die Hohe Messe;" but those who have only formed acquaintance with Bach's sacred music by his two settings of the "Passion," which have recently been brought prominently before an English audience, must have been deeply impressed with the breadth and development of the movements of this Mass, as well as the marvellous contrapuntal writing throughout, which, although so intricately woven in as to require the utmost caution from each executant, appeals to the listener with an effect quite as overwhelming, in its quiet power, as that produced by the massive grandeur of Handel's choruses, the independent orchestral writing of Bach, indeed, forming a feature in his choral pieces, which prevents any comparison with similar works of his great contemporary. To all conversant with Bach's score it was a matter of great disappointment to hear the important passages for three trumpets in the "Gloria" performed by clarinets; but, as on the modern trumpets, we are told the parts are unplayable, we may fairly presume that the best authorities have been consulted on the matter. Seeing, however, that the horn obbligato to the "Quoniam" (so finely played by Mr. Wendland), although written for the Corno da Caccia, was executed on the valve horn, it becomes a question whether some near approach to the tone of the trumpets could not have been thought of in the "Gloria;" for certainly the clear, ringing soprano passages intended by the composer were but poorly represented by the comparatively dull notes of the clarinets. Modern orchestras have certainly lost the Oboe d'Amore, and Mr. Clinton's beautiful tone on the clarinet, in the contralto solo, "Qui sedes," almost reconciled us to the change of instrument; but supposing that Bach's music should find such an acceptance with an English public as to warrant the frequent performance of his works, it becomes a question whether a resuscitation both of the Oboe d'Amore and the Viol da Gamba would not be advisable.

In the conception of this great Mass, Bach was doubtless untrammelled by the thought of its applicability for use in service, and the movements are consequently expanded far beyond those to be found in his compositions especially written for the Church. As specimens of the varied manner in which he could treat the several portions of the Mass when thus unfettered, we may especially mention the "Kyrie" and "Crucifixus" (the latter constructed upon what is termed a "ground bass"), both of which are remarkable, not only as abstract musical creations, but for the earnest expression of the words; whilst the "Gloria" and "Sanctus" have a breadth and grandeur, both in the choral and orchestral writing, which, in spite of the absence of those "additional instruments" without which the works of Handel are pronounced "feeble," can so stir the feelings of a mixed audience as to make us wonder how such works could have been sealed to the multitude, whilst the love for those of the composer of the "Messiah" has gradually deepened into a worship.

We are absolved from the necessity of giving any detailed criticism upon the Mass, as an analysis of the work occupies a prominent place in our present number; and we have therefore only to record that in every respect the performance was worthy of the occasion. The chorus-singing astonished all who were aware of the excessive difficulties to be overcome, for not only was it evident that the passages had been diligently studied to ensure accuracy; but the gradations of tone throughout proved that effect as well as precision had been considered essential before presenting the Mass in public. The solos were entrusted to Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Madame Patey, Mr. Cummings, and Signor Federici, and it is scarcely necessary to say that, although in a musical point of view, (with the exception of the air already alluded to, "Qui sedes,") they were the least interesting portions of the work, their execution was satisfactory in the highest degree. All praise too must be given to the orchestra, which was most efficient in every department, special mention being also demanded for the obbligato playing of Herr Straus (violin), and Mr. Svendsen (flute). The work was conducted by Mr. Otto Goldschmidt with that skill and judgment which might be expected from so accomplished an artist, and with that minute attention to every point of the score, which showed how reverently he had prepared himself for his arduous task. At the repetition performance, on the 8th ult., Signor Federici was unfortunately too ill to sing, and his place was ably supplied, at a short notice, by Mr. Kempton, of St. Paul's Cathedral, who was warmly and deservedly applauded in the "Quoniam." The Hall was crowded in every part; and at the end of the Mass Herr Goldschmidt received quite an ovation.

LONDON GREGORIAN CHORAL ASSOCIATION.

THE fourth Festival Service of this Association was held in St. Paul's Cathedral, on Thursday, the 18th ult. The object of this Society, as will be inferred from its title, is the promotion and cultivation in our churches of Gregorian music; and it is undeniable that if anything is likely to render the old ecclesiastical melodies popular, it is the hearing them under such favourable conditions as were presented at St. Paul's. The choir numbered some 1200 voices, selected from about seventy church choirs, besides two hundred of the clergy; and in addition to the organ, which was under the experienced hands of Mr. C. Warwick Jordan, there was an orchestra comprising stringed, wood, and brass instruments. As these were used not for independent accompaniments, but to support the voices, they were dispersed among the choristers, instead of being grouped together. The music sung at the festival consisted of a Processional hymn, "Saviour, blessed Saviour," the music by the Rev. S. S. Greatheed, the versicles and responses to an adaptation in Messrs. Doran and Nottingham's "Choir Directory of Plain Song," the psalms to Gregorian Tones, the "Magnificat" to the Peregrine Tone with Bach's harmonies, the "Nunc Dimittis" to the fourth Tone, first ending, Dr. Stainer's anthem, "What are these that are arrayed," and two other hymns to old church melodies. The precentor was the Rev. Thomas Helmore. The present is not the place to enter into any discussion of the relative merits of Gregorian and Anglican music in our services; but it may be said that even those who would be the most opposed to the universal introduction of the former, could not fail to be impressed with its simple grandeur, when heard from such a body of voices as that assembled in St. Paul's cathedral on this evening. The effect of the unison singing in the psalms and in the processional hymn was truly magnificent. With regard to the orchestra, the strings and the wood, as might have been expected, could not be heard at all against the mass of voices, but the rich tone of the brass instruments, in unison with the tenor and bass, was extremely telling. It will be readily imagined that it was no easy task to keep so large a body of singers well together, especially as from their position—they completely filled the whole length of the choir up to the altar—it would be quite impossible for the larger number of them to see a conductor standing at the lectern. This difficulty was to a considerable extent met by placing assistant conductors half way up the choir to beat the time; and though in one or two places a slight unsteadiness was noticeable, the singing in general was remarkable for its precision. The sermon was preached by Canon Gregory, and among those present in the congregation were Earl Beauchamp, the President of the Association, the Earl and Countess of Bective, Lord Nelson, and Lord Henry Scott, M.P.

HERR RUBINSTEIN'S RECITALS.

THE visit of Herr Rubinstein to this country, after an absence of several years, has most undoubtedly been the event of the musical season. No such excitement has been produced within our recollection by the performances of any artist in London, as by those of this great pianist. He has already given four recitals at St. James's Hall, and a fifth and last is announced to take place on May 29th, after our going to press. The programmes of the recitals are worth giving, as showing the versatility of Herr Rubinstein, and his complete command of every style of playing.

FIRST RECITAL, May 3.—Preludes and Fugues, J. S. Bach; Rondo in A minor, Mozart; Gigue in A major, Handel; Sonata in F minor, Op. 57, Beethoven; Kreisleriana, Schumann; Sonata in B flat minor, Chopin; Etudes, Chopin; Miniatures, Caprice, Barcarolle, and Valse Caprice, Rubinstein.

SECOND RECITAL, May 10.—Variations, Handel; Sonata in E, Op. 109, Beethoven; Etudes Symphoniques, Schumann; Momens Musicales, Schubert; Scherzo à Capriccio, Mendelssohn; Nocturne, Field; Polacca, Weber; Preludes, Ballades and Etudes, Chopin; Leonore, 5th Barcarolle, and Tarantelle, Rubinstein.

THIRD RECITAL, May 16.—Fantasia, Op. 15, Schubert; Sonata (Moonlight), Beethoven; Variations Sérieuses, Mendelssohn; Nocturnes and Polonaises, Chopin; Carnaval, Schumann; Suite, Romance, and Etudes, Rubinstein.

FOURTH RECITAL, May 25.—Preludes and Fugue, Rubinstein; Sonata in A flat, Weber; "Warum," "Vogel als Prophet," "Abends," and "Traumeswirren," Schumann; Sonata in C minor, Op. 111, Beethoven; Nocturne, Field; Etude, Thalberg; "Chanson d'Amour," and "Si oiseau j'étais," Henselt; Nocturne, Mazurka, Valse, and Etudes, Chopin; Barcarolle and "Erl-König," Schubert-Liszt; Rhapsodie Hongroise, Liszt.

It is almost impossible to convey in words to those who have not heard it, any idea of Rubinstein's truly astounding playing. His execution is enormous, and under his fingers the greatest difficulties seem like mere child's-play. But it is not his almost unequalled command of the key-board which rivets the attention and enlists the sympathies of his audiences, but the wonderful depth of his expression. His touch combines the extremes of power and delicacy; his fortissimo, while most sonorous, is free from the least trace of thumping, while in more tender passages, his cantabile is most exquisite. In nothing is he so great as in the delivery of a simple melody; in this his style is so absolutely unaffected and so full of charm and feeling that it goes straight to the heart of the hearer. Such playing as that of Mozart's Rondo and the slower numbers of Schumann's "Kreisleriana" at the first recital, or of the first movement of the "Moonlight" Sonata at the third, will not soon be forgotten by those who were present. On the other hand, it must be confessed that there is one drawback to the perfect enjoyment of his performances. As will be inferred from what we have said, Rubinstein is an impulsive player, and therefore to some extent unequal. At times he appears to let himself be fairly carried away by his music, and to lose all self-control. Hence his Allegros are too often hurried into Prestos; and, though his execution is equal to all the demands made upon it, the music suffers in consequence.

We are inclined to think Rubinstein greatest of all in his rendering of Chopin. The dreamy and romantic music of the Polish composer finds in him a most congenial exponent, and the exquisite delicacy with which what have been called Chopin's "filagree-work passages" are given is unsurpassable.

Rubinstein's smaller compositions for the piano, several of which, it will be seen, have been introduced at his recitals, are in general much more interesting and enjoyable than his larger works. That he is a man of considerable inventive power, is indisputable; his failing seems to be in the handling of the more elaborate musical forms. This want of technical mastery is less apparent in pieces of smaller dimensions, and in such trifles as the "Miniatures," "Caprices," &c., he is thoroughly successful.

In addition to his recitals, Herr Rubinstein has also been heard in the Concert given by M. Wieniawski at St. James's Hall on the 20th ult. The performance on that occasion by these two great artists of Beethoven's celebrated "Kreutzer" sonata was the most magnificent within our recollection, alike in the vigour and passion of the Allegros, and in the exquisite taste and delicacy with which the well-known variations were given. Herr Rubinstein was in this work heard at his best, and was most admirably seconded by M. Wieniawski, who appears to be playing more finely than ever. The great pianist also gave a selection of his own short pieces, all of which had been previously heard at his recitals. The Concert also included Haydn's quartett in E, (Op. 77, No. 2), various solos excellently played by the Concert-giver, and vocal music by Mdlle. Thekla Friedländer.

The continental engagements of Herr Rubinstein compel him to leave this country early in the present month. It is to be hoped that the extraordinary success which he has met with now will induce him soon to repeat his visit.

MR. BARNBY had the honour of an interview with His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales at Marlborough House, on Wednesday, the 24th ult., when the Prince was pleased to accept a copy of Mr. Barnby's part-song, "Welcome," performed at the recent congratulatory concert to His Royal Highness at the Albert Hall.

THE annual appeal of Miss Agnes Zimmermann to the lovers of Chamber-music met with a liberal response at St. James's Hall on the 4th ult., when a programme more than usually representing the modern German school was provided. Brahms's Quartett in C minor (Op. 60), which commenced the concert, is a work that grows upon acquaintance, much of the elaborate writing which cannot be estimated at its true worth on a first hearing being more clearly defined as the passages become familiar, although the tendency to diffuseness, so characteristic of all this composer's works will no doubt prevent its becoming a "popular" concert-piece. One of the most interesting features in the selection was Miss Zimmermann's "Suite de Pièces Modernes," containing "Fantaisie," "Mazourka," "Scherzo" and "Marche." This group of movements reflects the composer's refined and poetical style to the utmost advantage, the "Mazourka," especially, being based on so fascinating a subject as to charm all hearers, and to elicit a burst of applause, which might have been fairly accepted as an encore; Miss Zimmermann's performance of this "Suite" exhibited to perfection her elastic and sympathetic touch, and the reception of the composition was such as to leave little doubt that it will not much longer remain in manuscript. Schubert's Fantaisie (Op. 159) for pianoforte and violin, was finely played by Miss Zimmermann and Herr Straus; and the Concert concluded with Mozart's Quartett in E flat, for pianoforte, violin, viola and violoncello, the Concert-giver again displaying that quiet artistic power which is doubly refreshing after the violent contrasts of style to which we have been lately subjected. The instrumentalists were Messrs. Straus, (violin), Zerbini (viola), and Daubert (violoncello); and the vocalists, Mdlle. S. Löwe and Herr Werrenrath, who produced a marked effect in all their solos.

THE Pianoforte Recitals of Mr. E. H. Thorne, at Willis's Rooms, have been amongst the most enjoyable of the Chamber Concerts during the past month. The programmes were models of classical taste; and the versatility of Mr. Thorne's powers have been most advantageously displayed before highly appreciative audiences. The Concert-giver was assisted by Mr. Duncan Hume (pianoforte), Mr. Henry Holmes (violin), and Signor Pezze (violoncello). The last of the three recitals was announced for the 29th ult.

MR. CHARLES HARFORD LLOYD has been appointed Organist of Gloucester Cathedral, in place of the late Dr. S. S. Wesley.

MR. A. AUSTIN'S Annual Concert took place at St. James's Hall on the 17th ult. The artists were Mdme. Marie Roze, Miss Wilhelmine Gips, Mdme. Patey, Mr. E. Lloyd, M. Levilly, Mr. Santley, Miss Clinton Fynes (piano), and M. Wieniawski (violin), Mr. Sims Reeves being absent from indisposition. The programme was diversified by several glees, &c., contributed by The Standard Quartett. The audience was large and enthusiastic, and encores were frequent.

MDME. LIEBE KONSS gave an entertainment at the City of London College on the 4th ult. In the first part, "Sing, sweet bird," well sung by Mdme. Olive Clare, and the flute solo, artistically rendered by Mr. Gittens, were encored, and Miss Edith Goldsbro', R.A.M., gave two pianoforte solos with much taste. A comic operetta, in which the characters were well sustained by Mdme. Konss, and Messrs. Monkton and Baylis, formed the second part of the programme.

GOUNOD'S opera "Philémon et Baucis," originally produced in 1860, has been revived in Paris at the Opera Comique, with Mdlle. Marguerite Chapuy in the principal character.

THE first Concert of the Welsh Choral Union, under the able direction of Mr. John Thomas, was given on the 11th ult., in the new concert-room of the Royal Academy of Music (by permission of the Committee of Management) before an appreciative audience. The programme contained an excellent selection of vocal solos and choral pieces, all of which were most successfully rendered. A band of harps was, as usual, a feature in the Concert.

THE National Training School of Music was officially opened at noon, on Wednesday, the 17th ult., by the Duke of Edinburgh and the Duke of Connaught. The Committee of Management and the Professors, including Sir Julius Benedict, Mr. Arthur Sullivan, Signor Vianesi, and Herr Pauer, received their Royal Highnesses. Fifty scholars presented themselves, and were formally apportioned off to different professors—members of the teaching staff.

WE have much pleasure in stating that Dr. Stainer has returned from abroad thoroughly restored to health.

AN interesting lecture upon "Ancient National Music" (in connection with the Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts) was given on Thursday evening, the 18th ult., by Mr. Brinley Richards, in the new concert room of the Royal Academy of Music (by kind permission of the Committe of Management), Lord Clarence Paget, K.C.B., in the chair. The lecturer demonstrated that music was by no means one universal language. He then entered into the question of how far harmony was known to the ancient Egyptian, Hebrew, and Celtic nations. He said that Scotch and Irish music was not Pentatonic, as stated by Dr. Burney, and that Welsh music was Diatonic. Several drawings (by Mr. Frederick Chester) of Egyptian, Scotch, Irish, and Welsh instruments were exhibited, as were also some sketches (presented by Mr. Edward Gilbertson) of the "Dichord," the most ancient stringed instrument with a neck; of a harp 3,000 years old, found in a tomb at Thebes; and of a Chinese "Ching" (Jubal's Organ). Miss Mary Davies and Miss Lizzie Evans greatly assisted the lecturer by their admirable vocal illustrations. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Richards terminated the proceedings.

SOPHOCLES' tragedy of "Œdipus at Colonos," with Mendelssohn's music, will be performed at the Crystal Palace, for the first time on the English stage, early this month.

VERDI'S "Aïda" is announced to be produced for the first time in England at the Royal Italian Opera during the present month.

THE following paragraph appears in the Whitehall Review, a new and apparently ably-conducted Journal, the first number of which was issued on the 20th ult.—"It is remarkable that late Christian Hymnology in the United States strongly partakes of the militant element, to which hitherto Christianity has been supposed to be repugnant. The most popular hymns in the States now are, however, 'Hold the Fort,' 'Soldiers of the Cross,' 'Fight with Jesus,' 'Strike out for God,' 'Aim straight and true!' 'The Sword, the Sword of the Spirit,' 'Fight the Good Fight of Faith,' 'Down with their Walls,—Fight on!' 'Christian, up, and hew them hip and thigh!' &c., &c. All this certainly proves the existence of a military instinct, if not a religious one."

THE Birmingham papers speak in the warmest terms of the performances of the Carl Rosa Opera Company. Gounod's "Faust" has been a great success at the Theatre Royal, Mdlle. Torriani having created a marked effect in the character of Marguerite, and Miss Josephine Yorke being highly spoken of in the part of Siebel. Mr. Packard, too, as Faust, is received with the utmost favour; and we confidently look forward to his re-appearance in London during the coming Autumn, when it is understood that we are again to have operas in English, under the able management of Mr. Carl Rosa.

THE Anniversary meeting of the London Society for teaching the Blind to read was held at Willis's Rooms on the 18th ult., when an excellent programme of vocal and instrumental music was performed by the pupils, under the able direction of the Society's conductor, Mr. Edwin Barnes. The Right Hon. Lord Aberdare was in the chair; and a number of noblemen were on the platform.

ON the 1st ult., at Royston, died Thomas Pickering, a man of remarkable literary and musical attainments; but—in consequence of his contributions to the press being published anonymously, and his artistic activity being confined to the neighbourhood in which he had so long resided—but little known to the general public. He was one of the three who founded the Royston Mechanics' Institute, where he was instrumental in securing many excellent lecturers; Mr. Charles Cowden Clarke delivering his maiden lecture there. He also formed classes for the study of music, and was President and Conductor of the Royston Choral Society. He had a large circle of friends amongst those eminent in music, but most of these—William Horsley, Vincent Novello, and Charles Edward Horsley, for instance—have passed away before him. The deceased was 80 years of age, having been born in London on the 4th July, 1796, the anniversary, as he often said, of the declaration of American independence. He was buried at Royston Cemetery, the funeral being attended by many sorrowing friends, in addition to his nearest relatives.

A MEETING on the Musical and Dramatic Copyright Question was held at St. James's small Hall, on Thursday afternoon, the 4th ult., Dr. Baxter Langley being in the chair. The meeting was called by Messrs. Gordon and Jennings, who proposed to establish a Protection Society which shall provide artists with the means of ascertaining whether they may or may not sing any song or musical piece they may select for performance. The meeting mainly consisted of artists from the music halls, but letters were read from several vocalists and musicians of eminence, expressing their sympathy with the meeting, and regretting their inability to be present. The Chairman in opening the proceedings condemned the course of action taken by Mr. Harry Wall, which was, he said, that of the common informer. He considered that the proposition of Messrs. Gordon and Jennings, so far as it went, was well adapted to meet the present condition of things. His own opinion was that, as a principle of free trade, it was to the interest of author, publisher and vocalist alike that a song should be sung as frequently as possible.

The following resolutions were passed unanimously:—

"That this Meeting protests against the prosecutions lately instituted for infringement of copyright by Mr. H. Wall, especially as they have not been preceded by any notice or warning; and considers the most effectual way of so doing will be to establish an Office, where all information upon Copyrights can be obtained, and so almost prevent the possibility of unintentional infringement."

"That this Meeting expresses its regret that any respectable musical firm should have permitted infringements (in many cases unintentionally committed) to continue, obviously for the purpose of recovering penalties, instead of giving notice of such infringements immediately the facts are brought to their knowledge."

"That in the opinion of this Meeting the projected Office of 'The Vocal and Dramatic Artists' Protection Society,' proposed by Messrs. Gordon and Jennings, will meet all the requirements set forth in the first Resolution, and is worthy of the support of all persons connected with the profession, and interested in the development of Musical Art."

After a vote of thanks to the Chairman, and to Messrs. Moore and Burgess, for allowing the use of the Hall gratuitously, the meeting terminated.

THE Oratorio Society of New York, in conjunction with Mr. Theodore Thomas's Orchestra, recently performed Schumann's "Paradise and the Peri," at Steinway Hall.

THE annual report of the Choir Benevolent Fund has recently been issued, and we are glad to see that during its career of 25 years the Fund has been steadily increasing its advantages. The committee were last year in a position to make a grant of ten guineas each to all the surviving widows of deceased members, and have this year been again enabled to make a similar grant. This is a matter for congratulation to those who have the administration of the Society's affairs. The object of the Fund is worthy of our warmest advocacy, and we trust that the appeal of the committee to "all who sympathise with Cathedral music and Cathedral musicians" will not pass unnoticed.

THE members of the Eccleston Choral Society gave their first concert on the 27th of April. The programme consisted of J. J. Haite's Cantata, "Abraham's Sacrifice," and a selection from the works of Handel, Mendelssohn, and other composers. The principal vocalists were Miss Drake, Miss Brown, Mr. Whillier, Mr. Grimsdick, and Mr. Down. Mr. Liddell presided at the pianoforte, Miss Fanny Parnham at the harmonium, Mr. J. Wood was leader of the band, and Mr. W. E. Mote conducted.

THE Holloway Choral and Orchestral Society gave a successful performance of Handel's "Acis and Galatea" at Holloway Hall, on Monday the 1st ult. The solo singers were Mr. Dudley Thomas, Miss Marian Pocklington, Mr. Westlake, and Mr. T. Tremere, who was encored in "O ruddier than the cherry." The most effective of the choral numbers were "Wretched lovers," and "Mourn all ye Muses." Miss A. Webster presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. H. Spencer, Jun., conducted.

THE annual performance of the "Messiah," for the benefit of the Royal Society of Musicians, was given on the 5th ult. at St. James's Hall, the principal vocalists being Mdme. Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Catherine Penna, Miss Severn, Messrs. W. H. Cummings, H. Guy, Wadmore, and Lewis Thomas. Mr. W. G. Cusins, being, by command, engaged at a concert at Windsor, his place as conductor was ably filled by Mr. Arthur Sullivan.

AT the funeral of the late Dr. Wesley, which took place at the Old Cemetery, Exeter, in addition to the relatives and personal friends of the deceased, a large number of the local clergy, Mr. A. Angel, organist of Exeter Cathedral, many of the lay Vicars and choristers, and several of the organists at parish churches and Nonconformist places of worship were present. The pall-bearers were G. B. Arnold, Mus. Doc., organist of Winchester Cathedral; James Russell, Mus. Doc., Topsham; F. E. Gladstone, Mus. Bac.; Minto Pyne, of Bath, and T. K. Pyne, organist of the Abbey Church, Bath. It is proposed to place a tablet in Exeter Cathedral as a memorial to Dr. Wesley, and Mr. Sims Reeves has, we understand, contributed £5 towards its cost.

THE members of the voluntary choir of Christ Church, Newgate-street, have presented Miss Amy Cooper with a handsome gold locket, as a token of their great satisfaction with her services at the organ during her father's late serious illness. Mr. J. T. Salmon, honorary secretary of the choir, with very kindly words, placed the locket in Miss Cooper's hands, and the gift was acknowledged both by Mr. and Miss Cooper, who expressed their heartfelt thanks for the sympathy thus evinced.

REVIEWS.

NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

Third Mass in D. Composed by J. N. Hummel; edited, and the pianoforte accompaniment arranged by Berthold Tours.

Hummel's Communion Service in D. The English adaptation by the Rev. J. Troutbeck, M.A.

TO THE average of musicians, and even more to the majority of amateurs, the name of Hummel is chiefly associated with pianoforte music, and it is probable that his works in this department of composition will longest survive, and will be those by which hereafter he will be best known. Nevertheless, it is a great mistake to suppose that he was, like Chopin, only a composer for the instrument on which he was in his day so great a virtuoso. Besides his pianoforte works, the catalogue of his compositions given by Fétis in his "Biographie Universelle des Musiciens" comprises eleven pieces of dramatic music, ranging from the ballet and pantomime to the three-act opera, five sacred works—three Masses, a Gradual and an Offertory, an Overture for full orchestra, and three string Quartetts.

Hummel, it will be remembered, was a pupil of Mozart's, and the influence of his master is very plainly to be seen in most of his writings. Not that he was by any means a mere plagiarist; it is only in exceptional cases that we can find an actual reminiscence in his music, but his style throughout is rather that of a modernised and highly polished Mozart than that of an independent genius. In the beautiful artistic finish of his workmanship Hummel may be compared with Mendelssohn, though he had hardly the contrapuntal skill of the latter. They also resemble one another in being great inventors of pianoforte passages, though in this respect Hummel owes more to Dussek than is generally known or acknowledged.

The Masses of Hummel much resemble in their general characteristics the later church compositions of Haydn and Mozart. It would be untrue to call them as a whole works of high inspiration; but it is no less unfair to depreciate them, as some writers have done, by describing them as mere elegant scholastic exercises. If Hummel does not, like Beethoven and Schubert in their Masses, touch the feelings deeply, his sacred music is always dignified and refined, abounding in pleasing, even while not strikingly original melody, and free from that occasional secular tinge which in places mars the effect of some of the finest of Mozart's and Haydn's Masses. His first Mass (in B flat, Op. 77) and his second (in E flat, Op. 80), have long been well known, and may often be heard in Catholic churches in this country. It is a most unaccountable thing that the work now before us, though the full score has been printed for many years, has never until now been published in vocal score, either in this country or on the Continent. This neglect is the more surprising as the Mass in D cannot be considered as in any degree inferior to its two predecessors.

Like Cherubini's great Mass in the same key, the present work commences with a "Kyrie" in D minor. Hummel avoids the error, so common with many of his countrymen, of writing a lively, nay, even a jovial, movement, for this part of the Mass. Such "Kyries" as those in Haydn's first and second Masses, delightful though they are as music, cannot be regarded by the thoughtful hearer as otherwise than utterly out of keeping with the spirit of the text. In the present piece, on the contrary, the character is wholly devotional. The music is very melodious, and (so far as can be judged from the indications of the scoring given in the pianoforte accompaniment) charmingly instrumented. The imitative passages at the "Christe" bear some slight resemblance to the middle portion of the "Kyrie" in Haydn's "Imperial" Mass. At the return of the first subject a change from D minor to D major is made with a very happy effect. The whole movement may be reckoned among the best portions of the Mass.

The "Gloria" is, as usual in Masses of extended proportions, divided into three movements. The first of these is a bold and vigorous chorus in D major, of a somewhat conventional style, in which, though we find very little that can be called absolutely new, the ear is charmed by a series of graceful melodies, and by an effective distribution of the vocal and instrumental parts. The symphonies occurring between the phrases of the "Gratias agimus" (pp. 10, 11) with the elegant solos for oboe and clarinet, may be cited as especially pleasing. The second movement of this portion of the work is the "Qui tollis," in B minor. In the majority of Masses solo voices are introduced here, but in the present work no indications of any solo parts are to be found throughout. This is a case of such rare occurrence that we were at first inclined to conjecture that either in this edition or in the full score from which it has been prepared, the word solo might have been accidentally omitted. An examination of the music has convinced us that this is not the case, and that we have here, exceptionally, a Mass written for chorus throughout. The "Qui tollis," though not without occasional suggestions of Haydn's "Esterhazy" Masses, especially of the No. 2 in the "suscipe," is musically superior to the number which precedes it. The choral unison, pianissimo, accompanied by full harmony in the orchestra, forms a prominent feature, which, through a half cadence on A, leads immediately to the following "Quoniam." This piece consists of an introduction, the subjects of which, in accordance with a frequent practice of composers, are taken from the opening of the "Gloria," and of a very excellent and spirited fugue at the "Cum sancto spiritu," which is developed at considerable length, and is wound up by a very brilliant coda.

The "Credo," like the "Gloria," also consists of three movements. The opening (D major) with a solo for the horn, to which the strings con sordini are gradually joined, with the entry of the chorus pianissimo at the eighth bar, is of decided novelty. The voices sing the first sentences in simple chords, accompanied by moving quavers for the strings, and the pianissimo is continued for twenty-nine bars, the first indication of a crescendo being met with at the words "Ante omnia secula." The forte which follows is of only short duration, the very next phrase, "Deum de Deo" being again marked piano: and this piano is maintained, with the exception of two bars forte for the word "descendit" till the close of the movement. The composer's idea evidently is that in confessing the mysteries of the faith a subdued tone is appropriate; and certainly the present is a more effective setting of the text than the lively movements too often associated with the words. The "Et Incarnatus" in B flat is a well written adagio, but less striking than some other parts of the work. One misses in it that ideal tenderness which touches us so deeply in this portion of such Masses, as Haydn's first, third or fourth. The "Et resurrexit" (allegro con spirito, in D major,) on the other hand is excellent and effective throughout, and concludes with another capital fugue to the "Et vitam venturi," the subject of which consists of the descending scale of D from octave to octave. The ceaseless quaver accompaniment for the violins which continues throughout the fugue, would almost seem to have been suggested by the corresponding portion of Haydn's first Mass.

The "Sanctus" of the present Mass is a very good chorus of the orthodox pattern, and which, without a single phrase that can actually be called a reminiscence, sounds curiously familiar throughout. The following "Benedictus" in A major, is one of the most elegant numbers of the work; it is written quite in Mozart's manner, and is accompanied most charmingly by the orchestra, the solo effects for the wind instruments being especially important.

The "Agnus Dei" is of peculiar design; the choral portion is unaccompanied throughout, each sentence of the text being divided by orchestral interludes. The modulations here, especially those on p. 70 of the score, are of a boldness somewhat unusual with Hummel. The concluding "Dona" contains some good fugal writing, but is hardly to be considered one of the best portions of the Mass.

The pianoforte arrangement by Mr. Tours is excellently done; while sufficiently full and rich to embody all the more important features of the score, it is not overcrowded nor of any excessive difficulty. The indication of the chief points of the orchestration is a valuable assistance in forming a correct estimate of the work. We are glad to observe that this is much more common in modern pianoforte arrangements than was formerly the case; it ought to be universally adopted.

The "Communion Service in D" which stands second at the head of this article is, it is perhaps needless to say, the same work which we have just reviewed, with the text of our English Communion Service, adapted to the music in place of the original Latin words. The adaptation has been very skilfully effected by Mr. Troutbeck. The plan of issuing two separate editions of the work, instead of crowding the two texts underneath the same music notes is a most commendable one. Now that this interesting work is published in a cheap and accessible form, it will be worthy of the attention of some of our choral Societies.

ASHDOWN AND PARRY.

Suite de Pièces. Prelude, Sarabande, Gavotte and Musette, Courante, Gigue, for Pianoforte. Composed by Walter Macfarren.

WE have often said that the mould in which a composition is cast will never atone for its innate weakness; but when an artist like Mr. Walter Macfarren throws his ripest thoughts into a classical shape, even when that shape reflects the feeling of a past age, we may be quite certain that the spirit as well as the form of the work is carefully preserved. The "Suite de Pièces" before us is one of the composer's most successful attempts to resuscitate the olden school of writing, and we cannot too warmly recommend it both to pupils and teachers. The opening "Prelude" in D minor, ending with the orthodox major chord, not only forms a fitting introduction to the pieces which follow, but is in itself an exceedingly interesting movement. The "Sarabande," in G minor, is based upon a winning subject, the change into the tonic major, with the flowing accompaniment, and the return, through B flat major, to the original key, being a point which will assuredly charm musical as well as unmusical listeners. The "Gavotte and Musette," forming one movement, according to the model handed down to us, are extremely melodious, the "Musette," especially, having a most tuneful theme, upon a tonic pedal, which leads with much effect to the repetition of the "Gavotte." The "Courante," with its unceasing flow of semiquavers, apart from its attractive character, will form a good study, the left-hand having its fair share of work in the course of the piece. The final movement, in 12-8 rhythm, is a good specimen of the old "Gigue," the vivacity being well sustained to the end. A feeling for this class of music, as well as a hand carefully trained for the instrument, are absolutely indispensable for the due rendering of this "Suite;" but even moderate players will be attracted by the definite character of the themes in each movement, and may rest assured that, should they fail in catching the true spirit of the old dances, they will be better employed in practising so sound a composition than in fagging at the frivolous passages to be found in many of the "Drawing-room pieces" of the day.

DUNCAN DAVISON AND CO.

Britannia, Grand Fantasia, National Airs of England. By R. Andrews.

ALTHOUGH this composition is evidently written chiefly for the display of the digital powers of a pianist, it is unquestionably the work of an experienced and accomplished musician. The airs chosen are "God save the Queen," "Rule Britannia," and "Britons, strike home," the variations to these being exceedingly brilliant and effective. An ingenious point in the piece is where the two themes "God save the Queen" and "Rule Britannia" are made to move simultaneously, the latter forming the bass to the National Anthem, which is put into quadruple time for the purpose. Moscheles, in his "Recollections of Ireland," has adopted a similar device, weaving in three well-known airs together; and these artistic touches just mark the essential difference between the Fantasias of a sound composer and the ephemeral productions of a mere music-maker. We can cordially recommend Mr. Andrews's patriotic composition to those who wish for music that shall please as well as astonish the hearers.

My Lady Sleeps. Serenade. Poetry by Longfellow. Music by Ignace Gibsone.

LONGFELLOW has been of essential service to the composers, the only difficulty with vocalists being that out of the multiplicity of settings of his minor poems it is somewhat perplexing to make a choice. We are certainly beginning to be tired of different treatments of the well-known words, "My lady sleeps;" and should be inclined to believe that in view of the successful manner in which they have already been composed, it is scarcely wise to institute comparisons. Mr. Gibsone's music is extremely simple, but the feeling of the Serenade is well preserved. The idea of making each verse end on the dominant harmony, the symphony leading back to the key-note, is an extremely happy one.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

TALLIS MEMORIAL FUND.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—May I state through your columns, for the information of the subscribers to the above Fund, that the Brass is now fixed by Messrs. Hart, on the East wall of Greenwich Parish Church, within a few feet of the altar-rails where the father of English Church Music lies buried with his wife.

I am, Sir,
Yours truly,
H. WALTER MILLER,
Hon. Sec. to Tallis Memorial Fund.

Richmond Hill, May 12th, 1876.

ALFRED ALLEN'S "GAVOTTE."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—In your reviewer's notice on my "Gavotte Festivale" in last month's "Musical Times," he says: "Should Mr. Allen doubt how this chord ought to be written, let him refer to Beethoven's Sonata in E♭ (Op. 31, No. 3), where in the fifth bar of the first movement, he would be rather surprised, we think, to find F♯ instead of G♭."

Having referred to the bar in question, I find the following progression,—

This progression would coincide with mine, as follows,—

if I had written the E♯ as F♮. As the E♯ or F♮ ascends to F♯, I should like to know why the F♮ is preferable to E♯ as the progression E♯ and F♯ seems to me more natural than F♮ and F♯. Yours truly,

May 4th. ALFRED B. ALLEN.

[The reply to Mr. Allen's question is extremely simple. As the root of the chord is the same, whether it resolve to the triad or the 6-4 on the dominant, the notation should of course be alike in both cases.—THE WRITER OF THE NOTICE.]

"HENNES'S METHOD" AGAIN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

DEAR SIR,—I feel greatly obliged to the indulgence of your reviewer in permitting my rather long epistle about his critique to be printed in full length. I have never misunderstood the tendency and character of your invaluable paper. But, I trust he will kindly allow me to observe that a misprint, or a slip of the pen (like D♭ sharp for major) may and actually does sometimes occur in the best edited English works, printed and edited by Englishmen, and, therefore, similar misprints or slips, when printed abroad, (which is the case with Hennes's Method which was printed at Leipzig, by a firm where there is not a single person, from the compositor to the printer, who understands English) may be readily excused. If my explanation that "pieces with 4, 5, or 6 sharps or flats must be practised as frequently as those in C, or only with 1, 2, or 3 sharps or flats," does not satisfy your indulgent critic, I would be under extreme obligation to him if he would kindly condescend to turn this phrase for me in good plain English.

I am, with great thankfulness, yours very truly,

Maidenhead, May 6, 1876. H. MANNHEIMER.

"WHEN SHOULD 'BENEDICITE' BE SUNG?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—In answer to "Choirmaster" asking on what authority "Benedicite" is often sung in place of "Te Deum" during Lent, there is no real authority for using the one rather than the other. It is an old custom, taking its origin from the fact that in the year 1549 it was ordered to be used in place of "Te Deum" during Lent. In 1552 this order was annulled, and it was left to the discretion of the Minister to sing either one or the other. It may be interesting to your correspondent to know that it is taken from the Greek addition to the 3rd chapter of Daniel, and is of course a paraphrastical exposition of the 148th psalm; though no one would hesitate to grant the suitability of the hymn for festival use, yet it expresses less exalted and jubilant adoration than the "Te Deum," and of the two is therefore more suitable for Lent. In the Sarum Breviary, the "Te Deum" was ordered to be omitted in Advent, and from Septuagesima to Easter, and also in the week of Pentecost. I quite agree with "Choirmaster" that it would be very desirable to utilise it more often; and though I think few of us would like on Sundays to lose the noble strains of the "Te Deum," yet (especially in Cathedrals and Churches where daily service is sung) it would be a great relief to many to vary it occasionally by the "Benedicite." I may add that since I have been connected with Cathedrals I have never yet heard the "Benedicite" sung within their walls.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

HERBERT A. RICHINGS.

A FESTIVAL ANTHEM,

BY

HUMPHREY J. STARK, MUS. BAC., OXON.

Octavo, 4d. net.

"This is a really good specimen of modern church music, being throughout well written, and in point of ideas above the average of merit. . . . "Has many points of interest."—Monthly Musical Record.

"There is a freedom of style in this Anthem which at first sight is undoubtedly taking. The words of each song being printed upon the top line will be found of great service to the performer in giving proper expression to the songs.

BACH'S MASS IN B MINOR.

THE next number, "Domine Deus," a duet in G major, for soprano and tenor, is more interesting than the solo pieces which have preceded it. The orchestration is of much novelty, the accompaniments being for a flute solo, the two violins and viola con sordini, and the basses pizzicato throughout. The employment of the pizzicato, common enough in our days, was much more rare in the time of Bach and Handel; it is only very occasionally to be found in their scores. Twice in this duet we find a semibreve written on the bass line; as it is of course impossible that it could have been sustained without the bow, the probability is that it was held by the organ—a probability strengthened by the "Tasto solo" written on each occasion over the note; for this term could have no reference to a stringed instrument. The voice parts are almost throughout the duet written either in sixths and tenths or in passages of imitation, with a florid polyphonic accompaniment such as is to be found only in Bach. No quotation of any reasonable length would be of service in giving a fair idea of this interesting, though rather lengthy, movement, for which readers must be referred to the work itself. The duet closes, not in G, but in B minor, thus leading immediately into the chorus, "Qui tollis," which is in that key. This extremely fine movement, the themes of which are taken, as already mentioned, from one of the Church Cantatas, is remarkable for the boldness of its harmonies, and the great prevalence of suspensions and passing dissonances. The first bars (the voices and bass only are quoted) will show the character of the movement.

The violins and viola fill up the harmony, not in unison with the voices, but with quite independent parts. At the seventh bar, the first flute enters with a new figure—freely imitated by the second flute in the next bar; and as the voices and strings are all pursuing their separate course, the greater portion of this chorus is written in ten real parts; and the extraordinary thing is that, nevertheless, the effect, in spite of all the passing discords, is perfectly clear. Like the last movement, the present leads directly into the next number.

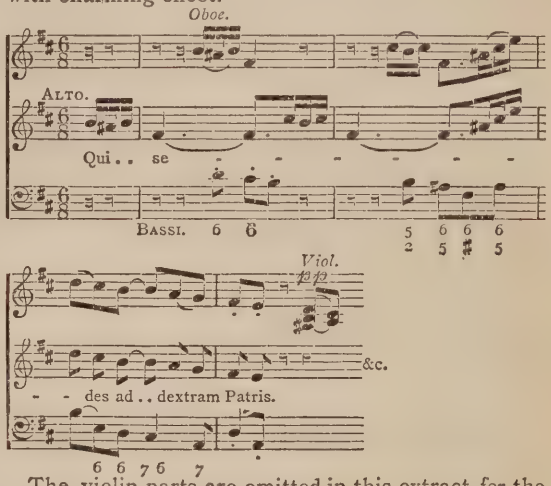
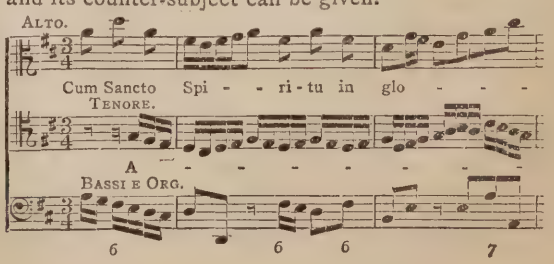
"Qui sedes" is an alto air, in B minor, accompanied by string quartett and an oboe d'amore obbligato. This is one of the most beautiful solos in the work, of a plaintive and devotional expression, the oboe alternately accompanying and answering the voice with charming effect.

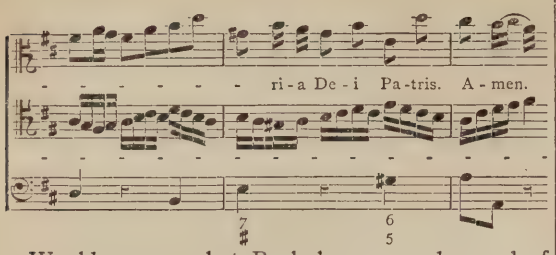


The violin parts are omitted in this extract, for the sake of clearness; they fill up in quavers the harmonies indicated by the figured bass. The style of the opening is maintained throughout the air, which abounds in fine sequences and points of imitation.

The following movement—the bass air, "Quoniam tu solus"—is in strong contrast to its predecessor. Musically, it is one of the weakest numbers of the Mass; its chief interest lies in its peculiar accompaniment, which is for one horn, two bassoons, and the "continuo." The horn part is certainly one of the most difficult ever written for that instrument; and the fact that all the acuter instruments of the orchestra are suppressed gives a very singular tone-colour to the song. It is very long, and somewhat tedious in performance. Like several other pieces, it leads without interruption to the following movement.

The "Cum Sancto Spiritu," which forms the finale of the "Gloria," is not only the greatest inspiration we have yet met with in the Mass, but also, from a technical point of view, one of the most stupendous pieces of music ever written. It consists of a very brilliant introduction, and a magnificent fugue in five parts. From the former, it is impossible to make any adequate extract; but the theme of the fugue and its counter-subject can be given.





Would any one but Bach have ever dreamed of writing a choral fugue on such subjects as these? The effect when all five voices are in "full swing" is enormous, while the episodes, which are frequent in the course of the music, contribute much to heighten the interest. Only one short, but magnificent, progression can be quoted.

In addition to what is here given, the two flutes and two oboes have independent parts, while trumpets and drums strike the first crotchet of each bar. A brilliant peroration, ending quite abruptly, as is frequently the case with Bach's choruses, concludes this section of the Mass.

It would appear almost impossible to any one who knows merely the first part of the present Mass to imagine that Bach could surpass it; it is nevertheless true that certain parts of the "Credo," which we now reach in the course of our analysis, are even more stupendous in their effect, as well as more astonishing in their technical mastery of musical resources, than anything that has preceded them. It was mentioned last month that there is every reason to believe that the latter half of the Mass was written at a later date than the first; the composer would seem to have felt that he had produced a masterpiece, and to have completed it simply from love of his art. We know that, apart altogether from any question of its length or difficulty, the portion of the work from the "Credo" to the end was not available in Bach's own church, neither was a performance in any of the Catholic churches at all probable. Bach doubtless wrote, as did Schubert nearly a century later, because his genius impelled him to do so, and without the slightest expectation of ever hearing the effect of the elaborate combinations which he was putting on paper.

Like the "Gloria," the "Credo" consists of eight movements. It commences with a very striking chorus, differing altogether in style from anything as yet met with in the Mass. This "Credo in unum Deum" is a fugue in seven real parts, with a free counterpoint for the Continuo throughout. It is evidently founded upon an old Ecclesiastical Canto fermo, and is written in what is called the "Mixolydian" mode, being in the key of A without a G sharp, though this note frequently occurs as an accidental. The theme of the chorus is the following :—

At the last bar of this quotation the bass takes up the answer, being followed by the alto, and later by the first and second trebles. When all the voices have been introduced, the first and second violins are added, still in strict fugue, and from this point to the end of the chorus—in all 49 bars—we find some most masterly eight-part writing, the instrumental bass continuing its stately progression of crotchets without intermission to the close. A plagal cadence, with a pause upon the last note, leads immediately into the following number, "Patrem omnipotentem."

This chorus is strongly contrasted in style with the preceding. It is a fugue with only four voice parts (the two trebles singing in unison), but it is much less strict in style than the last movement. It might, indeed, almost be called a fugue with free vocal and instrumental accompaniments. This will appear from the opening bars :—

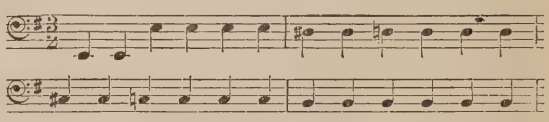
In this extract, we are met by the old difficulty of condensing any of Bach's scores on a few staves. The above quotation is incomplete, as there should also have been given a violin figure of crotchets accompanying the first bars, similar to the oboe passages which will be seen in the latter half of the extract. The subject of the fugue, it is almost superfluous to point out, is announced by the bass voices. Like the last chorus, the present commences in the key of A; the sequel of the music, however, shows us that the key of the movement is really D. Bach, no doubt, began with the dominant for the sake of a closer connection with the preceding number. A fine effect, similar to that already noticed in the "Gratias," is met with in the middle of this chorus, where a solo trumpet gives out the theme in the upper octave high above everything else. The whole piece has a wonderful swing and freedom about it, and the introduction of the three trumpets and drums gives great brilliance to its close.

A long but interesting duet for treble and alto in G major, "Et in unum Dominum," succeeds, which is accompanied by strings and two oboi d'amore; these latter instruments, however, instead of having, as usual with Bach, independent parts, simply double the first and second violins in the symphonies, and occasionally also in the accompaniments to the voice parts. An effect of especial beauty should be noted toward the close of this duet in the modulation to G minor, at the words "Qui propter nos homines, et propter nostram salutem." The appropriateness of the change of mode at the reference to the Incarnation and Passion will be obvious at once. In this key the voice parts close; but as the succeeding movement is in B minor, Bach returns in the final symphony to G major, to avoid too harsh a sequence of keys.

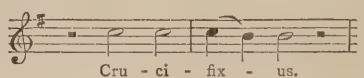
The three numbers which come next in order, all choral, surpass anything which has yet been met with in the Mass. In them Bach rises to a height of which it is difficult either by description or quotation to give any adequate idea. The "Et incarnatus" (B minor, $\frac{3}{4}$) is for five voice parts, accompanied only by the first and second violins, which until the fifth bar from the end play in unison, and by the continuo. A figure in which dissonances on the accented quavers, quite in the modern style, form an important feature is maintained throughout the movement, the voices entering successively in free imitation. The first six bars will give an idea of the character of the music.

To save space the words "et incarnatus est" are omitted. The great rarity of marks of expression in Bach's scores is worth noting here. It is almost self-evident that this passage should be given piano, but not the least indication of this is to be found in the music. Even where a piano is met with, it is frequently not subsequently contradicted at all. The correct reading was probably given by the conductor at rehearsal. In the case of the present work, an experienced musician would find little difficulty in deciding upon the proper method of performance from the internal evidence of the music. The first part of this beautiful chorus ends with a full close in F sharp minor; and after two bars for the orchestra the subject is resumed in that key, the lead being now taken by the tenor. The music returns to the original tonality of B minor, and after another full close a short coda on the words "et homo factus est," which is full of beauty, ends the movement with a half cadence on the chord of B major.

There are few pieces more often referred to, and at the same time less generally known, than the sublime "Crucifixus" which we have now reached in the course of our analysis. In truth a more marvellous instance of the combination of profound science with the deepest and most heart-felt expression is not to be found in the whole range of music. The chorus (E minor, $\frac{3}{2}$) is constructed upon a "ground bass" four bars in length, repeated thirteen times with a varied accompaniment. The bass is the following—

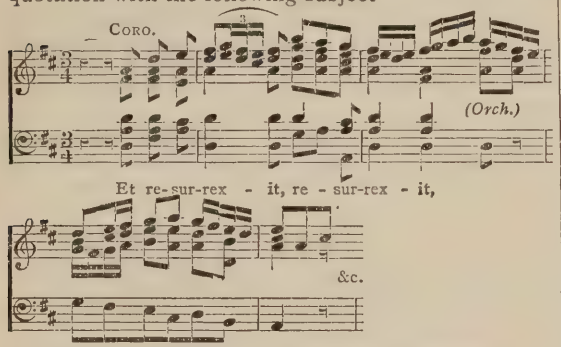


It is curious to note, in passing, that this bass bears a strong resemblance to one found in Purcell's Dido and Æneas, while it is almost identical with that which Handel uses in the opening chorus of his Susanna, "How long, O Lord." The coincidence is doubtless accidental, as the movements differ widely in their treatment. The present chorus is for four voice parts, accompanied by the strings and two flutes. The usual difficulty as to quotation meets us here again, as the music is nearly all in ten real parts, all of which are of equal importance. After four bars of prelude the voices enter one by one with the simple phrase—

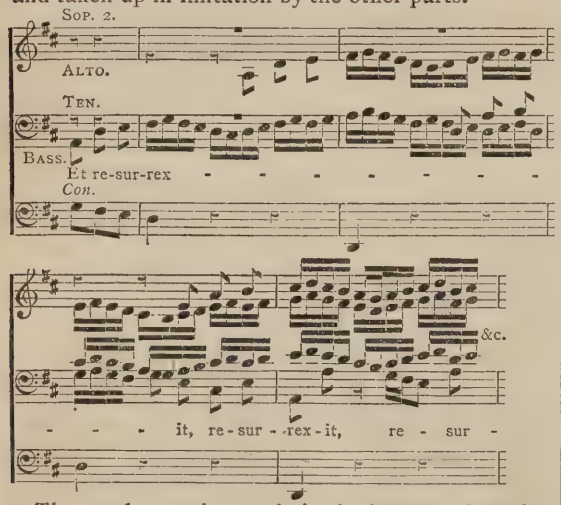


At each fresh return of the bass to its starting-point new vocal features are introduced, the progressions of the harmony, which is largely chromatic, being truly wonderful. The close of the chorus is perhaps the finest part of all; the bass is here varied, so as to end in G major; the instruments, except the organ, are hushed, and the chorus, piano, ends thus—

After the two grand and solemn movements just noticed, the jubilant "Et resurrexit" (D major, $\frac{3}{4}$) bursts forth with a brilliance that is truly overpowering. The full orchestra and chorus commence immediately after the last notes of the previous quotation with the following subject—



In this extract only an imperfect condensation of the score is attempted; to indicate clearly the progressions of the parts would require too much space. The same joyful tone characterizes the whole movement; after a close for the orchestra four bars later in A a new theme is announced by the basses, and taken up in imitation by the other parts.



The words are given only in the bass, as the other voices have nothing but "divisions" on the word "resurrexit." At the next bar the first subject returns with a different continuation to that previously given. One of the most generally prevalent erroneous ideas on the subject of Bach's music is that it is "deficient in melody." Indeed this charge has been seriously brought against the composer by more than one writer on music. Such choruses as the present or (it may be said without exaggeration) dozens of others from Bach's works which might be named furnish a most conclusive answer to the objection. There is nothing in the whole of Handel more thoroughly melodious, nor more readily intelligible on a first hearing, than this "Et resurrexit." At the recent performance of the Mass at St. James's Hall, it must have come as an absolute revelation to those who then made its acquaintance for the first time. In the course of the movement a remarkable episode in B minor occurs, in which a florid melody, founded on the chief theme, is given with great effect to the bass voices alone—and accompanied by the strings in detached chords. It ends in F sharp minor, after which the first subject returns at once in D, with full orchestra, for the words "cujus regni non erit finis." The first part of the movement is repeated, with little alteration, and a rather long symphony, with very florid and difficult trumpet passages, ends this magnificent chorus.

The following bass solo, "Et in spiritum sanctum" (A major, $\frac{6}{8}$), though interesting enough in itself, suffers from its proximity to the wonderful movement that has preceded it. It is accompanied by two oboi d'amore and continuo, and is more vocal in style than several of the solo numbers of the work. There is, however, nothing in it which calls for special remark.

It is far otherwise with the succeeding chorus, "Confiteor unum Baptisma," which ends this portion of the Mass. This movement begins with a long and strictly-written fugue for five voices in F sharp minor, accompanied by the organ only, upon the following subject—worked in the grave and severe style suggested by the opening for 120 bars. The time (which, by the way, has not been previously indicated, but which is evidently alla breve) then changes to adagio, and at the solemn words "et expecto resurrectionem mortuorum," we find some harmonies so extremely modern in character that one knows not whether to feel more astonished at their extraordinary effect, or at finding them in a work written nearly a century and a half since. Two short extracts will give an imperfect idea of them—

And again—

Both these enharmonic transitions are of such surprising boldness that, in performance, their effect is absolutely startling. It would be an interesting question for the musical antiquarian whether Bach was the first to discover their use. Without professing to have sufficient acquaintance with the works of the early composers to speak with any authority on the subject, I can at least say that I know of no parallel passages to those just quoted in any of the older music that I have met with. A half close on A leads to the last movement of this very remarkable chorus, vivace e allegro. Here the full orchestra enters for the first time, with an effect all the greater from its previous suppression. The music, too, is in strong contrast with what has preceded, being of a simplicity somewhat unusual with Bach. The melodies have a swing about them, which might almost be characterized as "jovial," and there is a prevalence of tonic and dominant harmonies which at times reminds one of Handel. Towards the close a short and effective fugato is heard on the following theme :—

and the chorus ends in that abrupt manner so often adopted by the composer. This "Credo" is, perhaps, as a whole, the greatest work which Bach ever wrote.

(To be concluded next month.)

THE PURCELL SOCIETY.

WE are glad to find that Mr. Cummings's efforts to awaken an interest in the works of Purcell have been responded to as they should be in the land of his birth, and a Society, having the twofold object of publishing his compositions, most of which exist only in manuscript, and of meeting for the study and performance of his works, is now in existence, some of the most eminent musical professors being on the committee, and a large number of artists and amateurs enrolled as members. A perusal of the prospectus must astonish all who have deluded themselves into the belief that the general public really knows much of the genius of a composer who has at least earned the distinction of being spoken of with reverence by his countrymen. He is known to have written music for nearly fifty Dramas; and since Novello's edition of his sacred works, many new compositions have come to light. His Odes and Welcome Songs, chiefly in manuscript, are extremely numerous, and the volume of manuscripts in his own handwriting, lately discovered, contains Anthems, with Symphonies and instrumental parts, Odes and miscellaneous Songs. To place all these treasures before the world is no doubt a heavy task; but knowing those under whose direction it will be undertaken, we may rest assured that it will be a labour of love. That the sympathy and support of the musical public may be confidently relied upon scarcely admits of a doubt; for as it is truly stated in the prospectus, the object is not only to enrich the available treasures of English art, but to wipe away a national reproach by doing justice to one of whom the nation has abundant reason to be proud.

IT is gratifying to see that the majority of English musical critics have spoken out plainly upon the pretentious "Dramatic Symphony" of Rubinstein's, recently performed by the Philharmonic Society. But to prove that they do not stand alone in their estimate of its real place in musical art, we quote the following from a notice of the work in Dwight's Journal of Music, published in Boston: "The third Symphony Concert of Theodore Thomas was chiefly remarkable for an exceedingly long (a whole hour) and an exceedingly fantastical, extravagant, spasmodic, incoherent, and chaotic symphony (so, at least, we found it on a single hearing), called 'Dramatic,' by Rubinstein. There was beauty and continuity of melody in the first half of the Adagio, but the rest seemed like the improvisation of a mad orchestra in Bedlam; brilliant and dazzling effects in detail, wonderful difficulties splendidly executed, but tending nowhere, leaving nothing in the mind; and yet we doubt not it is all grammatically written, and in the highest degree ingenious—but to what end? Why it should be called dramatic we could not see. Traverses the whole range of human passions and emotions? Heaven save us from some of these passions, these emotions, if there be any like them!"

WE scarcely imagined, when we made a few observations in our last number upon "Art at the Mansion House," that another banquet of the kind would so soon follow. Nearly three hundred guests, however, we find by a report in the newspapers, accepted invitations for this second gathering, during the past month; and Mr. J. C. Horsley, R.A., in his speech, expressed a hope that "he might be permitted to observe that while all due attention should continue to be paid to sculpture and architecture, the city of London might bestow a little more attention upon the poor painters." With this proposition we cordially agree, and it might also be suggested that the "poor musicians" should come in for some small share of civic honour. Perhaps, however, we should not complain, since, although music was not even mentioned during the evening, a number of followers of the art were duly in waiting upon the guests, for we are informed that "a choice selection of music was given between the toasts."

THE insertion of the letters respecting the notation of a chord in Mr. Alfred Allen's "Gavotte," will sufficiently prove our desire that opinions shall be freely ventilated in our columns. As the correspondence on the subject must be brought to a close with the present number, we take the opportunity of saying that we had no intention of raising a point in theory at all, but merely stated what we imagined to be an admitted fact, that the root being the same, whether the chord resolved to a triad or a 6-4 on the dominant, the notation in both cases should be alike. Mr. Allen's reply that the E♯ and F♯ "seems more natural" than F♮ and F♯, simply ignores the question of a root altogether. As some interesting communications, however, concerning this much disputed chord have been called forth from accredited musicians, we do not regret the space we have devoted to this friendly controversy.

WE have been particularly requested to state that Mrs. Weldon's concert, which was given at St. James's Hall on the 17th ult., was for the purpose of obtaining funds to increase the number of orphans adopted by her, the intention being not to train these children as professional vocalists, but to have them taught some useful trade, so that their musical acquirements shall merely occupy their leisure time. We are glad to find that, in furtherance of this laudable object, a long list of patrons had been secured; for, considering that six out of nine pieces in the first part of the programme were by a "late member of Gounod's choir;" that "Tommy and Jackie" (aged between 3 and 4 years) were advertised to play a minuet; "Katie" (2 years and 1 month old) was to recite a nursery rhyme; and "Walter Rawlings" (10 years old) to sing "Lullaby," by his brother Alfred (14 years old)—we can scarcely imagine, in spite of the attraction of Gounod's "Jeanne d'Arc," that the appeal to musical people could be largely responded to.

IF Professor Blackie has been somewhat roughly handled since his letter to the Scotsman respecting the concert given by Professor Oakeley, we cannot but believe that he has brought it upon himself; for with all his natural yearning towards Scotch music, there was no occasion to talk about "wretched foreign affectations," under which title he must know—if he know anything at all about it—that he includes some of the greatest works that ever were given to the world. Our readers will see that we have now given a champion on each side of the question a hearing; but both the attacker and defender unfortunately imitate the irate Professor by using expressions which injure the cause; for "M.H." talks about bringing "truth home to the ignorant," and "J.B." says that when Englishmen attempt to deal with anything Scotch, "their logical faculties become clouded and unfit for any other use than making Scotchmen laugh." However Professor Blackie may have committed himself, it must be remembered that he is a man of cultivated intellect. He has, of course, a right to expect that his letter would give rise to a controversy; but the correspondence at present has scarcely strengthened or weakened his argument, and it appears to us that he should pray as much to be delivered from his friends as from his enemies.

ŒDIPUS AT COLONOS.

THE success which attended the production of the "Antigone" of Sophocles, with Mendelssohn's music, at the Crystal Palace in December last, prompted the directors of that establishment to place on the stage, for the first time in this country, the same author's "Œdipus at Colonos," to which, as is well known, Mendelssohn has also written incidental music. This Tragedy is the second of a triad on the same subject—Œdipus, the King, Œdipus at Colonos, and Antigone. The music is, on the whole, broader and more rugged, although perhaps less melodious, than that of "Antigone," and no doubt Mr. Gadsby's forty chorus singers found it even more exacting to sing from memory, as the performance was on the whole hardly so satisfactory. The fine chorus, "Thou comest here to the land," was, however, redemanded, and the grand storm chorus was warmly applauded. The accompaniments were admirably played by the orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Manns, at times, during the dialogue, however, overpowering the speakers. It is, perhaps, hardly our province to notice critically the acting of the Tragedy, but we cannot avoid expressing our regret that, with the exception of the two principal personages, a more competent company should not have been selected. It has rarely been our lot to listen to so poor a display of—shall we call it—elocution. Miss Genevieve Ward and Mr. Herman Vézin, however, were admirable in their impersonations of Antigone and Œdipus, the latter earning a well-deserved tribute of applause for his delivery of the curse—powerful, yet utterly devoid of rant. Mr. Vézin's elocution was a lesson alike to audience and to his brother actors.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

No novelty has been produced at this establishment during the past month; nor indeed is it likely that the lessee will do more than pass creditably through the period to which his subscription extends. "Don Giovanni," with an exceptionally strong cast—Donna Anna, Mdlle. Titiens; Elvira, Madame Nilsson; Don Juan, M. Faure; and Leporello, Herr Rokitanski—has been a powerful attraction to the lovers of classical music; yet we cannot but think that the casting of the part of Zerlina to Madame Trebelli-Bettini, well as she sang the music, was a mistake. The Don Ottavio of Signor Stagno was scarcely a performance to advance him in public estimation, yet we scarcely know where a more efficient substitute could be found in the company. The manifest improvement of Signora Varesi must be mentioned as one of the principal events of the season, and there can now be little doubt that her re-appearance at the new Opera-house next year will be confidently looked for. The house has been uniformly well attended.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

IF Verdi ever had a style, it is thoroughly certain that he has changed it; but it is a great question whether he did not commence and acquire his fame as a successful imitator of the styles of others. True it is that, with an innate perception of dramatic effect, he was constantly struggling to be something else than a mere slave of the popular vocalists; and when therefore he had, as much as his nature would allow it, shaken off his allegiance to the purely Italian composers, he began to found himself upon Meyerbeer, which resulted in that pretentious work "Don Carlos;" and then upon the great prophet of the future, Wagner, which has resulted in the Egyptian Opera "Aïda," presented for the first time in this country on the 22nd ult. It is not likely that the inventive power shown throughout "Il Trovatore" and "Rigoletto"—which, as long as the destinies of Italian Opera are ruled by the vocalists, will unquestionably maintain their place—could be so trammelled by the composer's restless desire to escape from himself as not to make itself felt in the gorgeous spectacle which he undertook to "set" for the delight of the Khedive of Egypt; but certain it is that these reminiscences are somewhat few and far between, and that although the Oriental magnificence which gladdened the hearts of a Cairo audience may have thrown dust in the eyes of Egyptian critics, it is a fact that neither in Italy nor in Paris has its production caused much excitement; nor do we believe that in England it will obtain a permanent hold of the musical public. It is a very common error to suppose that quaint strains, with certain tonal peculiarities, must represent ancient music, simply because it is not modern; and that the more ugly it is, the stronger is it characteristic of the days of barbarism; but this may be carried to an extreme; and although Signor Verdi no doubt has exclusive means of knowing the kind of music which was sung and played in the Egyptian temples in the time of the Pharoahs, we may be at least excused for saying that he has used his "local colour" somewhat too thickly. In the impassioned scenes he is certainly most successful, yet in some of his more quiet music—as for instance in the Romance for the tenor, "Celeste Aïda"—there is much to admire; and in several of the concerted pieces in which the dramatic action is carried on, occasional writing, both for voices and orchestra, occurs which convinces us how legitimately he can command the resources of his art. He has certainly striven hard to give due effect to every phase of the story supplied him. We have picturesque music for the dances and processions, heart-broken phrases for the principal characters—not one of whom experiences even a brief pleasurable sensation throughout the Opera—and sacred strains for the Priestesses in the Temple; but to infer from this that "Aïda" resembles "Tannhäuser" or "Lohengrin" is sheer nonsense. Wagner illustrates his music by a spectacle; Verdi illustrates a spectacle by his music.

The plot of the Opera is extremely simple. Aïda, an Ethiopian slave, is in love with, and beloved by, the Egyptian General, Radamès, but the King's daughter, Amneris, who also loves the General, extracts her slave's secret from her by pretending that Radamès has been killed. He returns, however, and as a reward for his services, the King offers him the hand of the Princess. Radamès is faithful to Aïda, and his love impels him to reveal to Amonasro (Aïda's father, whom he has brought home as a captive) his plans for the conquest of Ethiopia. As the lovers are about to fly from Egypt, they are intercepted, through the jealousy of Amneris, and Radamès is condemned to be buried alive. Aïda contrives to secrete herself in the dungeon, and the Opera ends with their death. It will be seen that the story is of a most gloomy character, and certainly, were it not for the many spectacular effects introduced, it would be simply unendurable. Many situations, however, are highly dramatic; and although, as we have already said, everybody is intensely miserable, the music is in several places thoroughly sympathetic with the stirring events of the plot. As instances, we may especially mention the duet, "Amore, amore," for Aïda and Amneris, many portions of the duet in which Aïda beseeches Radamès to fly from Egypt, and the final duet in the subterranean dungeon, which is replete with passages of the utmost tenderness. Much of the music in the King's Palace and in the Temple is extremely effective, a good use being made of the Egyptian long trumpets; but the ear becomes often wearied with the weight of the score, for not only do all the principal characters sing their loudest, but the whole of the chorus as well; the brass instruments, both on and off the stage, most zealously contributing their share to the general noise. Every praise must be given for the manner in which the work is rendered. Madame Patti, in the character of Aïda, was simply perfection, whether considered vocally or histrionically. Her extraordinary command of the somewhat difficult music enabled her to give the deepest significance to the minutest shades of feeling, and the impulsive energy she displayed aroused the enthusiasm of the audience in every scene. A débutante, Mdlle. Ernesta Gindele, in the part of Amneris, evidenced the possession of an excellent mezzo-soprano voice and good style, and she won her way gradually, but surely, to the favourable verdict of a somewhat critical and impassive jury. Signor Nicolini, as Radamès, sang his very best, exerting himself occasionally even perhaps beyond the necessary limits; Signor Graziani did the utmost justice to the music of Amonasro, and Signor Capponi and M. Feitlinger, the former as the high priest Ramfis, and the latter as the King, were of essential service in securing the general efficiency of the work. The audience being released from the fear of any German interference with British vested rights, became as noisy and troublesome as usual. A few indeed there were who attempted to preserve the notion that they were in an artistic atmosphere and not at a show; but the occupants of the gallery and amphitheatre were too strong for them. And so one of the most impassioned scenes was suspended in order that a comic dance of male slaves (more suitable for the opening of a pantomine) should be repeated; the principal singers were yelled and screamed for until they appeared, shaking each other by the hand, immediately after they had mutually avowed the most violent hatred; and huge bouquets were tossed about the stage, gracefully acknowledged by the curtseying vocalists, and thrown out at the wing with a disregard of any continuity of the dramatic action which needs to be witnessed to be believed. The most sanguine enthusiasts can scarcely hope that high-class works can ever be adequately represented amidst such inartistic surroundings.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

It was no doubt a compliment to Herr Rubinstein to perform his "Dramatic Symphony" at the sixth Concert of this Society; but it must be placed on record that it was given by the directors at the cost of the subscribers; for to take an hour's attention from an audience which might be bestowed upon the great works in art was indeed to exact from them an expensive testimonial to our distinguished guest. The word "Dramatic" is an exceedingly useful one for a composition so fantastic and incoherent, for it covers a multitude of what might be considered defects in a production of more regular construction. There is both melody and beauty of treatment in the "Adagio," but the less that is said of the other movements the better; indeed the feeling of regret was widely spread that so much labour should be spent with so small a result. At the seventh Concert Sterndale Bennett's Overture to "The Merry Wives of Windsor" was a welcome item in the programme. Written at the age of 18, when the composer was a student in the Royal Academy of Music, the work unmistakably shadows forth the power which was afterwards shown; and the only wonder is that it should still remain in manuscript. At the same Concert Mdlle. Anna Mehlig won well-deserved applause for her artistic rendering of Beethoven's Concerto in E flat. The morning concerts have been well attended, the only novelty introduced being Rheinberger's "Wallenstein's Camp," a movement displaying much clever instrumentation and many catching bits of melody.

FESTIVAL OF TRINITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

On Thursday evening, the 1st ultimo, a Choral Festival, celebrating, we understand, the fourth anniversary of the above institution, was held in Westminster Abbey. The choir, numbering about 170 voices, was selected from the various district Associations in union with Trinity College, the solos and verse-parts being undertaken by Master Pitt (treble), Mr. Hodges (alto), of the Chapel Royal, Mr. Stedman (tenor), and Mr. Thurley Beale, of St. Paul's Cathedral. The service was very ably intoned by the Abbey Precentor, the Rev. S. Flood Jones, M.A., and the choir sang the responses to the five-part arrangement of Tallis. The "Magnificat" and "Nunc Dimittis" (E. J. Hopkins in F) we have never heard more perfectly sung; and the rendering of the verse, "He remembering His mercy," sung by the quartett above mentioned, was equally worthy of praise. We regret that we cannot say quite as much for the performance of the Anthem. It was a rather lengthy and elaborate composition by Edward Dearle, Mus. Doc., Cantab., on the well-known "Wilderness" subject, commencing "The desert shall rejoice," this verse being set as a short recitative, sung with great finish and sweetness of voice by Mr. Stedman. Next came a chorus on the words, "Strengthen ye the weak hands," given by the choir with commendable energy and precision. There was a slight uncertainty about the succeeding quartett movement, "The eyes of the blind," leaving the impression that the two upper parts were being read at sight. The bass solo, "For in the wilderness," a truly Handelian bit of writing, was delivered with much force and spirit by Mr. Thurley Beale; but the concluding chorus which followed it was partially marred at the commencement by the too hurried attack of the choir, which cannot be said to have fairly righted itself until it reached the stretto of the short fugue which terminated the anthem. The want of communication between the conductor (Mr. E. H. Turpin) and the organist (Dr. Bridge) would fully account for this temporary unsteadiness, for which indeed it would not be fair to blame a choir that showed throughout an elaborate service both reading, efficiency, and a discipline which does great credit to the conductor. Of Dr. Bridge's accompaniments it would be impossible to speak too highly; they were at once subservient to the voices and full of delicate colouring. Bishop Claughton preached the sermon, and an offertory was collected on behalf of the College Building Fund, which, we understand, is in the charge of the Warden, Mr. H. G. Bonavia Hunt, Mus. Bac., Oxon, of the Middle Temple. On the whole we have seldom heard a better "festival service" at the Abbey.

We are requested to announce that Dr. Llewelyn Thomas, of the Central London Throat and Ear Hospital, has been appointed honorary consulting physician to the Royal Academy of Music.

An excellent Concert was given by the choir of St. Thomas's Church, at Westbourne Hall, Westbourne-grove, on the 7th ult., under the able conductorship of Mr. H. R. Eyers. We have before had occasion to call attention to the classical nature of the programme provided by Mr. Eyers; and when we say that on the present occasion it included Spohr's Twenty-fourth Psalm, "The Earth is the Lord's," a Motett by Ferdinand Hiller, "Oh! weep for those" (performed for the first time in this country), Mendelssohn's Ninety-eighth Psalm for a double chorus, "Sing to the Lord a new-made song," and Flotow's Serenade, "Still slumber the leaves to-night" (the violin obbligato most artistically played by Miss Gabrielle Vaillant), it will be seen that the conductor had undertaken no easy task either for himself or his choir. The principal vocalists—Miss Amy Aylward, Miss Reimar, Miss Thekla Fischer, Mrs. J. France Collins, Miss Kate Brand, Madame Patey, Mr. Henry Guy, Mr. Harry Seligmann, Mr. Robert George, and Mr. Gordon Gooch—acquitted themselves to perfection; and the instrumentalists—Miss M. Bucknall (pianoforte) and Mr. Lazarus (clarionet)—elicited the warmest applause. The choral singing was uniformly good throughout the evening, and in every respect the Concert was a genuine success.

The Lower Rhenish Festival commenced on Whit Sunday with a performance of Handel's Oratorio "Solomon," the solo vocalists being Mdlles. Meysenheym (Soprano) and Amalie Kling (Contralto), Herren Ernst (Tenor), Adolf Wallnöfer (Baritone), and Herman Pfeiffer (Bass). The band and chorus numbered over 500, and the excellent training of Herr Ferdinand Breunung was evidenced by the uniformly perfect rendering of the choruses. The Oratorio was given as originally scored, but with the addition of Mendelssohn's Organ part. At the second concert, on the following day, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and the Overture to "Euryanthe" were finely performed by the band. Schumann's Cantata, "Des Sängers Fluch," and Mendelssohn's Finale to "Loreley" again gave the choir an opportunity of displaying its powers, Mdlle. Kling, in the solo parts, also gaining high honours. The other important work selected was Brahms's "Triumphlied," for a chorus of eight parts. The third day was devoted, as usual, to the "Artists' Concert," when a most interesting programme was provided. Madame Essipoff was the pianist, and for her admirable rendering of Liszt's Etude in D flat received two encores, both of which she responded to. Herr Breunung played Mendelssohn's Sonata No. 1 upon the organ, in order to exhibit the new instrument recently erected by a local builder. Every credit is due to Herr Breunung, who in the capacities of pianist, organist, and conductor proved himself thoroughly competent.

At Mr. Henry Leslie's third subscription Concert on the 1st ult., a very excellent selection of part-music was given, the encores being for Sir W. S. Bennett's Part-song "Come, live with me;" R. L. De Pearsall's Madrigal, "Lay a garland on her hearse;" Morley's "Now is the month of maying;" and Walter Macfarren's Part-song, "Shepherds all and maidens fair." A new and melodious Part-song, by the concert-giver, entitled a "Dream of calm," was enthusiastically received, and Mr. Abercrombie, who supplied the place of Mr. Sims Reeves, absent from indisposition, elicited warm applause. The instrumentalists were Madame Varley-Liebe (violin) and Mr. Charles Hallé (pianoforte). The closing concert of the season was in every respect highly attractive, for in addition to the truly refined singing of the choir, Mr. Sims Reeves appeared and sang his very best throughout the evening.

A performance of Oratorio and Mass music was given in St. George's Centenary Chapel on the 7th ult. by the members of the Singing Class, assisted by professional soloists. "Let the bright seraphim" (Samson) and "I know that my Redeemer liveth" (Messiah) were sung with great care and taste by Miss Grahame; "O rest in the Lord" (Elijah) by Miss Alice Berton; and "If with all your hearts" (Elijah) by Mr. Sheldrich. The Bass solos were sustained by Messrs. Brazier and Barns. Mr J. S. Nimkey presided at the organ, and Mr. Hodd (of the Lime-house Choral Society) conducted. At the commencement of the second portion of the Programme an Introduction and Andante from an Organ and Pianoforte Duet in E flat, composed by Mr. Nimkey, was most ably played by the Composer at the Organ, and Mr. James Fairbairn (of the Sacred Harmonic Society) at the Pianoforte.

Sir John Goss and Mr. Arthur Sullivan received the honorary degrees of Mus. Doc. at Cambridge on the 1st ult. They were accompanied in the senate house by Professor Macfarren, and were presented to the Vice Chancellor, the Rev. Dr. Phear, Master of Emanuel, by the public orator in a laudatory Latin speech loudly cheered by the undergraduates in the galleries.

The Fourth Festival of the London Sunday School Choirs was held on the 14th ult., at the Crystal Palace, when the Handel orchestra was filled with 5,000 pupils and their teachers. The majority of the pieces were suitable for a body of juvenile singers; and a large amount of credit is due to the conductor, Mr. Luther Hinton, and his coadjutors for the success of the festival. We would, however, suggest that it would be preferable to dispense with basses and tenors altogether, unless they can be procured in sufficient numbers to balance the enormous body of trebles and altos. The notion of one or two hundred men singing against twenty times their force of trebles is absurd. It would be far better to sing in unison, with a free organ accompaniment. We must also protest against compositions such as Gounod's "Nazareth" being adapted for such occasions. These matters are worthy of consideration; for with some slight revision of minor details this should become one of the most popular of the annual Palace festivals.

Mr. Ch. J. Bishenden has been presented by the inhabitants of Hemel Hempstead with a musical scholarship and a handsome ivory bâton, mounted in solid silver, richly chased, and bearing an appropriate inscription.

The seventh trial of new compositions by the Musical Artists' Society took place in the concert-room of the Royal Academy of Music on the 27th May, when several interesting works were produced, amongst the most important of which were String Quartetts by Messrs. C. J. Read, J. L. Summers, and C. Lehmeyer. The vocal pieces were received with much favour; and special mention must be made of the performance of an organ solo by Miss Mary Butterworth. Mr. Eaton Faning and Mr. Arthur O'Leary presided as accompanists at the pianoforte.

Mr. Charles Salaman, who gave his Concert at Willis's Rooms on the 9th ult., has earned the right to present a selection of his own compositions before a public audience; for as our reviewing columns have often attested, they are infinitely above the average of the pianoforte music of the day. Mr. Salaman elicited unanimous applause by his performance; and several vocal pieces—amongst which were his poetical settings of two of Horace's Odes—were received with marked favour. The vocalists were Miss Alice Salaman, Miss D'Alton, Mrs. Sicklemore, and Signor Rizzelli.

A Festival in aid of the Choir Benevolent Fund will be held at St. George's Chapel, Windsor, on Thursday the 27th inst., when there will be two services, the choir of St. George's Chapel being strengthened for the occasion by members of various cathedral choirs, and numbering over 60 trained voices. The morning service will be interesting from the fact that the anthems will be arranged in historical order; while the afternoon service will be rendered exceptionally attractive by the addition of a small but efficient orchestra of professional instrumentalists. The musical arrangements will be under the direction of Sir George Elvey. Many of the local clergy and gentry have given their names as stewards; and we hope that a successful gathering will reward the effort of the managing body of this admirable Society.

Mr. Charles Gardner gave a Concert at Willis's Rooms on the 17th ult., which was attended by a highly appreciative audience. The programme, which was exceedingly attractive to the lovers of high-class music, was well rendered throughout, Mr. Gardner's pianoforte playing—especially in three solos by Sir W. S. Bennett, and in the pianoforte part of Bach's Sonata in B minor, for violin and pianoforte—being, as might be expected, an important feature in the concert. The stringed instrumentalists were Herr Josef Ludwig (violin), and Herr Hugo Daubert (violoncello), and the vocalists Madlle. Sophie Löwe, Miss Mary Davies and Mr. W. H. Cummings.

THE usual monthly Concert of the St. George's Glee Union was given at the Pimlico Rooms, on Friday, the 2nd ult. The choral pieces consisted of well-known glees, including Mendelssohn's "Hunting Song," the "Nightingale," and "Farewell to the Forest." Miss Bessie Spear, Miss White, Miss Jeannie Irons, Miss Livermore, Mr. R. T. Roberts, Mr. Page Hannant, and Mr. C. Strong were the solo vocalists. Mr. G. F. Smith gave an excellent performance of Mendelssohn's "Andante and Presto Agitato," and the duet "Allegro Brillante," by the same composer, in which he was assisted by Miss Secretan. Messrs. T. Garside and Jos. Monday were the conductors.

THE opening of the new organ, built by Messrs. Bevington and Sons, for Christ Church, South Hackney, took place on Thursday the 8th ult. The instrument comprises two manuals and seventeen stops, and is of very peculiar construction, being erected in a triangular chamber. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Gordon Calthrop, M.A., vicar of St. Augustine's, Highbury, and the choral portions of the service were most efficiently rendered by the choir. Mr. George Legge, organist of St. Thomas's, Regent-street, ably presided at the organ.

THE funeral of the late Mr. Angel, for many years organist of Exeter Cathedral, took place in the new cemetery on the 30th May, and was attended by a large number of professional and private friends. The ceremony was of a choral character, the Cathedral Choir being well represented on the occasion.

A COMMEMORATION Concert in honour of the late Alfred Holmes is about to be given in London, the programme to consist exclusively of his compositions. An influential committee has been formed to carry out this undertaking; and subscriptions to meet the current expenses are earnestly invited.

MR. WILLIAM LEMARE, of Brixton, who has recently been appointed Organist and Choirmaster to St. Mary's, Newington, has been presented with a handsome Silver Centre Piece, of chaste and elegant design, bearing the following inscription—"Presented to William Lemare, Esq., on the occasion of his resigning the appointment of Organist of St. Saviour's, Camberwell, by the members of the choir, in friendly recognition of his kindness and courtesy, and as a slight tribute of their lasting esteem, 1876." The Testimonial was accompanied by a beautifully-illuminated scroll, to which the autographs of the presenters are attached.

MRS. G. M. GREEN'S Evening Concert took place on the 14th ult., at the Langham-hall, when she was assisted by Madame Edith Wynne, Miss Marion Severn, Messrs. G. Perren, Henry Holmes, and Walter Pettit, and several of her own pupils. The programme was well selected and excellently rendered, a feature of the evening being a quartett for four pianofortes (Czerny), well played by the concert-giver and her pupils. Mr. John Roe was the accompanist.

MR. and MRS. GERMAN REED have produced a new entertainment during the past month entitled "The Wicked Duke," which was excellently supported by Mrs. German Reed, the Misses Holland and Braham, and Messrs. Corney Grain, A. Bishop, and A. Reed. The music, written by Mr. German Reed, is light and sparkling. "A Musical Bee," a sketch by Mr. Corney Grain, also forms part of a most enjoyable evening's amusement.

THE third Concert of the Amateur Philharmonic Society was given at the Assembly Rooms, St. John's Wood, on Thursday evening the 8th ult. The members were most effectively supported by Miss Webster, who was highly efficient in Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," Miss Erica, in a song of Signor Scuderi's (the violin obbligato played by the composer), Signor Adelmann and Mr. J. Williams. Miss Kate Griffiths's pianoforte playing was excellent. The band was ably conducted by Mr. William Beavan.

THE Grosvenor Choral Society gave its fifty-second monthly Concert on Friday the 23rd ult., at the Grosvenor Hall, Buckingham Palace-road, when Cowen's Cantata, "The Rose Maiden," was performed. The soprano and tenor solos were effectively sung by Miss Marie Duval, R.A.M., and Mr. A. Lawrence Fryer, the duet for soprano and tenor being redemanded. The other solos were divided between Miss Kate Reed, Mrs. Smyth, Mr. Cutler, and Mr. T. Nettleship. The choir, consisting of about eighty voices, sang the choruses with precision, "The Wedding Chorus" being so well given as to elicit an enthusiastic encore. The pianoforte accompaniment was efficiently played throughout by Mrs. Alfred Dye. The second part included Campana's new song "The Two Worlds," by Miss Turner (encored), a pianoforte duet, played by Mrs. Dye and Mr. J. G. Callcott, and some part songs. Mr. J. G. Callcott conducted.

NOVELLO AND CO.

Bide with us. (Bleib bei uns.) A sacred Cantata, composed by J. S. Bach.

A stronghold sure. (Ein feste Burg.) A sacred Cantata, composed by J. S. Bach.

(The English translations to both works by the Rev. John Troutbeck, M.A.)

IN none of Bach's works is the versatility of his genius more remarkably shown than in his "Kirchencantaten." Of these at least two hundred are in existence, out of a much larger number which he is believed to have written. They were mostly composed for the service at the Thomaskirche in Leipzig, at which he was organist, and are not only extremely varied in style, but laid out for nearly all possible (and in our days, unfortunately, sometimes impossible) combinations of instruments. In length they vary from three or four to ten or eleven movements; some are written for one voice, others for full chorus with three or four solo parts in addition; here we find a cantata with an accompaniment of strings and organ only, and in another a full orchestra with three trumpets, or, as likely as not, four trombones. Nor are the works less different in style than in such external features as we have mentioned. Bach never loses sight of the fact that it is sacred music that he is writing; but with the limitation that we find no approach to the secular in any of these pieces, there is scarcely any form of music known at the time at which Bach wrote of which examples may not be found in them, from the severest ecclesiastical and contrapuntal style down to the freest and most florid harmony and melody. There are, it may be at once admitted, many detached movements, especially in the solos, which in the present day attract little sympathy, and which are objects of curiosity rather than of love; but after making every deduction there remains a mass of most glorious music, which only needs to be studied to be appreciated as it deserves.

That these splendid cantatas are absolutely unknown to the great majority even of well-read musicians is due to the fact that until within the last few years they have remained in manuscript; even at the time we write barely half of them have been published. It is true that there exists an old German edition of some nine or ten, but this is so imperfect as to give but an inadequate idea of the music. It was not until 1851, when the Bach Society issued the first volume of the magnificent edition of the composer's works, which is still in progress, and likely to be at its present rate for twenty years to come, that an opportunity was really afforded of making acquaintance with these masterpieces. Up to the present time one hundred cantatas have been published by the society, and anyone who will take the trouble to examine them will feel that nothing that has been said in their praise is in the least an exaggeration.

The two cantatas now lying before us are specimens of two very different styles. The former, "Bide with us," begins with a very quiet chorus in the key of C minor, accompanied by strings, two oboes, and oboe di caccia, a now obsolete instrument, the modern representative of which is the Corno inglese. The tranquil beauty of this first chorus, which is by no means of remarkable difficulty, will impress itself at once on the mind of the hearer. It is followed by an alto air, "Thou whose praises never end," accompanied by an elaborate obbligato for the oboe di caccia, in a style frequently adopted by the composer, but which is more interesting from its skilful counterpoint than from its intrinsic beauty. The third movement of the cantata is even more characteristic of Bach. It is a treatment of the old choral "Ach, blieb' bei uns, Herr Jesu Christ" for soprano (whether solo or chorus is not stated in the score), with florid accompaniment and interludes for the violoncello. This piece is identical with an arrangement of the same choral for the organ, which will be found in the sixth volume of Griepenkerl's complete edition of Bach's organ works. It is, however, more effective in the form in which it appears here, as the choral is given to the voice instead of to an organ stop. A bass recitative and a tenor song, "Lord, to us Thyself be showing," accompanied by the string quartett, follow the choral, and the cantata concludes, according to Bach's custom, with a verse of a choral harmonized for full choir, with unison accompaniment for the orchestra. The choral which the composer has chosen here is Luther's fine old melody "Erhalt' uns, Herr, bei deinem Wort."

"A stronghold sure" may most unhesitatingly be pronounced one of the very finest of all the cantatas which Bach has written. The choral upon which it is founded is one of the best known both in Germany and in this country. It is almost needless to remind our readers that it forms the basis of the finale in Mendelssohn's "Reformation" Symphony, and also plays an important part in Meyerbeer's Huguenots. In this cantata it forms, so to speak, the keystone of the entire composition, appearing in four out of its eight numbers. The opening chorus, "A stronghold sure our God remains," accompanied by a large orchestra, including three trumpets and drums, is one of those masterly pieces of writing which are peculiar to Bach. Each phrase of the choral is treated separately, in free fugue by the voices, and towards the close of every section the choral is introduced on the high notes of the trumpet, above everything else, answered in canon at one bar's distance by the double-basses and the pedal reeds of the organ, the latter being expressly indicated in the score. The effect of the combination would be magnificent, could we but hear it as Bach intended; but, as recently noticed in the article on the Mass in B minor, his trumpet parts are unplayable at the present day. Even with the voices and a good organ accompaniment, the chorus would be very grand, though much would of course be lost in the absence of an orchestra. In the following duet for treble and bass, "Our utmost might is all in vain," the second verse of Luther's hymn is treated in a totally different manner to the first. The choral is now sung, with many florid embellishments, by the treble voice, while the bass has an entirely different, and even more florid, melody of its own. The two movements which come next, though interesting, are hardly equal to the preceding; but the unison choral (No. 5), "If all the world with fiends were filled," is of enormous power. Here the whole chorus in unison and octaves sings the third verse of the hymn, accompanied by the full orchestra with trumpets and drums in the freest and most varied counterpoint. A tenor recitative leads to a very charming duet for alto and tenor, "How blessed then are they," with accompaniment for violin and oboe di caccia; and the last verse of the choral, "That word shall still in strength abide," is then sung in conclusion in plain four-part harmony. The whole cantata is worthy of the attention of some of our choral societies. The necessary additions and modifications in the orchestral parts could be made with comparative ease by an experienced musician; and if adequately performed there can be no question as to its great popularity. It is one of the most readily appreciable and enjoyable of Bach's compositions.

Praise God in His holiness. Anthem for four voices. Composed by Berthold Tours.

THERE has been of late years an evident tendency on the part of our younger composers to emancipate cathedral music from the somewhat stereotyped form, which, until recently, appears to have been considered alone appropriate to it; and while there is some danger lest in the attempts to obtain freshness and variety a secular tinge should be given to the music, there is no reason why this need be the case. Indeed the present author furnishes a decisive proof that it is possible for a composer to avail himself of the modern developments of harmony without overstepping the limits of what is considered sacred music; though, by the way, it is far easier to feel than to define exactly what those limits are. No one who heard Mr. Tours's anthem, without knowing the composer's name, would for a moment attribute it to Croft or Boyce. It is unmistakably modern in tone and feeling, but there is nothing in it which can be pronounced inconsistent with the requirements of divine service. It opens with a broad chorus in G major, introduced by four bars of prelude for the organ, which instrument has an independent part throughout. As an instance of the unconventional yet effective style of treatment of the harmonies adopted may be cited the passage on the second line of the third page, where chromatic chords are introduced with good judgment, yet without too great a tax on the singers. The second movement, "Young men and maidens," an andantino quasi allegretto in E minor, $\frac{6}{8}$ time, pleases us less than the first, because $\frac{6}{8}$ is a peculiarly difficult rhythm to treat with dignity; and at the tempo marked ($\dot{\text{♩}}. = 63$) the music falls into a swing which seems hardly in keeping with what has preceded. With all deference to the composer, we would venture to suggest that we think the movement would gain considerably if taken at a slower pace than that indicated. The final movement of the anthem, "Let the saints be joyful with glory," is again excellent throughout. The whole work is by no means difficult, and not being very long, will be found useful for festival services.

Six short and easy Full Anthems for Parish Choirs. By Frederick Iliffe, Mus. Bac., Oxon.

THESE six little anthems are decidedly superior to many of their class. In attempting to write down to the ability of an average parochial choir, many composers seem to think that to be easy it is also necessary to be commonplace. Into this error Mr. Iliffe has not fallen. His melodies are pleasing, and his harmony worthy of a "Mus. Bac., Oxon." He seems to have a partiality for beginning with the dominant rather than the tonic chord, as we find this peculiarity in three out of the six anthems before us; the effect, however, is by no means unpleasant. The anthems show real musical feeling, and may be recommended for general use, especially as they are quite within the reach of any choir making the least pretensions to musical efficiency.

The Te Deum, easily arranged for Parochial Use, with Single and Double Chants. Composed and selected by Alexander S. Cooper.

THE present collection of twenty-one different settings of the Te Deum to various chants requires no detailed notice. In many churches where chants are used instead of more elaborate music for the canticles, there is a want of variety in this portion of the service. Either the same chant is used for the whole Te Deum, or at best, the same set of chants is used on nearly all occasions. Mr. Cooper's various arrangements will be found useful in relieving the monotony existing in such cases. The chants are well selected, with due regard both to unity of effect and to variety. Each setting is provided with at least two: the first for verses 1 to 18, 24, 25, and the last verse; the second for verses 19 to 23, and 26 to 28. In some cases a third chant, or, to speak more accurately, a variation of the second, is provided for the last verse.

Sonata in D major, for the Pianoforte. Composed by Julian Edwards.

As the name of this composer is new to us, we know not whether he has tried his "'prentice hand" upon smaller works before venturing upon one which requires not only exceptional powers, but a maturity of judgment which can only be gained by an earnest study of the compositions of the great masters, and a self-criticism to which, we fear, but few writers subject themselves. An "Allegro," "Andante," and "Rondo" knitted together so as to form one continuous work may assuredly be termed a "Sonata;" but those who have to review a composition with so classical a title, can only do so according to a higher standard of art than would be demanded in noticing an ordinary piece; and Mr. Edwards must not be surprised, therefore, if we do not award warm praise to the ambitious production now submitted to us. If we except the progression of the subdominant and dominant chords, which move upwards in fifths, six bars from the conclusion of the Sonata, we have no grammatical errors to complain of; indeed the whole work shows that its composer has been a careful student. But neither by the interest of the themes nor by their development are we gradually led onwards through the seventeen pages to which the composition is extended. The principal theme of the first movement is sufficiently marked, and the second subject, in the dominant, is melodious, although somewhat common-place. The passages, however, are feeble, and there is but little vigour in the treatment of the motives. The second movement is better, and the finale decidedly the best, a good point occurring in the latter, where a subject, in A minor, with a triplet accompaniment, leads through an agitato passage to the return of the principal theme. One feature in the Sonata is the linking together of the three movements without a break; and we may also mention that an attempt is made to give an effect of continuity of idea throughout the composition by concluding with the opening subject of the first movement. All these points show the result of earnest thought; and if our strictures be taken in good part, Mr. Edwards may some day thank us for reminding him that, although he has undoubted talent, the requirements of a Sonata are at present beyond his grasp.

Harvest Thanksgiving March, for the Pianoforte. Composed by J. Baptiste Calkin.

HERE is a really good and moderately difficult March, written for the pianoforte, and consequently infinitely more satisfactory than the "arrangements" from orchestral Marches which we are constantly called upon to notice. The theme is not only bold and spirited, but, as it should be, more coloured with the feeling of the corn-field than the battle-field. The placid second subject is extremely tuneful; and the coda, ending with an unexpected plagal cadence, concludes the piece with excellent effect.

Six Songs. Composed by Ferdinand Hiller. The English translation by the Rev. J. Troutbeck, M.A.

1. Eyes of Spring.—Frühlingsaugen.
2. Departure from the loved one.—Abschied von der Geliebten.
3. Inconstancy.—Flattersinn.
4. The Pilgrimage of the Virgin.—Maria, die wollt' wandern Geh'n.
5. Two voices.—Zwiegesang.
6. A parting Prayer.—Behüt' dich Gott.

THE name of the composer of these songs is a sufficient guarantee for their musical excellence; but the majority of them are so exceedingly simple in construction and so winning in melody as to recommend themselves most strongly to vocal amateurs who desire something higher than the conventional drawing-room ballad. No. 1, in F major, with a charming and unexpected modulation into A minor, is an absolute gem, the melody being throughout in most perfect sympathy with the words, which—as in all the songs under notice—appear as good in the English translation as in the original German. No. 2, in F minor, has a character in the accompaniment which gives much pathos to the theme; and the song cannot fail to become a favourite with singers who can make an audience feel as well as hear their words. No. 3, although scarcely to our taste, has many excellent points; and No. 4 is somewhat eccentric, the poetry tempting the composer, perhaps, to more elaborate word-painting than may be appreciated by many listeners. No. 5 is in every respect a charming composition, although exception may be taken by some to the very point we like—the fall of the diminished third between the two words "lovely night,"—and to some changes of key, which to us appear as spontaneous as they are beautiful. No. 6 has a remarkable progression in the melody of the short preliminary symphony, from the leading note to the fifth of the key, to which we confess we have not yet reconciled our ears. The song, however, is one of the best of the set, and will well repay study. We can scarcely doubt that this group of vocal pieces will find a cordial welcome wherever they are heard; and shall be glad if our few remarks upon their merits assist in making them more extensively known.

Ten Vocal Duets. Composed by Franz Abt. The English translation by the Rev. J. Troutbeck, M.A.

1. O come ye flow'rets.
2. All seek for rest.
3. Lovely violet.
4. In the distance.
5. In the forest.
6. Sabbath on the sea.
7. A Spring greeting.
8. The bird's question.
9. Longing for home.
10. On the blue sea.

IT can scarcely, perhaps, be expected that these ten vocal duets should be of equal merit, even when composed by so accomplished and successful a musician as Franz Abt, but those who really want some effective and easy music for two equal voices will find a mine of wealth in this collection. No. 1, a simple and graceful melody, with a flowing semiquaver accompaniment, is unquestionably one of the best of the series, and we confidently recommend it as a most attractive duet for amateur performance. No. 2, written in 6-4 rhythm, would, perhaps, be more generally acceptable in 6-8, but it is a charming vocal composition, melodious, and in moderate compass for both voices throughout. Nos. 3 and 4 are somewhat more conventional in character, but the latter, especially, will please a mixed audience. No. 5 may be cited as a highly characteristic duet, the feeling of the poetry being well reflected in the music, and the voice-parts flowing amicably together. Passing over Nos. 6 and 7, with a word of commendation, we are arrested by an exceedingly quaint number, "The Bird's Question" (No. 8 in the list), which certainly must find its way to popularity. The theme is extremely pleasing; it is excellently harmonized, and some good effects are gained by the answering of the voice-parts. Of Nos. 9 and 10, we prefer the latter, which has a placid subject, with a waving accompaniment, well expressive of the words. Again, we must compliment the translator for the excellent manner in which he has performed his task; for the poetry is not only flowing and easily versified, but truly musical.

LONGMANS, GREEN AND CO.

Notation: Brief Directions concerning the Choice, Adjustment, and Formation by hand of the Characters constituting the Musical Alphabet. By John Hullah.

THIS useful little book may be confidently recommended to those who either copy or compose music; for, as the author truly says, "The copying of a page of music, to the tyro in 'phonography,' is notoriously a tedious and even painful operation; and even for many who have become more practised in the art it is neither an easy nor a pleasant one." Apart from the plain directions for writing clearly and expeditiously all the signs used in music, the student may glean a great deal of valuable information concerning the proper grouping of the notes in the various rhythms; for on this important subject it is notorious that much ignorance prevails. We quite agree with Mr. Hullah, for instance, that a measure of 6-8 time is incorrectly, though often, expressed by a dotted minim, this notation being obviously indicative of triple not duple rhythm; and there can be no doubt that when thought on this matter becomes more logical such false writing must disappear. We can quite endorse our author's observation that the appoggia- tura " is generally understood to represent a note of half the value of that which it precedes," but can scarcely understand what he means by saying " however written," for as nothing whatever is mentioned about the acciaccatura, which should have a line drawn through it, there is much danger of an inexperienced writer mistaking one for the other. We should prefer, too, that the mark which divides music into measures should be termed a " bar-line" instead of a " bar ;" for assuredly a " bar" in a composition signifies the music contained within two bar-lines and not the bar-line itself. These, however, are merely gossipping observations, called forth by a careful perusal of what may truly be termed an extremely thoughtful little treatise, and, if considered by the author of any value, may be pondered before issuing a second edition.

The Southport Hymnal. Composed by Mrs. Frederick Ellis.

IF anything is calculated to turn sour the milk of human kindness in the breast of the reviewer, it is to have to wade through a large collection of amateur psalm-tunes. One almost always knows what to expect—a dreary platitude of chords, varied by a not unfrequent reminiscence of some well-known melody, and perhaps occasionally by some crudeness of harmony that makes the hair stand on end. Of course, if people choose to amuse themselves and waste music paper by writing psalm tunes there can be no possible objection to their doing so, but why do they publish them, and why, alas! will they send them for review?

These remarks have been forcibly suggested by the present Hymnal, which contains forty-two tunes. Mrs. Ellis has carefully dated each tune, and it appears that the spirit first moved her to compose in the year 1872, and that the movements continued at intervals during the following year. In 1874-5 she appears to have been suffering from a very aggravated attack of the complaint, and the result lies before us. We confess that after going through the first half-dozen tunes we felt a strong inclination to put the book into our waste paper basket, but we persevered, feeling that it would be, perhaps, scarcely fair to Mrs. Ellis to dismiss her in so summary a fashion, and also hoping, though somewhat against hope, that the later tunes might be better than the earlier ones. We were doomed to disappointment. Excepting when the melody is not original, it is as dull as it can well be, and the occasional clumsiness of the harmonic progressions only renders the general effect more uncomfortable. Perhaps the best tune in the book is the last, and of this the first line is note for note identical with the opening of Mozart's " Batti, batti," the third is a descending scale, the fourth ascends the scale from G to C, and then comes back again; the fifth line is from Beethoven's first romance for the violin, and sixth from a German choral by J. H. Knecht.

We have spoken strongly on the subject of this collection because we think a protest ought to be made against publications of this kind. We cannot for a moment suppose that such tunes would find acceptance in our churches—it would be a bad thing for church music if they did; and people have no right to rush into print unless they really have something to say that is worth hearing.

Valse Fantastique. Morceau de Salon. Pas des Sylphes. Morceau Elégant. Par Edouard St. Pierre.

WHY the first of these pieces should be termed " Fantastique" and the second " Elégant " we are at a loss to understand, for certainly either word would as aptly describe one as the other. We shall be glad to see the day when composers will allow their works to speak for themselves, for they may rest satisfied that if they have any character at all, " fantastique," " élégant," or otherwise, performers and listeners will be quite able to find it out. The tunefulness of the " Valse " will ensure it a welcome in a drawing room, although it has but little else to recommend it; but the " Pas des Sylphes " is a well-written and effective piece throughout, if we except the arpeggios in the last page, which are out of tone with the rest of the composition. We are especially pleased with the opening theme, the simplicity and grace of which is never obscured by unmeaning ornaments. Judging from this trifle, we should imagine that M. St. Pierre might be successful in music of a somewhat higher class.

DUNCAN DAVISON AND CO.

Dreaming and Waking. Song. Words by Mrs. Pfeiffer. Composed by Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew.

A SONG so deeply sympathetic with the poetry as this rarely comes before us; and we are certain that the authoress of the words, to whom it is dedicated, will fully appreciate the graceful compliment of her sister artist. The changes of key are most felicitous throughout; and amongst the many beautiful points which strike us, we may mention the two phrases—the first in E flat major and the second in E flat minor—to the words, " Shamed is the golden head, And the magic smile is fled." The ascent to the upper D, whilst the voice is holding the low key-note at the end, is also extremely beautiful. Singers should lose no time in possessing themselves of this highly attractive composition.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

PROFESSOR BLACKIE AND PROFESSOR OAKELEY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—We on this side of the Border have, as a rule, great respect for the opinions and critical abilities of Englishmen. In fact, when they speak or write on things that they know something about (which of course often happens), we are completely upset with awe and admiration at the exceeding brilliancy and accuracy of their discriminating powers. But, clear as their mental vision is in all other directions, no sooner do our English friends attempt to deal with anything Scotch than their usual clear-sightedness takes its departure. They are on such occasions invariably seized with a—what shall we call it?—a sort of scotomy, or dizziness in the head, and as a natural consequence their logical faculties become clouded, and unfit for any other use than making Scotchmen laugh. The letter of your correspondent " M. H." on Professor Blackie and the students' concert in Edinburgh is a very fair sample of what one might expect from one labouring under the influence of a slight attack of the above-mentioned complaint. " M. H.," when he wrote his letter, seems to have set out in a very hopeful if not pompous style. It is rather amusing, however, to notice how soon the Scotch mist begins to take effect upon him, and by what an abrupt and extraneous transition he betakes himself to a more congenial atmosphere. He starts jauntily with Professor Blackie for his subject, but soon finds it advisable to make a sudden decampment, to accomplish which, instead of returning gracefully home to " merry England," as one would have expected, he takes flight across the German ocean, and halts not until he is safe in Wagner's bosom, where he wags and warbles away, making us hold our breath with wonder at the familiar way in which he handles foreign languages, and finally winds up by telling us that he has written a disjointed letter—a statement which will be universally recognized as an indisputable truth.

" M. H." is just like the majority of Professor Blackie's critics—he appears not to have read the Professor's protest, or has misunderstood it if he did read it. The greater number of those who have taken up arms against Professor Blackie seem to have laboured under the delusion of supposing that he meant to dictate to Professor Oakeley regarding the class of music he ought to use in the training up of youths in the way they should go in order to become musica lexperts. Now, if I understand Professor Blackie aright, he does not concern himself about the method or tools employed in the cultivation of professional dexterity. What Professor Blackie is interested in is the educational use of music amongst the people generally. He believes, too, that there is no kind of music so well adapted to this purpose as that which is national. It was, therefore, I think, scarcely so barbarous a proceeding, after all, of Professor Blackie to complain of the total omission of Scottish national music in a concert given by an educational institution in the heart of Scotland—a country overflowing with national lyric gems. But the criticisers of Professor Blackie, notwithstanding the clear way in which he explained himself, appear to have totally misunderstood the aim of his protest, and have construed it into an attack upon Professor Oakeley. Now, the fact is Professor Blackie expressly exempted the Professor of Music from any blame in the matter, for he said "it had fundamentally more to do with a diseased state of public feeling in certain Scottish circles than with Professor Oakeley's academical position." That there is an epidemic prevalent among us here of the kind described by Professor Blackie is only too true—a disease that manifests itself in a hankering after things foreign, and a perfect hatred of anything home-born. It is also certain that something of the same kind exists in England, else why are English composers led to print the titles of their productions in a foreign language? or why do native artists find it advantageous to Italianize their names? It is gratifying to notice that the MUSICAL TIMES is not blind to such affectations, nor fails to do battle with them; and I hope that Professor Blackie will not yield an inch of the ground he has taken up, but will continue to use his powerful pen against our idolatrous worship of French and Italian (stucco) images.

Yours truly,

Jedburgh, N.B., May 26. J.B.

VOCAL AND DRAMATIC ARTISTS' PROTECTION SOCIETY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—I see a notice in the MUSICAL TIMES of a meeting on the Musical and Dramatic Copyright question, which informs your readers that a resolution was passed to establish an office, where all information upon copyrights can be obtained; but I can see no information as to where such office is to be found, or who to apply to for particulars.

I shall be glad to subscribe to and assist in any way, if you will kindly inform me who and where to apply to. I know several concert givers who would do the same, but, like myself, can find no name or address of the proper parties to apply to. I constantly engage vocalists for my concerts, and they have always selected the music they wish to sing; but in future I shall not allow any copyright music to be given at my concerts, if I know it, and this I shall make known to vocalists and instrumentalists before I engage them.

I am, Sir, yours truly,

Buxton, Derbyshire, June 3rd. JULIAN ADAMS.

[We willingly give the information desired by Mr. Adams. The address is—Messrs. Gordon & Jennings, 8, Oxford Street, W.

We cannot but think, however, that our correspondent has formed his resolution not to perform "any copyright music" at his concerts in future somewhat rashly; for not only have many music-publishers issued a long list of copyright works, which may be given in public without payment, but the object of the establishment of the office he so approves of is to afford every facility for ascertaining who are the holders of copyrights, and of negotiating with them for the rights of performance.—ED.]

"GOD SAVE THE KING."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—Were you, or any of your readers, ever under the impression that the air of "God save the King" was composed by the celebrated musician Lulli? because I first became acquainted with this piece of intelligence in an article entitled "Madame de Maintenon," by J. C. Morison, in last month's Fortnightly Review. The reader is given to understand that Madame de Maintenon founded the Convent of St. Cyr, and when it was completed she persuaded the King, Louis XIV., to see it. The article then goes on to say: "The young ladies and their superiors received him, it need not be said, with all the grave pomp which became such a community. A Te Deum was sung, the damsels defiled before him, and each in passing made a profound reverence to his Majesty. Then, according to a tradition preserved at St. Cyr till its suppression, as he was about to enter the garden, a chorus of three hundred young voices greeted him with a hymn, of which the words were written by Madame de Brinon, the Mother Superior, and the music by Lulli. We seem to have heard the words before, though in another language:—

"Grand Dieu, sauvez le Roi!
Grand Dieu, vengez le Roi!
Vive le Roi!
Qu'à jamais glorieux,
Louis victorieux;
Voye ses ennemis
Toujours soumis.
Grand Dieu," &c., &c.

And not only the words, but the air, was exactly the same as our "God save the King." The French claim originality, and declare that Handel, who visited St. Cyr in 1721, stole the tune and took it with him to England, The English retort the charge of plagiarism. But if plagiarism there be, it seems more probable that a roving minstrel like Handel was able and willing to make the appropriation, than that a sedentary and secluded body like the ladies of St. Cyr should purloin from abroad a chant composed (on that supposition) in honour of a heretical prince, George I."

Now, Sir, I have always understood that Dr. John Bull was the original composer of the grand old tune, but after perusing the above I hardly know what to think on the matter; therefore if you or any of your readers could enlighten me on the subject, I should feel, as well as many others, greatly obliged.

I remain, Sir, yours truly,

ALFRED B. ALLEN.

June 5th.

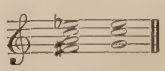
[There has been too ready an acceptance of the theory that our National Anthem was composed by Dr. John Bull, probably on account of the appropriateness of the doctor's name. The "Ayre" alluded to agrees in rhythmical construction more than in notes with "God save the King," although it is said that Bull's manuscript bears unmistakable evidence of having been recently tampered with. We do not believe that anybody has "stolen" the air. It has been truly remarked that "a national song composes itself;" and not only do many old English tunes resemble our "God save the King" (amongst which may be cited one by Purcell), but Carl Engel, in his work on "National Music," draws attention to the fact that a Swedish and a Danish song (both of which he quotes) have as much right to claim relationship with our National Anthem as Dr. Bull's "Ayre."—ED.]

ALFRED ALLEN'S "GAVOTTE."

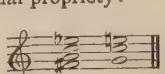
TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

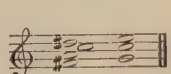
SIR,—May I be allowed to say a few words upon the theoretical question revived by Mr. Allen?

I consider that, although in C minor we must write



we may in C major use either of the following notations with equal propriety:—





Whether the root of the first chord be D, F, or F♯; whether it be used chromatically in C, or derived from the key of the dominant; and lastly, whether the root of the 6-4 be C or G, are questions which might be interesting if demonstration were possible in these matters, but which are, I fancy, regarded with much indifference by practical composers.

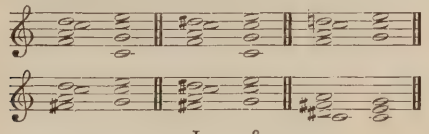
Were I obliged to choose between the two notations, I should myself prefer to write D sharp, and to explain the progression as a chromatic form of the added sixth, with its usual tonic resolution. But I confess I should hardly care to defend this perhaps obsolete theory, except on the ground that it admits of our grouping under one head several progressions which must otherwise receive separate explanations or be classed as licences. I subjoin a few of these, including the one under discussion :—



I am, &c.,
CLEVELAND WIGAN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

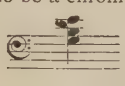
SIR,—Respecting your reviewer's answer to my letter in this month's MUSICAL TIMES relating to my "Gavotte," I write to say that I have received a note on the subject from a professional gentleman—with whom I am not personally acquainted, but whose name is not unknown to me—who kindly gives me free permission to publish it, on condition that only his initials be given. I therefore, sir, enclose you a copy of the letter, and should feel obliged by your courtesy in allowing it to appear in your next number.

I remain, Sir,
Yours truly,
June 8th. ALFRED B. ALLEN.

[COPY.]

"Dear Sir,—The writer of the notice on your 'Gavotte' does not seem to be aware that great composers like Mendelssohn have used the same notation as you have for the chord in question. I will only point out in Mendelssohn's 'Andante' and 'Allegro,' Op. 16, No. 1, the following two bars towards the end of the 'Allegro':—

I consider your chord to be a chromatic one derived from



"Yours faithfully,
"Alfred B. Allen, Esq." "E. S."

P.S.—I notice the same notation for the chord in question in Meyerbeer's opera "Il Crociato."

"WHEN SHOULD 'BENEDICITE' BE SUNG?"

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—My best thanks are due to your correspondent, Mr. Richings, for his courteous reply to my inquiry.

I was aware that in the Prayer-Book of 1549 the "Benedicite" was ordered to be sung during Lent; but as the rubric was rescinded soon after (in 1551), of course it would not be binding now. The old Sarum custom of using it from Septuagesima to Easter, in the week of Pentecost, and on the Sundays of Advent, is much more reasonable; and the only amendment which I could suggest upon this, would be to make it from Septuagesima to Lent instead of Easter, and to include Saints' Days.

The Canticle is certainly a noble one, and quite worthy as a Song of Praise to take its place by the side of the "Te Deum." That it is not used more frequently is owing, I imagine, not to its inferiority, or to its being less jubilant in character, but to the "Te Deum" being specially addressed to the Three Persons of the Trinity, and therefore more suitable for festival use.

This is one of the questions which, I trust, Convocation will take into consideration ere long. In the meantime, let me commiserate with your correspondent that he has no opportunity of hearing the "Benedicite" in his own cathedral, and remind him that "great wheels move slowly." This is not the case, I believe, in our metropolitan cathedral, where "Benedicite" is often sung, I am told, and with great effect.

Believe me, yours faithfully,
A. S. C. (Choirmaster).

THE "MACBETH" MUSIC.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—My attention has just been called to Mr. Cummings's interesting and valuable letter on the "Macbeth" Music which appeared in a late number of Concordia.

Some years ago I read an essay written by Dr. Rimbault, which convinced me that this music was in all probability brought to its present state of perfection by Henry Purcell.

My theatrical experience enables me to supply one link to the chain of Dr. Rimbault's argument, but the point to which I am about to allude is evidently familiar to Mr. Cummings.

In Drury Lane and Covent Garden there is always a musical director whose business it is not only to compose the music if required, but to modify any existing scores when an old piece is revived. When Mr. Macready revived "Acis and Galatea," he was not satisfied with its commencement at the rural festival, but brought Galatea from the sea, led on by Cupid in the air, while a company of Tritons sang from beneath the waves. This involved an addition to the libretto, and a good deal of new music, which was composed by Mr. Tom Cooke. If "Acis and Galatea" had existed at that time only in MS., and had then been published anonymously, we might now be attributing to Mr. Tom Cooke the whole of Handel's composition.

In the various editions of the "Macbeth" Music there is evidence of frequent change, and, unless I am much mistaken, of gradual progress. I recollect that at Drury Lane there was a variation made from Dr. Boyce's version in the chorus "Put in all these." The treble was made to leave off alone, instead of all the voices coming in together.

My belief is that the "Macbeth" Music went through a process of alteration and improvement for many years, till it was finally fixed in its present state by Henry Purcell.

I think that some instrumental music by Locke to "Macbeth" is still extant, and if this was written after Purcell's vocal music, it would be quite in rule to attribute the whole to Locke. Sir Henry Bishop put his name to "Who is Sylvia," but he preceded his own name by the words, "Adapted and arranged from Ravenscroft and Morley," and he added the dates 1614 and 1595. But no one seems to have put his name to the "Macbeth" Music.

Mr. Julian Marshall, in his very temperate letter on the other side, asks if Mr. Cummings can point out a resemblance in any of Purcell's music to the music in "Macbeth."

I beg respectfully to call his attention to the similarity between the termination of the chorus in "King Arthur," "Brave souls to be renowned in story," and that of the "Macbeth" chorus, "We fly by night, 'mong troops of spirits."

If I recollect rightly, this similarity, which is very striking, is pointed out by Dr. Rimbault in his preface to an edition of the "Macbeth" Music, published, I believe, by Addison.

I remain, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
C. D. COLLET.

BEDFORD.—The second concert of the tenth season of the Amateur Musical Society was given on Tuesday evening the 13th ult., in the New Corn Exchange. Mendelssohn's music to the Midsummer Night's Dream, with occasional extracts from the play, and portions of Loreley, formed the principal items of the programme. The band was materially assisted by a number of professional players, conducted by Mr. Diemer. The solos were well sung by Miss Sophie Ferrari and Mrs. Skipwith.

BIRMINGHAM.—The Camp Hill Amateur Musical Society gave a performance of Judas Maccabæus, in the Presbyterian Church, on Tuesday evening, May 30. The principal vocalists were Miss Mary Plant, Miss Adeline Lawrence, Mr. H. G. Coleman, and Mr. W. Pountney. Miss Rosa Plant accompanied on the organ, and Mr. T. G. Locker conducted.

Mr. J. B. Gaunt and Mr. S. Fisher accompanied, and Mr. George Shinn conducted.

BUXTON, DERBYSHIRE.—The opening Concert of the season, under the direction of Mr. Julian Adams, took place on Thursday evening the 22nd ult., when the excellence of the programme well warranted the very large attendance. The vocalists were Madame Sinico, Madame Demeric-Lablache, and Signor Campobello, all of whom met with their usual success. One of the principal features of the evening was the performance of Beethoven's Concerto Op. 56 in C, the solo parts being played by Messrs. Adams, Witte, and Walton in a manner which was highly appreciated by lovers of the artistic. Mr. Julian Adams, who loses no opportunity to reciprocate the confidence reposed in him by his many patrons, may well be congratulated upon the great success of the first concert of the season.

CANTERBURY.—Handel's Oratorio, Samson, was performed by Dr. Longhurst's choir, on the 14th ult. Miss Anna Williams, Miss Joyce Maas, Mr. Cummings, Mr. Wadmore, and Mr. Rhodes were the solo vocalists. The choruses were well rendered. Mr. T. Morrow played the trumpet obbligato in "Let the bright Seraphim," and the performance altogether was highly appreciated. Dr. Longhurst conducted.

CORK.—The grand organ erected in the Church of SS. Peter and Paul was solemnly inaugurated on the 5th ult. The instrument was built by Messrs. Bryceson, of London, at a cost of about two thousand pounds. The service consisted of Pontifical High Mass and a sermon appropriate to the occasion. The vocal music selected for performance by a choir of nearly a hundred voices, trained and conducted by Mons. De Prins, and led by the quartett from the cathedral choir, consisted of the "Kyrie" and "Gloria" of Gounod's new Mass, Angeli Custodes, the "Credo" and "Agnus Dei" of the same composer's Messe Solennelle, and Webbe's Sanctus in G. Organ Solos by Mons. De Prins were also given, displaying the power and resource of the organ. After the first Gospel had been chanted, the Rev. Canon Coghlan entered the pulpit and preached a masterly discourse.

ENNISKILLEN, CO. FERMANAGH, IRELAND.—The last Concert of the second session was given on Wednesday evening, May 31st, in the Protestant Hall, by Mr. Arnold's Choral Class. The first part of the programme consisted of Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm. The quintett was exceedingly well rendered by Miss Bagot, Messrs. Arnold, Gunning, Black, and Cooney. The second part was secular. Mr. Arnold conducted.

ERDINGTON.—The Amateur Musical Society gave an Open Rehearsal of Judas Maccabæus in the Public Hall on Saturday evening the 10th ult. The whole of the solos and concerted music were given by members of the Society, and the performance of the Oratorio was most satisfactory. Mr. T. G. Locker conducted.

ERITH.—On Tuesday, the 13th ult., a musical competition, or "Bee," took place in the Public Hall, under the superintendence of Mr. Richard Lemaire. There were eight different classes for competitors, including examinations in harmony, singing, and playing at sight, &c., and a valuable collection of prizes, comprising volumes of classical music, were distributed. The judges were Mr. W. S. Hoyte, Mr. C. Warwick Jordan, and Mr. Richard Lemaire.

EXETER.—The members of the Madrigal Society gave a Concert on the 1st ult., in the Royal Public Rooms, before a large audience. Mornington's "Here in cool grot," Pearsall's madrigal "Purple glow the forest mountains," W. Macfarren's "You stole my love," Leslie's "Lullaby of life," Mendelssohn's ever welcome "Lark," Webbe's "When winds breathe soft," and Sullivan's "Hush thee, my babie" were excellently rendered. Mr. Heater conducted.——On the 20th ult. the Oratorio Society performed a new sacred Cantata, entitled Out of the Depths, the composition of Mr. G. W. Lyon, the Conductor of the Society. The solos were rendered by Miss Emily Moore, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and Mr. Thurley Beale, and the work was received with much favour by the audience. A selection from Rossini's Stabat Mater concluded the concert.

GUISBOROUGH.—The new organ erected in the parish church, built by Messrs. Harrison and Harrison, of Durham and London, was formally opened on Thursday afternoon, the 15th ult., by Mr. C. Bradley, from St. Paul's Church, and Mr. Clarke, the organist. The Archdeacon of Churchend preached an excellent sermon, and a collection was made at the conclusion of the service in aid of the organ fund. The choir sang Dr. Hayne's anthem, "The Lord descended from above," in excellent style, the duet being charmingly rendered by Miss Taunton and Miss Clarke.

ILKLEY.—A highly creditable performance of Mendelssohn's Elijah was given on the 14th ult., in the College Hall, by the Choral Society connected with the Institution, assisted by vocalists from Leeds, Bradford, Otley, &c. The solos were intrusted to the following vocalists: Miss Pauline Haddock, soprano; Miss Whitaker, contralto; Mr. B. Johnson, tenor; Mr. T. Law, bass. The principal instrumentalists were Messrs. G. Haddock, W. H. Cole, and T. Turner. The Principal of the College, Mr. E. Sewell, M.A., conducted.

LEEDS.—The Town Hall Organ Recitals given by Dr. Spark (the Borough organist) on Tuesday afternoons, have been uniformly well attended, and highly appreciated. On Whit Monday and Tuesday special Recitals took place, in the presence of nearly a thousand persons. The programmes, all of which were carefully selected for the display of the qualities of the instrument, have, nevertheless, appealed powerfully to the lovers of classical music.

LIVERPOOL.—A large audience assembled at the Institute on Saturday, the 10th ult., when the fiftieth open rehearsal of the Societa Armonica was given, under the conductorship of Mr. Armstrong, with Mr. Lawson as Leader. The instrumental works rendered were Mozart's overture, "Il Diretto," Haydn's Symphony, No. 12, Andre Romberg's andante "Sinfonia alla Turca," and Scotson Clark's "March aux Flambeaux." The vocalists were Messrs. Edwards and Yearsley. The various pieces were rendered in a very satisfactory manner.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.—The Philharmonic Society gave an Invitation Concert to the subscribers and their friends on the 17th February. The programme included Brahms's Song of Destiny, a new part song, "Night," by the Conductor of the Society, Mendelssohn's music to A Midsummer Night's Dream, and selections from Samson and Israel in Egypt. On Good Friday night Bach's Passion (St. Matthew) was performed for the second time in Melbourne. Miss Christian, Mrs. Smythe, Mr. Mavor, Mr. Newbery, and Mr. T. B. Brown were the principal vocalists. Mr. Henry Curtis played the obbligato solos. The choruses were rendered with great spirit. Mr. E. King was principal violin, Mr. G. Peake presided at the organ, and Mr. J. Summers conducted.

NEWLAND.—The Annual Festival of the choirs in this district was celebrated in the Parish church, on the 15th ult. The surpliced choirs occupied the chancel, the other choirs being placed in the side chapels and front seats in the nave. The special psalms were the eighth, eighty-fourth, and ninety-sixth, taken to single chants by Monk, Aldrich, and Barrow. Tallis's festal responses were used, the service being intoned by the Rev. H. T. Hoitt, vicar of Lydbrook, and the anthem was Mendelssohn's "Judge me, O God." The sermon was preached by the Rev. E. Machen, vicar of Staunton. The service throughout was well rendered, the responses being taken up with precision, and the pointing of the psalms being exceptionally good, reflecting much credit on the choirmaster, Mr. Brind, of Gloucester. Mr. Johnson, of Clearwell, presided at the organ.

NORTH BERWICK, N.B.—Mr. Frank Bates has lately been presented by a deputation from the North Berwick Musical Society with an exceedingly handsome writing and stationery desk combined, in Coromandel wood, with silver mountings, bearing the following inscription—"Presented to Mr. Frank Bates, by the members of the North Berwick Musical Society, as a mark of their esteem and appreciation of his services as their conductor."

NORWICH.—The tenth Concert given by the Norfolk and Norwich Musical Union took place on the 1st ult., in St. Andrew's Hall, when Dr. Bunnett's Cantata, Lora, was given for the first time in public, with great success. The solo vocalists were Mrs. Arthur R. Bullard, Miss Emily Harcourt, Mr. H. J. Minns, and Mr. W. N. Smith. A warm reception was accorded to the aria "White waxen star of memory long ago," very expressively sung by Mrs. Bullard; and the trio, "Oh, ask me if the roses love." At the conclusion of the Cantata, the composer was enthusiastically greeted. The second part consisted of miscellaneous pieces, which were well rendered. Dr. Bunnett conducted, Mr. Wilkins was leader of the band, and Mr. Walter Lain presided at the organ.

OXFORD.—On the 16th ult. a Concert took place in the Hall of Queen's College. The first part consisted of Barnett's Ancient Mariner; the second part being miscellaneous. The solos were taken by Masters Cooke and Basson, Mr. R. T. Marshall, Mr. W. Pierson, Mr. C. H. Hodges, and Mr. A. T. Tuckwell. Mr. T. W. Dodds conducted. ——On the 17th ult. the University Club gave a Morning Concert in Wadham College Hall. The programme comprised instrumental compositions by Mendelssohn, Beethoven, Mozart, &c., and vocal pieces by Brahms and Schubert. Mdlle. Sophie Löwe was the vocalist. ——The Philharmonic Society gave a Morning Concert on the 19th ult. in the Sheldonian Theatre. Schumann's Paradise and the Peri formed the first part; the second part comprising Mendelssohn's Overture Hebrides, Weber's Jubilee Overture, &c. The soloists were Mdlle. Sophie Löwe, Mrs. H. Blake, Miss Enriquez, Mr. W. Shakespeare, and Mr. H. S. Howell. Mr. Taylor conducted. The Concert was very successful.

PARKSTONE, near BOURNEMOUTH.—On Wednesday, the 14th ult., an Organ Recital, in aid of the funds for the permanent Organ for the church, was given by Mr. Alfred J. Eyre, organist of S. Peter's church, Vauxhall, London. The Instrument built by Mr. Pulbrook for Captain F. Sandys Dugmore, of the 64th Regiment, is erected on a platform at one end of the large Parish School Room, and can thus be made available for Recitals, Concerts, &c. The programme consisted of selections from the works of Beethoven, Schubert, Heller, Molique, Bach, Smart, Mendelssohn, Rink, and Spohr, all of which were well rendered, Bach's Prelude and Fugue in D being re-demanded.——On Monday the 19th ult. an Instrumental Concert was given in the same room by several local amateurs; the violin playing of Mr. Sanders, of Poole, and the performance of Mendelssohn's Ruy Blas Overture being specially worthy of praise. Mr. Eyre contributed several solos on the organ.

PHILADELPHIA.—At the last Concert of the Orpheus Club, which was given at the Musical Fund Hall, the selection consisted of English and German Glees. The club was assisted by Mr. Richard Hoffman, the pianist, of New York, who created a great sensation, playing Mendelssohn's "Capriccioso," Chopin's "Polonaise," Op. 53, and his own admired composition, "Solitude," and brilliant Rondo "Cascarilla." The concert was a decided success.

RIPON.—On Monday evening the 29th May, the members of the Musical Society held their second Public Rehearsal in the Town Hall. The solo parts were sustained by Mrs. Eckersley, Master Cattle, Miss Empsall, and Mr. J. Thursfield. The Rev. J. R. Lunn, of Martin-cum-Grafton, presided at the harmonium, and rendered very efficient service. The programme opened with Mendelssohn's Athalie, which was very creditably performed. The second part consisted of glees, part-songs, duets, and solos. The Misses Robinson presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. E. J. Crow conducted.

SITTINGBOURNE.—On Thursday the 15th ult., the new Organ in the Wesleyan Chapel was opened with a Recital by Mr. E. G. Meers, of London. The instrument is by Hunter, of Kennington Road, and has two full manuals and pedal organ. In the evening the choir sang a selection of choruses, &c., from the Messiah and Creation. Mr. S. Neal Mobbs conducted, and Mr. Meers presided at the organ.

STAFFORD.—Mr. Inglis Bervon, organist and choirmaster of St. Mary's Church, gave a Concert in the Shire Hall on Tuesday evening the 30th May. The programme was varied in character, and carried through in a satisfactory manner. The vocalists were Miss Catherine Pickering, Mrs. Inglis Bervon, Mr. Senior, and Mr. Inglis Bervon. Part-songs were given by members of the Amateur Choral Society, and operatic selections by the band of the Society, under the leadership of Mr. H. Deakin.

TEDDINGTON.—A sacred concert was given on the 6th ult., when the first part of the programme was devoted to selections from the Oratorio Ruth, by G. Tolhurst; and the second part to selections from Handel's Samson. The Soloists were Mrs. Tucker, Miss Lizzie Dunham, Mrs. Neale, Mr. Bennett, Mr. Joseph Neale, and Mr. Sear. The solos were well rendered; and the choruses throughout gave great satisfaction. Mr. Dunham was the leader; and Mr. George Tolhurst conducted.

WEYBRIDGE.—An Instrumental quintett and vocal Concert was given at the mansion of W. B. James, Esq., Heathfield, on Saturday morning the 24th ult., for the benefit of Mr. H. P. G. Brooke (Organist and Director of the Choir of St. James's). The programme was well selected, and the various pieces were excellently rendered. The vocalists were Mrs. Alexander Wilson, Miss Churchill, the Misses Vickers, Doyne C. Bell, Esq., and C. Lloyd Morgan, Esq.; and the instrumentalists, Herr Deichmann (first violin), J. A. Morgan, Esq. (second violin), J. H. Wallis, Esq. (first tenor), Herr Borschchitzky (second tenor), and W. B. James, Esq. (violoncello).

WREXHAM.—The fourth Festival of the Deanery Choral Union took place in the Parish Church on Monday afternoon the 19th ult. The number of choirs was less than at previous festivals, but a large body of the Nave Choir, from the Cathedral at Chester, and some of the lay clerks were engaged to help them through the service. Mr. Cuzner conducted, and Mr. Armstrong, organist of Gresford, officiated at the organ. The sermon was preached by the Very Rev. the Dean of St. Asaph. At the conclusion of the service a collection was made in aid of the expenses of the Choral Union.——The Art Treasures Exhibition, under the patronage of Her Majesty, and for which gigantic preparations are being made, will be opened early in the present month. The organ, which is being erected by Messrs. Gray & Davison, is a very large one, consisting of 5 claviers, 50 stops, and 2,500 pipes. Mr. Edwin Harris, Organist of St. Mark's, Wrexham, and St. Mary's, Bersham, has been engaged to give two organ recitals each day during the three months the Exhibition will be open. Mr. John Thomas, Harpist to Her Majesty, is the Musical Director. The orchestra will hold 500 persons.

THE REV. THOMAS HELMORE'S

MANUAL OF PLAIN SONG.

NOW PUBLISHED.

An addition to the series of Works of Plain Song and Accompaniments, forming the several parts of this Manual, has just been brought out under the title of the "SECOND APPENDIX TO THE ACCOMPANYING HARMONIES OF THE BRIEF DIRECTORY."

8vo., Paper Cover, Two Shillings.

It will be found of great service to all who desire suitable harmonies, instrumental or vocal, or both, for use with the Psalter and Canticles Noted. It supplies a want long felt with regard to many of the Chants, as also to the fifth and sixth "Te Deum" in the second set of the Canticles, for which no corresponding harmonized arrangement has, till now, been provided. A short preface, brief general directions, and copious information as to sources from which its various portions are derived, add greatly to its utility and interest. The numbering of the various Forms of the Tones, and their several settings, as well as the references to the different Psalms and Canticles to which any one of them is set in the Plain Song books, are clear, and will add to the facility and interest with which the entire Manual (now wanting only the third Appendix to the Psalter and its Accompanying Harmonies for its completion) will be practically applied to the varying wants of Organists, Choirs, and Congregations. It is accented throughout in correspondence with the Psalter and Canticles Accented.

The fuller and more elaborate Accompanying Harmonies to the Canticles Noted, of which the two arrangements of the "Te Deum" from Baini and Alfieri; and the "Magnificat" from Orlando di Lasso, and Palestrina, are specimens, will form, when completed, an additional and supplementary volume for use in skilful choirs.

London: Novello, Ewer and Co.

Two Vols., cloth, gilt lettered, price 7s. 6d. each.

THE LONDON MUSICAL SEASON.

BY HENRY C. LUNN.

No greater proof of the change which has taken place in the musical feeling of this country could be adduced than the fact that at one period the Italian Opera almost exclusively absorbed the attention of so-called lovers of the art, and that in the present day, although we have two establishments devoted to the lyrical drama, the progress of music is rather impeded than assisted by their existence. That the blind worship of the vocalists has mainly led to this result can scarcely admit of a doubt, the feeble operas written for the display of certain voices having so far supplanted the artistic creations which depend for their effect upon a perfect representation of the entire work that tickets are eagerly purchased, when established favourites warble, at an advanced price, without even a thought of the opera to be performed; and persons who used to frequent the pit are crowded out of their seats by the accession of aristocratic stalls, and compelled to look from a height at the brilliant assemblage which represents the "musical season." It can be no matter of wonder, therefore, that as the standard of art is lowered at the Opera-house it is raised in the Concert-room; and that the latter now takes the lead in guiding public taste is sufficiently evidenced by the circumstance of the Wagner Society having forced on lessees the necessity of producing "Lohengrin" and "Tannhäuser," in spite of the well-known opposition of some of the principal vocalists. Such a reform, once commenced, is not likely to stop; but if classical operatic works are to be adequately presented in this country, we are convinced that a wholesome and well-organized opposition must be commenced; for although, like all despots when sorely pressed, those in present power may yield occasional concessions, it is not to be expected that they will ever disregard a rich but inartistic majority in order to conciliate a poor but artistic minority.

At the Royal Italian Opera we certainly have had two productions which reflect credit upon the lessee; but both may be said to have been wrung from him by the pressure of public opinion. The performance of "Tannhäuser" in an establishment devoted to the glorification of prime donne, and with a chorus more accustomed to Italian than German Opera, received as much justice as could be expected under the circumstances. Most of the solo parts were cast to competent vocalists, and the scenery—with the exception of the "Hill of Venus," about as conventional a pantomime ballet scene as can possibly be imagined—may fairly be praised throughout. We can scarcely believe that this will be a favourite opera with the singers; but if it should become a favourite with the public, there can be little doubt that it will be frequently given, and vocalists will thus receive their first lesson in humility. Wagner may be a tyrant, but it must be remembered that composers have too long been ruled over by those who should be their loyal subjects; and if he teach them their real place in the artistic kingdom, we can readily forgive him for a little excess of zeal in carrying out so salutary a reform. We have already expressed our opinion upon Mr. Gye's other production, Verdi's "Aïda," a gaudy spectacle which, as it belongs to no recognized school, we may presume to be Egyptian. With such a heroine as Madame Patti, this work may form an occasional attraction next season, but we doubt whether it will be anxiously inquired for either by the subscribers or the public. There is little else to record of any importance at this establishment during the season. No first appearance has been more than a tolerable success; but Mdlle. Albani has materially advanced in public favour, whilst Mdlle. Thalberg, who has been most perseveringly put forward in the best parts, is still considered as merely "promising."

If the report circulated last autumn that Mr. Mapleson had taken Drury Lane Theatre for this year be true, the lessee must have had wonderful power in foretelling the coming "winter of very great severity," which, as he stated in his prospectus, "completely put a stop at times to building operations," and had much to do in preventing the completion of his "Grand National Opera House." Under these circumstances he may perhaps be excused for introducing no novelty, and falling back upon a répertoire which is always safe. We cannot but think, however, that in selecting from the programme he materially underrates the taste of the public, else why should he persistently keep such a work as Beethoven's "Fidelio" out of the bills until he is urged to perform it in consequence, as he frankly admits, of "numerous applications." If the patrons of the Opera know better what they want than the lessee, we shall be glad if they will occasionally make known their wishes in this manner; and it may then be possible that, in deference to "numerous applications," next year Cherubini's "Medea," which is constantly promised but never given, may be revived. To compensate for the absence of any novelty, however, we have had some stock operas very finely cast, "Don Giovanni" more especially, and M. Faure has proved a tower of strength in the company. Mdlle. Titiens has returned to England with her voice increased in power and certainty, and Mdlle. Varesi has been received with marked favour during the season. Madame Christine Nilsson has again been a powerful attraction, her singing being as satisfactory as ever, especially in the parts of Alice, in "Robert le Diable," and Elsa, in "Lohengrin." The gap in the tenor department is not likely to be filled by Signor Stagno, who has merely creditably passed through the season, and will be probably heard of no more.

We could readily forgive the Philharmonic Society for ignoring the claims of our native composers, if strenuous efforts had been made, as in the olden times, for procuring the highest-class works of foreigners; but when we find that the season has been chiefly occupied in reproducing compositions which are already known, or in presenting such an elaborate and pretentious work as the "Dramatic Symphony" of Rubinstein, we cannot but believe that the Society has abandoned its true mission and entered the lists as a mere concert-giving Association without any definite notion save the idea of making the performance pay. Even if it be found necessary to exhibit a "lion" pianist, it by no means follows that compositions not written for his instrument should occupy an important place in a programme hitherto presumed to be devoted to the creations of genius; and we shall be glad indeed to find in the prospectus for next season that the Directors have resolved, at least partially, to resume that policy which shed such a lustre upon the Society in its early days both at home and abroad.

Nothing need be said of the Sacred Harmonic Society, save that the usual number of concerts have been given, and the usual number of works performed. But little appeal is made by this institution to the general public; and if the subscribers, therefore, are satisfied with the reproduction of the same compositions year after year, there can be no just cause for complaint. The Crystal Palace, as our columns have testified, has honestly fulfilled the promises in the prospectus; and if Mr. Manns would only discountenance any attempt to meddle with the intention of composers, by adapting and re-arranging works the form of which has been stamped by its author, we should have nothing but praise for his laudable efforts to promote the spread of really good music. The Alexandra Palace has made a rapid stride in the right direction during the season. The revival of Handel's two almost unknown Oratorios, "Esther" and "Susanna," would alone have entitled the directors, and especially Mr. Weist Hill, upon whom has devolved the heavy responsibility of producing such elaborate works, to the thanks of all music-lovers; but, apart from these compositions, the programmes have latterly been in the highest degree interesting, and we may now confidently anticipate a brilliant future from an establishment which has manifested both the will and the power to produce the great works in art.

As we by no means expected that any musical benefit would accrue from the establishment of the Westminster Aquarium, we confess to feeling no astonishment at the result. On the opening day, as we have already recorded, the coldness of the audience during the concert was something remarkable; and although attempts have been made since then to attract the musical public to so unfavourable a locality, the real success will no doubt be the adjoining Theatre and the Skating Rink, with a "promenade concert" in the building for those who wish to walk about and see the fish. Meantime, we believe that we are correct in asserting that Dr. Sullivan has resigned his post as Musical Director.

During the season two works have been produced —one representing the old and the other the new German school—each with adequate interpreters, both vocal and instrumental, and each conducted by an artist whose heart was in the cause he advocated. We allude to the "Mass in B minor" of Bach, and the "Legend of St. Elizabeth" of the Abbé Liszt. Now, what was the result? On the first representation of Bach's Mass an enthusiastic audience applauded every number of the work as if it were a revelation in music; on the second performance every seat in the hall was filled, and the excitement could scarcely be repressed within reasonable bounds. The "Legend of St. Elizabeth," on the contrary, fell flatly upon a large body of listeners fully prepared to receive with favour a composition which had been lauded by its admirers as one of the choicest specimens of the "higher development" of creative art. If we are to draw a moral from this fact, it is that works which represent form and power are ever fresh, and that neither apathy nor opposition can crush them; whilst those which have the negative merit of abolishing the old models without creating new ones, can gain but the suffrages of those who, fancying it an age of art revolution, are content, as in political revolutions, to accept the most prominent opponents of law and order as the most enlightened apostles of the coming creed.

Some time ago, in mentioning the concert of one of the sworn disciples of the modern German school, we drew attention to the fact of his analytical programmes instructing the critics as to what should and should not be said respecting the compositions performed. On the appearance of Herr Rubinstein during the past season the principle seems to have been followed by many of the critics themselves, the admirers of the impulsive eccentric school not being content with recording the effect produced upon themselves, but deeming it necessary to strengthen their remarks by casting slurs upon all those who do not agree with them. That hero-worship should partially blind the judgment of those who consider themselves the elect is scarcely to be wondered at; but those who have preserved their freedom of thought are not to be ridden over by any art Juggernaut; and it is well that a protest should at once be made against a system which is aimed at the very root of free and independent criticism. Herr Rubinstein is a representative man, and with many faults has genius enough to command a hearing wherever he appears. Were his perfect mechanism and consummate mastery over every gradation of tone controlled by that reverence for his mission which places the art above the artist, he would be everything that his most earnest admirers claim for him; but when we find that many portions of the works he performs are simply used as vehicles for the display of the executant, and that his "new readings," as they are termed, derive much of their novelty from their flatly contradicting the expressed intentions of the composer, we cannot but feel that the wonder called forth by his playing is often created at the expense of the art, and that the eulogistic criticism of those who are carried away by his exaggerated style too much resembles the praise of the courtier, who is not only in ecstacies with the virtues of his lord and master, but even in his vices sees something to admire. That in spite of the meteoric appearance and temporary adoration of sensational artists, however, there is a public to admire the less demonstrative school is sufficiently evidenced by the large attendance at the Monday Popular Concerts, and at the many unpretending musical entertainments given by well-established professors during the season, the quiet but, in their way, perfect performances of Mr. Henry Leslie's Choir having been, as usual, amongst the most enjoyable concerts of the year.

The "Musical Association for the Investigation and Discussion of Subjects connected with the Art and Science of Music" seems to have been given over to the mathematicians. Papers involving much thought have been read; but we scarcely think that the Society appeals forcibly to either creative or executive musicians. No doubt it is interesting to inquire into our "perception of the direction of a source of sound," or to listen to a discourse on the "vibrations and resonance of columns of air," but all this has in reality nothing to do with music; and if the Council of the Society think with us that some practical result should be achieved by these meetings, a vigorous course of action will be at once necessary. The Association has already enrolled the names of several eminent men; and if papers on really useful subjects be desired, there are many, we think, who would be both ready and willing to be something more than mere ornamental members.

The opening of the "National Training School for Music" must be mentioned as one of the events of the season; and as it can no longer be spoken of as a foe to the Royal Academy of Music, we presume it must be spoken of as a friend. It is difficult indeed to understand why a separate establishment should be organized for the reception of those very scholarships which the older Institution has been for years endeavouring to obtain; but as some of the most influential professors of the Training School are also attached to the Royal Academy, the amicable working of the two seminaries may be confidently relied upon. Meantime, we hope that the eloquence of the Lord Mayor and other speakers at the Mansion House Meeting on the necessity of encouraging musical education in this country may draw attention to the strenuous exertions of the Committee of Management of the Royal Academy of Music, which have resulted in the building of a new Concert-room and the enlargement of those premises in Tenterden Street around which cling some of the dearest recollections of the many professors who have received their education there; for if two National Schools of Music are to be supported, it appears strange indeed that not only aristocratic patronage but money influence should be exclusively bestowed upon one.

Those mongrel entertainments which used to be termed "Benefit Concerts" are now fast disappearing, their decline no doubt dating from the discovery of the fact that they were no "benefit" either to the art or to the artist. The performances of orchestral and choral works, and the Recitals of Chamber-music, which have arisen on the ruins of the former fashionable gatherings, so thoroughly represent at the present time the real place of music in this country, that both executants and composers should be watchful—if they care for anything beyond their mere personal advancement—that those to whom they submit the result of their talents should not only be amused, but, as Handel said, "made better" by what they hear. England is gradually shaking itself free from the reproach of not being a musical nation; but let us not rush to the opposite extreme, and go wild with excitement at every composer and performer—native or foreign—presented to our notice. However hyperbolical may be some criticism, whether verbal or printed, upon aspirants for our favour, there is always an under current of wholesome opinion which should at least be respected. The fashionable lounger and the impulsive enthusiast are equally dangerous elements in a concert-room. Healthy music cannot flourish save with healthy surroundings; and it will be well for the progress of the art in this, as in every other, country when the words salon and virtuoso are banished for ever from the musical vocabulary.

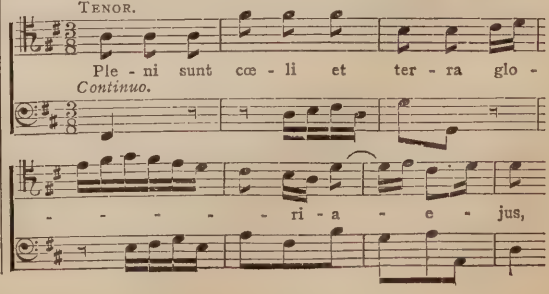
From one point of view the "Sanctus" must be considered the grandest and most wonderful portion of this stupendous Mass. Not only is it in all probability the most amply-developed setting of the words ever written—it is in three movements, which contain altogether no less than 316 bars—but it is more elaborate in its treatment of the voices than any other part of the work. The "Sanctus" and "Pleni sunt cœli" are for a six-part chorus—two trebles, two altos, tenor, and bass—while the "Osanna" is a double chorus in eight parts, with sometimes nearly as many more real parts in the orchestra.

The first movement of the "Sanctus" has no tempo indicated; such indications with Bach are indeed the exception rather than the rule. It is evident, however, from the music that it should be an andante maestoso. The opening subject is the following:—

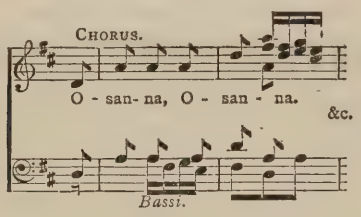
The accompaniments, which, to save space, are omitted in the above quotation, are for strings, three oboes, three trumpets, and drums; and as the three upper string-parts have mostly, and the three trumpets often, independent parts, much of the music is written in twelve real parts. A magnificent effect is produced in the course of this movement by a stately progression of the basses, with leaps of an octave against holding chords for the upper voice-parts, and moving triplets for the strings. The passage is so fine that, although difficult to compress, the first two bars must be given.

In addition to what is here quoted, the three oboes have an independent figure of accompaniment, while the trumpets and drums mark the accent on the first two crotchets of each alternate bar. This splendid passage is continued for seven bars, when it is succeeded by a scarcely less imposing sequence of sevenths. The grandeur of the whole movement will not soon be forgotten by those who have had the good fortune to hear it. After forty-seven bars, a close in F sharp minor leads to the second movement, an amply-developed fugue of 121 bars to the words "Pleni sunt cœli," &c., on the following subject:—



The other voices enter one after another, a curious point being that the first alto and second soprano are introduced simultaneously, with the entire subject given in thirds by the two voices. Thus far the chorus has been accompanied by the organ only, but when the bass, which is the last to make its appearance, enters with the theme an octave lower than in our quotation, the full orchestra is suddenly introduced with the most brilliant effect. For spirit and animation this fugue, as will be imagined from its subject, is a worthy pendant to the "Cum sancto spiritu" which concludes the "Gloria." Though less extended, it is by no means inferior in interest. Some of Bach's finest trumpet effects (now, alas! as already mentioned, impracticable) will be met with in this chorus. In several places we find sustained shakes on high notes, which would be magnificent if they could only be played; and near the end of the fugue the first trumpet imitates the soprano in the fourth above, at one bar's distance, in a masterly manner. This chorus ends with a full close in D, instead of leading, like the preceding, immediately into the next number.

It would be difficult to find a parallel in music to the eight-part "Osanna" which follows, unless it be in the "Passion according to St. Matthew," or in that wonderful though little-known double-chorus, "Nun ist das Heil," published in the tenth volume of the Bach Society's edition. Though the movement is of course not in eight real parts throughout, and the two choirs are often used antiphonally, the polyphonic writing is at times astounding, and more than one passage might be quoted, did space permit, which is in fourteen and even in sixteen parts. The chorus begins for unaccompanied voices in unison.



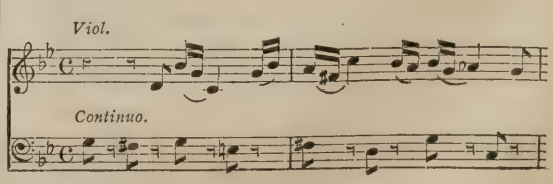
Much use is made of both the vocal and instrumental features of the above short extract. The semiquaver figure given first to the basses and then to the flutes is taken up successively by oboes, violins, and trumpets, after which the chorus enters with seven-part harmony, the first theme being now allotted to the bass voices. After a half cadence on A, a fugued subject is announced by the first alto, and taken up by the other parts of the first choir.

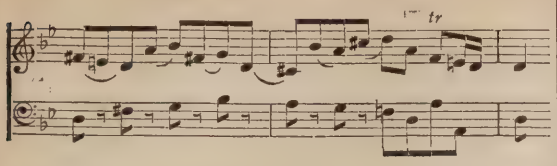
While the first choir continues its contrapuntal work the second enters from time to time in unison with the phrase "Osanna in excelsis" given in the last quotation but one, first in the original key of D, then in B minor, and again in G major, with splendid effect; after which the second choir takes up the fugued theme in the key of A, and the disposition of the parts is reversed, the first choir now having the unison passage in the keys of A, F sharp minor, and D successively. It is impossible to continue the analysis of the movement minutely from this point, for the interlacing and combinations of the voice parts become more and more elaborate, gradually working up to a most triumphant climax, after which a symphony of thirty-two bars ends this marvellous chorus.

The most extraordinary feature of this imposing "Sanctus" still remains to be mentioned. By those unacquainted with the music it might easily be supposed from the analysis just given that while wonderfully ingenious in its construction, the effect of so many different parts must necessarily be unclear, or at least sound laboured, and "smell of the lamp." As a matter of actual fact, however, when properly rendered, it is as distinct and intelligible—I will venture to add as melodious—as any of the lightest works of the Italian school; and herein lies the secret of its enormous power. Never was the art of concealing art more perfectly illustrated than in a great part of this Mass, and in no portion of it more than in the three movements just noticed.

The comparative inferiority, as a whole, of Bach's solo music to his choruses has been already mentioned in the course of these articles, and the tenor air, "Benedictus," suffers more perhaps than almost any other number of the present work from its close proximity to the gigantic movement which has preceded it. It is in B minor, $\frac{3}{4}$, accompanied only by a solo violin and the continuo. It would be little short of an impertinence to speak of the voice part as unvocal, yet it is difficult either to hear or to read this movement without feeling that the tenor singer is treated exactly as if he were another instrument added to the score. It is not necessary to dwell in detail upon this air, because it is certainly one of the weakest movements of the Mass; its chief interest lies in the opportunity it affords to the solo violinist to show a fine tone and an elevated style of performance. The "Osanna" is repeated, according to rule, after this song.

The "Agnus Dei," the last solo in the Mass, is also unmistakably the finest. It is written for an alto voice (G minor, common time), with an accompaniment, frequently employed also by Handel, of violins in unison, basses, and organ. The principal subjects, as mentioned in the first of the present paper, are taken from an alto song in the "Ascension Oratorio," and a comparison of the two settings is of very great interest. In the Oratorio the song is in A minor instead of G minor; the orchestration is the same in both works; but for the Mass not only are considerable alterations made both in the voice part and accompaniments, but the air is compressed by more than one-third—there being in the earlier version 79 bars, and in the later only 49. The violins are here employed nearly throughout in the lower part of their compass, and the harmonies, which are hinted at rather than given (the bass of this movement is not figured in the score), are of peculiar beauty and dignity. The quotation of the first four bars of the opening symphony will show the dignified style of the music:—





In the hands of a fine singer, this whole air is most impressive. The admirable performance of it by Madame Patey was one of the features of the evening, when the Mass was given recently at St. James's Hall.

It is not very easy to see for what reason Bach should have repeated for his "Dona nobis pacem" the chorus "Gratias agimus." The two movements are identical, with the exception of one or two very slight alterations necessitated by the difference of the words. Was there a feeling in the mind of the composer that when the divine peace was granted there was cause for thankfulness on the part of the recipient, and did Bach intend to convey this idea musically? The stately ecclesiastical style of this final fugue is certainly more suited to the text than some of the settings to be met with in the Masses of other composers, which are so lively as to suggest the idea that the worshippers are exceedingly glad to get out of church. As the chorus has been already noticed on its first appearance in the work, it is needless to repeat what was then said.

These articles have extended to far greater length than was designed in commencing them; yet, in laying down my pen, I do so with a feeling that I have done my subject most inadequate justice. Mere verbal description of music must at best be unsatisfactory; and when, as in the present instance, the music is one of the most astonishing productions of human genius, it is more than ordinarily difficult to convey any distinct idea of it to those who do not know it for themselves. To persons who are already familiar with the Mass these articles will present little or nothing that is new; my object in writing them has been to direct the attention of those who have not yet made its acquaintance to one of the most interesting and instructive works in the whole range of music. For the sake of such it may be well to add in conclusion that excellent cheap editions both of the orchestral and vocal scores are published by the eminent firm of Peters, in Leipzig.

P.S.—Since writing the above, I have received a note from a musical friend relative to the first chorus of the "Credo," noticed last month. The writer says: "The subject of the first chorus in the Creed is neither more nor less than the intonation of the Creed—note for note the plain-song music which the clergyman uses to the words 'Credo in unum Deum,' or in the English, 'I believe in one God.' I suppose the age of this intonation is as unknown as that of the music of the 'Sursum corda;' the notes, I believe, are found in the earliest MS."

My informant, whose modesty induces him to withhold his name, is no mean authority on ecclesiastical music, and the fact he has mentioned is of such interest, that it well deserves a note in concluding these articles.

Mr. Frederick Gye, of the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, has, in a letter to the principal newspapers, raised a question respecting the probable success of Mr. Mapleson's "Grand National Opera House," which, it appears to us, concerns only those who have a commercial interest in the undertaking. According to Mr. Gye's calculation, the speculation cannot answer; but Mr. Mapleson, in his reply, proves the contrary; and those who take a pleasure in studying operatic statistics may amuse themselves by arriving at a satisfactory solution of the puzzle. We cannot but think that Mr. Gye was most ill advised in entering into a controversy in which he is, as he freely admits, an "interested critic." Whether there is a fashionable public to support two Italian Opera Houses may be an important problem for the lessees to solve; but artists who have long ceased to believe that either establishment has the slightest bearing upon the progress of music in this country will be tempted to exclaim with Mercutio, "a plague o' both your houses."

It is scarcely perhaps necessary to say that had we not ascertained that musical degrees were never conferred by a Foreign University, we should not have stated the fact. Mendelssohn and several other German artists were not Doctors of Music, although many persons supposed them to be. The author of the epistle addressed to the Musical Times, written on a post-card, and signed "Amateur," accusing us of putting forth "miserable delusions and lies," may perchance be deluded into the belief that in returning to this subject we are replying to his elegant communication, received during the past month; and therefore it is well to say that, although he may think proper, after reading these lines, to apologize for his insulting remarks, our information is solely addressed to those who have expressed their doubts on the matter in sufficiently courteous terms to receive attention.

The rehearsals for the forthcoming Festival at Birmingham are proceeding with vigour, and we understand that most of the new works are in a forward state of preparation. Professor Macfarren's Oratorio, "The Resurrection," is spoken of in the warmest terms by the principals who will be engaged in its interpretation, and the Cantatas by Gade and Cowen are expected to prove highly successful. The Hereford Festival, it is anticipated, will be one of the most remunerative ever given, for not only has an unprecedentedly large number of stewards been secured, but the Corporations of Worcester and Gloucester intend to be present, as a protest against the apology for a Festival organized last year by the Dean of Worcester. In October the Bristol Festival will take place, under the direction of Mr. Charles Hallé. No new work will be performed, but the programme will include Mendelssohn's "Elijah" and "Hymn of Praise," Handel's "Israel in Egypt" and "Messiah," Spohr's "Fall of Babylon," Beethoven's "Engedi," and Verdi's "Requiem."

MOZART'S WORKS.

Of all the great composers there can be little doubt that Mozart was the most prolific. It is indeed probable that the actual number of Haydn's works is larger; but it must be remembered that the composer of the "Creation" lived to the age of seventy-seven, while Mozart died at thirty-five. Yet during this short life he produced, as we know from Ritter von Köchel's thematic Catalogue, at least 626 complete compositions, besides nearly a hundred more or less extensive fragments of others. It is therefore hardly surprising that of this enormous mass of music a considerable proportion should still be entirely unknown. There are more than two hundred works which as yet remain in manuscript, while a large number of those which have been published are so incorrect and incomplete that they can hardly be said to be known at all, as Mozart wrote them.

It will readily be imagined that the publication of a complete and uniform edition of the entire collection of Mozart's compositions must be a truly herculean undertaking—one, indeed, upon which none but a firm of the very first rank could enter with any chance of success. A prospectus now lies before us, issued by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel, of Leipzig, the largest and most eminent music-publishing house in the world, for such an edition. Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel, as many of our readers will be aware, published some ten years ago a complete edition of Beethoven's works, and they are at present engaged upon a similar labour for the works of Mendelssohn. Both of these, though extensive undertakings—the Beethoven edition containing 264 works, while that of Mendelssohn, when completed, will comprise 157—are mere child's play in comparison with an edition of Mozart. It is not merely the number of the works but the extent of many of them which renders the task so colossal. Out of the 626 works given in Köchel's Catalogue, about 540 will be included in this edition, the remainder being either lost, not quite complete, or of doubtful authenticity. These 540 works will be divided into 23 series; and a brief abstract of the contents of each will doubtless prove interesting to our readers. The first seven series comprise the vocal music, viz.: 15 masses, 7 litanies and vespers, 31 miscellaneous pieces of sacred music, 5 cantatas with orchestral accompaniment, 21 operas, 56 airs, trios, quartetts, and choruses with orchestra, 39 songs with piano, and 20 canons. Next come five series of orchestral music, including 41 symphonies, 31 divertimenti and serenades, 21 marches and small orchestral movements, 25 sets of dances, and 21 concertos for a stringed or wind instrument, with orchestral accompaniment. We then have three series of chamber compositions—9 stringed quintetts, 31 stringed quartetts, 3 duets, and 1 trio. The pianoforte works occupy seven more series, divided as follows: 28 concertos, 11 quintetts, quartetts, and trios, 43 sonatas and two sets of variations for piano and violin, 8 pieces for four hands, 21 solo sonatas and fantasias, 15 sets of variations, and 18 smaller piano pieces. The twenty-third series contains 17 sonatas for organ with orchestral accompaniment; and in addition there will be a supplemental series containing the most important incomplete works, such as the "Requiem" and the operas L'Oca del Cairo and Lo Sposo deluso, as well as any of those at present supposed to be lost which may come to light while the edition is in progress.

From the above enumeration it will be seen at once that the task which Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel have undertaken is an enormous one. The twenty-one operas and forty-nine symphonies alone would make a goodly collection, and these are but two series, though of course two of the largest, out of the twenty-three. It will probably be a reasonable estimate to say that the whole collection will fill some seventy or eighty volumes. In form as well as in type, it is to be uniform with the editions of Mendelssohn and Beethoven, and is to be brought out at the same extremely moderate price—about fourpence for a sheet of four pages. The publishers further guarantee that the cost of the whole edition shall under no circumstances exceed £50. Subscribers who do not wish for the entire collection can take any one or more single series. It is only contemplated at present to bring out the works in full score; but the publishers express their intention of printing also the separate parts of those which seem likely to be useful for concert purposes.

We have only to add that subscribers' names for this country will be received by the publishers of this journal.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

The indisposition of Mdlle. Titiens has unfortunately compelled many alterations in the arrangements at this establishment; but we are glad to say that on her reappearance she sang as finely as ever. In proof of the classical taste of this great vocalist, she had Beethoven's "Fidelio" for her benefit, again asserting throughout this arduous work her supremacy in a line of characters too seldom presented to our notice, though (considering the crowded state of the house) it would be difficult to divine the reason. This occasion—the 22nd ult.—was announced as the last night of the season; but an extra performance was given on the following Monday for the benefit of M. Faure, who selected, most wisely, the opera "Don Giovanni," Mozart's libertine hero being, without question, one of this artist's finest assumptions.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

As we predicted, Verdi's showy opera, "Aïda," has obtained no hold upon the public; but it has been played to good houses, and may very probably be again heard of next season, if not on its own account, at least on that of Madame Patti, who sings the part of the heroine as if she really liked it. What induced the lessee to produce "Crispino e la Comare"—a weak opera with a weak cast—for one night is, like many other acts of the management, perfectly incomprehensible; nor indeed could we see the object of giving a single performance of Ambroise Thomas's "Hamlet," for it can scarcely be imagined that with Signor Cotogni as the Danish Prince any portion of the music would make its way to the sympathies of the audience. On the closing night, Saturday the 15th ult., Meyerbeer's "L'Etoile du Nord," Madame Patti in the part of Catherine, and M. Maurel in that of Peter the Great, was given.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The ninth concert, on the 26th June, was in every respect highly interesting, but the absence of any novelty renders any notice unnecessary, save that a good word should be said for Mrs. Bodda-Pyne's singing of Handel's "Lascia ch'io pianga," though we may venture to express a doubt whether it is politic for a soprano, after an active public life, to come forward as a contralto. At the tenth and last concert of the season, Madame Essipoff's rendering of Chopin's pianoforte Concerto in E minor was an attractive feature in the programme, and we may also compliment the band (under the able direction of Mr. W. G. Cusins) upon a very fine performance of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony. The vocalist was Miss Emma Beasley, of the Royal Academy of Music, who replaced Madame Edith Wynne, absent from indisposition, and was warmly received.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

An Orchestral Concert of the students of this Institution was given at St. James's Hall, on the 5th ult., before a large audience. Compositions by the pupils formed an important feature in the programme; and, although these were, of course, not equal in merit, enough was shown to prove the excellence of the system of instruction pursued in the Academy, for all were constructed on models worthy of imitation. Miss Oliveria Prescott's first movement of a Symphony was a creditable specimen of a solid school of writing, and the same may be said of Mr. H. W. Little's Overture. Mr. J. Ridgway's Capriccio for the pianoforte (played by the composer), evidenced the possession of decided talent in the young author; and Mr. A. H. Jackson's "Intermezzo," in C minor, gave proof of steady progress in one who has already won an honourable position in the Institution. The pianoforte performance was exceptionally good, Miss Ethel Goold (the present holder of the Lady Goldsmid Scholarship) giving so fine a rendering of Mendelssohn's Concerto in G minor as almost to make us forget that it was the performance of a student; Miss Clara Cooper (the Sir Francis Goldsmid Scholar) showing not only innate musical feeling, but the result of careful teaching, by her execution of the first movement of Dussek's Concerto in B flat, and Mr. Deas displaying a good touch and an intelligent perception of the author's meaning in the first movement of Mozart's Concerto in C. Special praise must also be awarded to Miss Frances Thomas for her performance of the first movement of Mozart's clarionet Concerto in E flat, to Miss Julia de Nolte (Professors' Scholar) for her refined and thoroughly artistic rendering of Vieuxtemps' Reverie in E flat, on the violin, and to Mr. A. Harper, who gave the double bass obbligato to Vincent Novello's air, "Thy mighty power," (well sung by Miss Amy Aylward) with such a perfect command of his difficult instrument as to elicit the warmest applause, and amply to justify his position as "Professors' Scholar." Amongst the vocalists, Miss Marian Williams, in Handel's "Let the bright Seraphim" (Trumpet obbligato, Mr. T. Harper), Miss Kate Brand, in Mozart's "Deh vieni," Miss Agnes Larkcom, in "Casta diva," and Mr. Wadmore, in a clever Recitative and Air by W. Dorrell, particularly distinguished themselves; vocal compositions being also given with much success by Misses Lita Farrar, Marie Duval, and Mary Davies, Messrs. Seligmann, George, and Gordon Gooch. The concert was conducted by Mr. Walter Macfarren with his usual judgment and precision.

The annual distribution of prizes took place in the concert-room of the Institution on the 21st ult., before a large audience. The awards were given by Madame Christine Nilsson, after some music had been performed by the students, and Professor Macfarren had, in an eloquent speech, traced the rise and progress of the Academy to its present state of prosperity. The results were as follow:—

A very successful Choral Festival, consisting of two Services, was given at St. George's Chapel, Windsor, on Thursday the 27th ult., in aid of the Choir Benevolent Fund. The choir of St. George's Chapel was augmented to about sixty voices by members of the choirs of the Chapel Royal, St. Paul's Cathedral, Westminster Abbey, and Eton College, while at both services the addition of a small orchestra was a special feature and added much interest to the proceedings. The service in the morning was Gibbons in F, the anthem being Sir George Elvey's "O be joyful in God," originally composed for the Fund. Before the conclusion of the prayers the following anthems, arranged in historical order, were sung: "Bow thine ear" (Bird); "Hosanna" (Gibbons); "O give thanks" (Purcell); "Cry aloud and shout" (Croft); "O clap your hands" (Greene); "O where shall wisdom be found" (Boyce); "Lift up thine eyes" (Sir John Goss), concluding with Handel's Hallelujah Chorus. The Evening Service commenced shortly after 5 o'clock, the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis being sung to Stephen Elvey's arrangement of Croft in A, accompanied by the orchestra. The Anthems were Sir George Elvey's "Sing, O heavens," Mendelssohn's "Why rage fiercely the heathen," and Handel's Coronation Anthem, "The King shall rejoice." The musical arrangements were admirably carried out under the direction of Sir George Elvey, who also officiated at the organ. H.R.H. Princess Christian was present at the Afternoon Service. The collections and donations amounted to about £90.

Mr. Walter Macfarren gave a Morning Concert at St. James's Hall on the 1st ult., before a highly appreciative audience. As may be expected, the performance of the bénéficiare was one of the principal attractions of the programme, although when we state that he was aided in the instrumental department by his talented pupil Miss Kate Steel (of the Royal Academy of Music) at the pianoforte, Mr. Lazarus (clarionet), and Messrs. Sainton, Amor, Burnett, Pettitt, and White (violins, viola, violoncello, and contra-basso); that Miss Jessie Jones and Mr. Cummings were the solo vocalists, and that a selection of part-music was given by a group of female students of the Royal Academy of Music, it will be seen that, with the modesty of a true artist, Mr. Macfarren did not place himself in undue prominence before his supporters. As a composer he was well represented on the occasion. His "Suite de Pièces," already most favourably mentioned in our reviewing columns, and the Second Sonata for pianoforte and violin, which we hope shortly to notice at length, were exceedingly well rendered and warmly applauded, the valuable services of M. Sainton being secured for the latter work. The programme also included Mozart's Trio in E flat, for pianoforte, clarionet, and viola, Mendelssohn's pianoforte Duet "Allegro Brillante" (Op. 92), in which Miss Kate Steel ably assisted her master, and Sterndale Bennett's Sestet in F sharp minor, which with the concert-giver at the pianoforte, and the stringed instruments in the hands of the artists already named, it is needless to say, went to perfection. Signor Randegger accompanied the vocal music with his accustomed care and intelligence.

Mr. John Thomas's Concert, at St. James's Hall, on the 22nd June, with a full orchestra and band of harps, attracted a large audience. The programme included Mr. Thomas's Cantata "Llewellyn," the principal parts of which were excellently rendered by Madame Edith Wynne, Mdlle. Enriquez, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and Mr. Lewis Thomas, the choruses being given with much care and precision by the Welsh Choral Union. The music of the Cantata is extremely melodious, and the reception of the work throughout must have been highly flattering to the composer. Mozart's MS. Concerto for harp and flute (well played by Messrs. John Thomas and O. Svendsen) was also an interesting item in the programme.

The St. George's Glee Union gave a performance at the Pimlico Rooms, on the 7th ult., for the first time in London, of a new Cantata entitled "Endymion," by Mr. E. Aspa, words by V. Amcotts, Esq. The work, which is light and pastoral in character, is one which will probably be heard frequently, the music having decided merit, and being especially available for those choral societies who cannot command the services of a band. It was well performed throughout, and received with much approval, encores being numerous to a fault. The Misses Spear, White, and A. Bliss, and Messrs. Jekyll and Thurley Beale gave due effect to the solos. Mr. E. Aspa presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. C. P. Mann at the harmonium. The incidental lyrics were recited by Mr. Wheeler. Much credit is due to Mr. T. Garside, who conducted, for the very satisfactory performance of the Cantata, at the conclusion of which enthusiastic calls were made for the composer. The hall was crowded.

Mr. Richard Blagrove's ten Concertina Concerts, the last of which took place at Langham Hall on the 6th ult., have proved in the highest degree interesting, not only as demonstrating of how much these instruments are capable in the hands of experienced performers, but as really good specimens of artistic and well-considered entertainments of chamber-music. Concertos, Septetts, Quartetts, Trios, and Duets by the best composers have been constantly included in the programmes, and these, executed by thoroughly competent players upon treble, tenor, bass, and double bass concertinas, have been received by most appreciative audiences with a satisfaction which may be accepted by the concert-giver as the best reward for his unwearied exertions in the cause. We understand that the concerts will be recommenced in January next; and that if at the conclusion of the series there should be any surplus, a Concertina Fund will be formed for the purpose of getting works written expressly for these instruments.

The Summer Evening Promenade Concerts, at the Alexandra Palace, under the direction of Mr Weist Hill, which commenced on the 11th ult., appear likely to prove in the highest degree attractive. The prospectus for the series announces an excellent selection of music, including Overtures and Operatic arrangements for the band, and Part-songs, Madrigals, and Glees for the choir, which has been augmented to five hundred for the occasion.

Messrs. A. and S. Gatti announce that the annual series of Promenade Concerts at Covent Garden Theatre will commence on Saturday the 5th inst., under the conductorship of Signor Arditi.

The fifty-third monthly Concert of the Grosvenor Choral Society took place on Friday the 21st ult. at the Grosvenor Hall, Buckingham Palace Road. The programme was miscellaneous and included part-songs, solos, duets, and pianoforte solos. The vocalists were Misses Turner, Meldrum, and Smetzer, and Mrs. A. Dye, and Messrs. A. L. Fryer, H. Baker and W. Powell; pianist, Mr. J. H. Maunder. Mr. Henry Leslie's Cantata, "Holyrood," will shortly be performed by this Choir.

At the Midsummer Examinations at Trinity College, London, the following candidates satisfied the examiners: Licentiates in Music—T. R. José, Mus. B., Trinity College, Dublin; A. H. Mann, Mus. B., Oxon., Organist of King's College, Cambridge; the Rev. F. G. M'Nally, B.A., Trinity College, Dublin; W. Power O'Donoghue, Mus. B., Hertford College, Oxford; Walter Stokes, Birmingham; G. F. Smith, Royal Academy of Music. Associates in Music—Arthur Nelson, Vicar-Choral of Armagh; William Sherriff, Manchester; T. H. Spinney, Salisbury. Students in Music—F. Howard Amory, Trinity College, London; Thomas Diss, Trinity College, London; Sidney H. East, Trinity College, London; H. Ripley, Hampton-on-Thames. Harmony Prizeman—T. H. Spinney, Assoc. Mus. The following passed in the Preliminary Arts Examination only—P. Kelly, C. Peters, H. Stanbrook. Nineteen candidates entered, five of whom failed to obtain the positions for which they entered, and two others withdrew from the examination. The examiners in the Musical Sections were: Singing and Choir Management—John W. Hinton, M.A., Mus. D., Trinity College, Dublin; Musical History—H. G. Bonavia Hunt, Mus. B., Christ Church, Oxford; Harmony—Edward J. Hopkins, Organist of the Temple Church; Counterpoint, Canon, and Fugue—Humphrey J. Stark, Mus. B., New College, Oxford. The examiners in the Preliminary Arts Section were—Dr. J. W. Hinton, M.A., H. G. Bonavia Hunt, Mus. B., Professor W. T. Jennings, B.A., and H. Ogle Moore, B.A. The Singing Prize was not awarded.

Although of opinion that "musical prodigies" should be allowed to ripen before their talents are displayed before a public audience, we must bestow a line of praise upon the little pianist, Miss Jeanne Douste, only six years of age (a pupil of M. Mortier de la Fontaine), who at her concert at Langham Hall, on the 30th June, played with much cleverness several solos, and joined her master in a Duet for two pianofortes, called "Remembrances of the Choral Symphony." If the warm applause her performance elicited do not turn her head, we may expect that her undoubted musical talent may be eventually turned to good account.

The Freedom of the City of London and the Livery of the Worshipful Company of Musicians is to be presented this day (1st August) to Mr. Charles James Freake, a member of the Council of the Society of Arts, for his munificent gift of a National Training School for Music to the nation. Also, to Sir Henry Cole, K.C.B., to commemorate his zealous instigation and active promotion of various public institutions which are tending to diffuse a knowledge of the Arts and Sciences among the people, to increase their home enjoyments through the cultivation of music, and to add to the wealth of the country through improved taste in its art manufactures. The Company of Musicians, by whom the freedom is presented, is an ancient guild, dating from the reign of Edward IV., and having a second charter from James I. It had long the obligation of seeing to the efficiency of public performers and of silencing incompetent musicians. The present master of the Company is W. Chappell, F.S.A., and Mr. W. S. Collard is one of the wardens.

A social gathering of the members of the Blind Choral Society took place at the School-room, Henrietta Street, W.C., on Tuesday evening, the 11th ult., for the purpose of entertaining Mr. James Colmer, a gentleman who has laboured for many years on their behalf. Several solos and part-songs were well rendered by the choir, accompanied by Messrs. Freeman and Clayden on a Grand pianoforte, kindly lent for the occasion by Messrs. Broadwood and Sons; after which the chairman, Frederick Woollacott, Esq., begged Mr. Colmer to accept a handsome drawing-room clock (which had been purchased out of a fund raised by the blind), bearing a suitable inscription. Mr. Colmer briefly returned thanks.

On Tuesday the 27th June, at a convocation holden in Durham, the Rev. W. Statham, B.A., vicar of Ellesmere Port, near Chester, received from the University the degree of Doctor of Music. Dr. Statham is well known from his connection with the Choral Association of the Frodsham E. and W. Deaneries, and from hymn tunes and anthems which he has written. The honour of a musical doctorate has been but seldom granted by the University of Durham, one of the last to receive this distinction having been the late lamented Dr. Dykes.

In Mr. Collet's letter on the "Macbeth" music, published in our last number, a printer's error, in some portion of our edition, has made him mention "Mr. John Locke," instead of "Mr. Tom Cooke," as the composer of some music supplied for Mr. Macready's revival of "Acis and Galatea." In paragraph 5, line 5, we may also say, the word "lead" should be substituted for "leave."

The author of a string quartett recently performed at a trial of new works by the Musical Artists' Society, writes to us correcting a mistake in our notice last month, which he says is of "frequent occurrence" in other journals. It appears that there are two artists before the public whose names are very similar, and that we have mentioned "Lehmeyer" instead of "Lahmeyer" as the composer of the quartett referred to.

The death of Mr. Edwin Ransford, at the age of 71, which occurred at his residence in Welbeck Street, on the 11th ult., deserves more than a passing record, for though but seldom before the public latterly, he was, in the old days of so-called "English Opera," a favourite vocalist, singing for many seasons in the Covent Garden Company, under the successive managements of Charles Kemble, Laporte, Bunn, Osbaldiston, Macready, and Madame Vestris. As an exponent of the songs of Dibdin, he was well known in the concert-room, and apart from his professional merits, was universally esteemed as a genial and kindly-hearted man. The funeral, which took place in his native village, was, at his especial request, unattended by any but his sorrowing relatives and a few of his warmest old friends.

On the eve of going to press we have received intelligence of the death of Mr. T. M. Mudie, one of the pupils originally elected on the foundation of the Royal Academy of Music. An excellent musician, an earnest artist, and a sincere friend, he was yet too retiring to urge those claims upon the public which were well known to a limited circle, but we still believe that his pianoforte works will, eventually, command that recognition to which their merits justly entitle them.

REVIEWS.

Novello, Ewer and Co.

Mass in A flat. In vocal score. Composed by Franz Schubert. The pianoforte accompaniment arranged from the full score by Berthold Tours.

Communion Service in A flat. The English adaptation by the Rev. John Troutbeck, M.A., composed by Franz Schubert.

These two works, as our readers will surmise, are identical, excepting that the former contains the Latin text to which the music was originally composed, while for the latter the words of the English Prayer Book have been skilfully adapted by Mr. Troutbeck, so that the music may be available for use in our church services.

The present is the fifth of six Masses which Schubert wrote, and was composed between the years 1819 and 1822. The remainder of the series have been published some time since, but until a very recent period it was impossible to include this Mass in the collection, as it existed only in manuscript, till the full score was issued at Vienna rather more than a year ago. Though by no means equal as a whole to Schubert's last and greatest Mass in E flat, the one before us contains much that is not only charming in itself but thoroughly characteristic of its composer.

The opening "Kyrie," in A flat, common time, is one of the most pleasing and interesting numbers of the work. Schubert, in all his Masses, has set these words to quiet and devotional music, instead of (as is too often the case with Haydn) to a lively chorus, utterly out of keeping with the spirit of the text, however pleasing to listen to. Among the more noteworthy points in this piece should be mentioned the first entry of the solo voices at the "Christe" (p. 3), with the charming effect of the alternation of solo and chorus, which will be found at the bottom of the same page, and which is repeated later in the movement. The close of the "Kyrie" is also of great beauty; and the whole number is orchestrated with much delicacy, and with delightful solos for the wind instruments, which are carefully indicated in Mr. Tours's accompaniment.

The greater part of the "Gloria" must be pronounced by no means worthy of Schubert's reputation. It is effective and brilliant music, full of tune, as is everything from its composer's pen; but the first movement might almost be called absolutely commonplace. The "Gratias" in A major is far more interesting, yet it contains little which reveals its author. The same can hardly be said of the "Cum sancto spiritu," because considered as a fugue it is so very weak that hardly anyone but Schubert could have written it. This seems a bold assertion; but those who are most familiar with the composer's works are perfectly aware that scientific writing was by no means his forte. In this piece there is hardly even an attempt at counterpoint; and although the full harmonies and the brilliant accompaniments for the violins make very effective and pleasing music, it is almost absurd to describe the movement as a fugue at all, though it was evidently intended for one.

The "Credo" is of far higher musical value than the "Gloria." The opening movement, with its effects for unaccompanied chorus, and its beautiful contrasts of instrumentation, seems to foreshadow the fine setting of the same portion of the text in the Mass in E flat. The "Et incarnatus," which is in the somewhat unusual form for this movement of an eight-part chorus, is of special excellence, the modulations being very unusual and of remarkable effect. At the "Crucifixus," Schubert ventures on a little piece of double counterpoint—rather an exceptional thing with him; it is very satisfactory, but some of the intervals for the chorus in this place (pp. 52, 53) will be found by no means easy to sing. The close of the movement pianissimo is very lovely, the effect of the simple harmonic progressions of the voices being heightened by solo passages for the oboe and clarinet in the composer's happiest manner. The "Et resurrexit," as is often the case at this part of the Mass, is chiefly founded upon the subjects of the opening movement of the "Credo," which are here differently treated and more amply developed than at first. A long coda at the "Amen," with a pleasing but somewhat light episode for solo voices, concludes this section of the work.

The commencement of the "Sanctus" is one of the most remarkable parts of the Mass. Though the movement is in F major, the three utterances of the word "sanctus" by the chorus, each being divided by an orchestral interlude of four bars, are all in different keys. The voices first enter, not in F, as would be expected, but in F sharp minor, their second entry being in E flat minor, and their third in C minor, after which the music returns at once to F major for the words "Dominus Deus Sabaoth." The passage is very striking, though it must be admitted that the effect is abrupt, almost bizarre. A melodious subject for the "Pleni sunt cœli" with an elegant triplet accompaniment for the violins succeeds, and leads with a half cadence on the dominant seventh to the "Osanna." This movement is not, as is generally the case, treated fugally; with the exception of the "Cum sancto spiritu," already noticed, there is no attempt at a fugue throughout the Mass. The present is a bright little chorus in eight parts, short exclamations of the word "Osanna" by divided trebles and altos being answered by similarly divided tenors and basses. The "Benedictus" for soprano, alto, and tenor solos with chorus is a good specimen of a portion of the Mass in which Schubert was invariably successful. It is full of charming and flowing melody, and is certainly one of the best movements in the work. The "Agnus Dei" is also of much excellence; the modulation at the bottom of p. 88 of the score, and the beautiful treatment of the word "Miserere," should be especially noticed. The "Dona," on the other hand, though exceedingly pretty, is in no way great music; it is remarkable for the simplicity of its construction, the voices moving together in plain chords, without the least attempt at counterpoint throughout.

It will be seen from our remarks that the present Mass is a somewhat unequal work. Judging from the evidence of the music itself, we should say that the latter half—from the "Sanctus," or perhaps even from the "Credo" to the end—was certainly of considerably later date than the "Kyrie" and "Gloria." In the earlier part we only occasionally trace the style of the genuine Schubert, but in the "Sanctus" and "Agnus" there is no mistaking him. The publication of the Mass will add nothing to his reputation, for it presents us with no new phase of his genius; but apart from the interest that attaches to every work of so great a musician, the intrinsic merits of the present composition are sufficient to justify its issue in the present cheap and convenient form. Those who possess Schubert's other Masses will doubtless be glad to complete their sets by the addition of the Mass in A flat.

"Make melody within your hearts." Harvest carol. By the Rev. F. A. J. Hervey, M.A.

This little composition is not of a kind calling for any detailed criticism. It is in the form of a simple part-song; but though quite unpretending, it is, of its kind, very good. There is a pleasant swing about the melody, and the harmonies are both correct and tasteful. For Harvest Festivals where no great musical resources are available this little carol will be found useful, and may be safely recommended.

Organ Compositions. By J. Baptiste Calkin. No. 7.
Harvest Thanksgiving March.
Two-part Song without words.

The former of these two pieces is also published for the piano, in which form it was reviewed in our last number. With regard to the composition itself we have nothing to add to the favourable opinion previously expressed. In its present shape it is so well suited for the organ, and, without any undue difficulty, so effective, that we are in doubt as to its original form, and are almost inclined to think that it was first written for the organ and subsequently arranged for the piano. The two-part song without words we do not think quite equal to the March. It is melodious and well written, but rather too reminiscent of Mendelssohn, the original inventor of this form of piece, and whose influence, therefore, in compositions of this class it is more than usually difficult to avoid.

Trois Sonates pour Orgue (No. 1, Sonate Pontificale; No. 2, Sonate O Filii; No. 3, Sonate Pascale). Par J. Lemmens.

While we cannot consider these sonatas works of absolute genius, as we should, for instance, apply the term to the organ sonatas of Mendelssohn, we can nevertheless recommend them as good sound music, and admirably suited to the instrument on which, as our readers know, their composer is so distinguished a performer. We are glad to see that M. Lemmens has taken as his models the solid compositions of the German school of organ-playing, rather than the light, not to say frivolous, French style so much in favour with some writers, and of which the organ works of Lefébure-Wély, and Batiste are examples. Even where M. Lemmens adopts the modern style—as, for instance, in the middle of the opening movement of the first sonata, where chords for the vox humana are accompanied by the 8-feet flute in the great—he does not degenerate into mere prettiness; his music is always dignified. The slow movements in all the three sonatas are excellent; but the composer's special partiality would seem to be for the fugal style. Each sonata contains at least one fugue, and the second has two. To say that some of these, though very cleverly written, have a suspicion of dryness is no reproach to the composer, because the art of writing a fugue which shall be as interesting as it is ingenious is one of the rarest of musical qualifications. The names "O filii" and "Pascale," given to the second and third sonatas, refer to the old Latin hymns "O filii et filiæ" and "Victimæ paschali," which are introduced, in the former into the slow movement and in the latter into the finale of the works. We think that M. Lemmens has been judicious in giving, except for special effects, merely general indications for registering. In the majority of cases particular directions as to stops are "more plague than profit," unless the performer happens to have under his hands an instrument precisely similar to that which was in the composer's mind when writing.

When Hands Meet. Part-Song. Words by Edward Oxenford. Music by Ciro Pinsuti.

An unpretending, melodious, and charmingly voiced Part-song, which we cordially commend to the attention of Choral Societies in search of novelty. Signor Pinsuti has well studied the art of simply expressing simple phrases, and in all his part-music reads a lesson to those who believe that such compositions are made attractive by mere display of learning.

Soldiers of the Captain. Hymn.
The Volunteer Defenders of Britain's Isle. National Song.
Words by Lieut.-Colonel W. R. Buck.
Music by the Rev. W. H. M. Buck.

There can be no possible reason why compositions like this should not be written and published, but we cannot see why they should be sent for review. A clergyman, for example, composes a hymn, as in the present instance, for the Church-parade services of a Volunteer Regiment in which, we doubt not, by the name of the Lieut.-Colonel who writes the verses, he takes a deep interest; yet it can scarcely be expected that the admiration of his work should extend beyond the immediate neighbourhood for which it is especially intended. We do not say that "Soldiers of the Captain" contains any grammatical errors; but this, after all, is only a negative merit, and we certainly want something more in a hymn which we can conscientiously recommend to our readers' notice than a correct progression of chords. The "National Song," in the same key, has a wonderful similarity with the hymn: indeed the suspended fourth on the key-note triad, at the double bar, and the following passage, commencing in unison, reminded us so strongly of "Soldiers of the Captain" that we were compelled to turn to it again in order to see in what respect it differed. We presume, however, that every man has a right to steal from himself, although we cannot say that other phrases do not strongly recall the property of other people.

Under the Lilac. Song. Words by Gordon Campbell, Esq. Composed by Arthur O'Leary.

Here is indeed a charming little musical poem, but such a poem as will puzzle the warblers of love-ballads to unravel. It is true that, after all, this is a "love-song" too, but so little of the conventional type that we can imagine twenty amateur vocalists "trying it over" without arriving at the faintest shadow of the meaning of the composer. For this Mr. O'Leary must suffer, but he suffers in a good cause; and we, who speak with the artistic rather than the popular voice, will promise to extend the hand of welcome to him, and if possible help him forward on his road, as long as he writes songs as good as the one before us. The delicacy with which the "busy bee" is suggested throughout is a proof that Mr. O'Leary knows how to use his effects judiciously, the broken phrases in the voice part being helped rather than obstructed in their expression by the demisemiquavers representing the humming of the little insect which is made to moralize on the future of the lovers, who exchange their vows of constancy unconscious of the tiny philosopher who is wandering amongst the flowers above them. Musically speaking, we cannot avoid dwelling upon the unexpected modulation from G into A minor, the use of the augmented fifth on the first inversion of the chord of C, and the progression into F major, which follows; the melody derived from which so happily colours the moral reflections of the far-seeing bee.

In Memoriam. Sacred Song. Words by R. H. Heath.
Carn Brea. Song. Words by A. C. Shaw.
Composedby R. H. Heath.

We have on several occasions expressed our conviction that a sacred song is an exceedingly difficult work for an inexperienced composer to attempt; yet, judging from the number of such compositions which come before us, it does not appear that our opinion is shared by the writers themselves. "In Memoriam" is a commonplace melody, with a commonplace accompaniment; yet there is feeling for the words shown throughout, and were it not for the bass and voice-part moving in fifths between the sixth and seventh bars, we should not have a word to say against the harmonies. The composer has been more successful in the second song; but in the attempt to vary the accompaniment, he has proved that "variety" is not always "charming." The voice would flow melodiously enough if the notes would move out of its way in the instrumental part; but in many places the harmonies are thickened without being strengthened, and the sudden burst of arpeggios in the last four bars has an extremely patchy effect. Mr. Heath should learn to write either an independent accompaniment, with a character of its own, or one which shall merely sympathize with and aid the voice in its progress: that in his "Carn Brea" is neither the one nor the other.

The Moss-Trooper's ride. Song. Words by F. E. Weatherly, M.A.
Good bye! Song. Words by Mrs. Eric Baker.
The Memory of the heart. Song. Words by Miss Stirling Graham.
Composed by Henry Smart.

Mr. Smart never allows anything to bear his name upon the title-page that will injure his well-earned reputation; but, writing as much as he does, it can scarcely be expected that he will not permit very much to be published that cannot advance it. This, perhaps, is the fate of popular men; but it must be remembered that the remedy is in their own hands; and even the best of good fellows in society is occasionally made conscious that it is possible to wear out his welcome. We have placed these three compositions in the order of their merit. The "Moss-Trooper's ride" is a song that baritone singers will be delighted with; for, although somewhat conventional, it well expresses the words, and may be made extremely effective by a vocalist who can enter into the spirit of the verses. "Good bye" would be a commonplace ballad were it not for the artistic touches which always distinguish the simplest of Mr. Smart's songs, as one instance of which we may mention the two descending minor sevenths, in the accompaniment, which give much pathos to the final "Good byes" of the voice part. "The Memory of the heart" is a fair sample of the musical drawing-room inanities which we care not to see multiplied.

Forsyth Brothers.

Southern Pictures. Four Fantasiestücke, for the Pianoforte, in 2 Books. 1. Under the Cypress Tree. 2. Bolero. 3. Gondoliera. 4. Neapolitan Mandolin Player.

Twelve Sketches in Canonical Form, for two performers on the Pianoforte; in 2 Books.
Composed by C. Reinecke.

The four "Southern Pictures," although by no means easy to play, will be warmly welcomed by advanced pianists, for the difficulties contained in them are well worth vanquishing. "Under the Cypress Tree" will scarcely perhaps become as general a favourite as its companions, yet it has a dreamy beauty which will gradually unfold itself to the few. The "Bolero," a characteristic piece in G minor, is excellent, but we give the preference to the "Gondoliera," the melodiousness of which is not its only recommendation, for it bears the impress of a thoroughly artistic mind in every bar. The "Neapolitan Mandolin Player," a graceful sketch, in A minor, amply justifies its title. It has a charming leading theme, with which the second subject forms a good contrast. All these pieces, apart from their attractiveness for performance, will be found most improving practice, for they are written by one who has on several occasions proved to us how perfect a master he is of the instrument for which he composes. The short duets, "in canonical form," may well be played even to an audience knowing but little of the excessive ingenuity of their construction. The whole of those contained in Book 1 are canons in the octave, No. 4, "Humoreske," and No. 6, "Tarantelle," being especially worthy of commendation, the passages in the latter more particularly suggesting not the faintest suspicion that the composer is working in fetters. The Canon in Diminution, named "Elegie," which opens Book 2, is exceedingly interesting, but the best of the series is unquestionably the following one. This commences with a Capriccio in 2-4 time, "All' Ongaresse," entirely given to the second performer. Then we have a Mazurka, in 3-4 time, for both players, and this is succeeded by a movement in which the subject of the opening "Capriccio" is written in the primo part, whilst the secondo has the "Mazurka," three bars of the former being equivalent to two bars of the latter. The cleverness displayed in this piece is beyond all praise, and we strongly recommend it as a study for young players. The next, "All' Antico," a canon in augmentation, is well written, but scarcely perhaps so attractive as its companions. No. 11, "Scherzo," is a good canon in contrary motion, and the last of the series is rather given as a specimen of the manner in which musicians used to amuse themselves in the "canonical" days, for the secondo may become the primo with equal effect. We may add that this edition has been carefully fingered by Mr. Charles Hallé.

J. R. Lafleur and Son.

Stabat Mater. Composed by F. Van Heddeghem, for the Organ or Pianoforte with voices. Latin and English words.

We feel ourselves placed in rather an uncomfortable position in speaking of this work. The composer has evidently taken so much pains with it, that it seems hardly fair to him to put it aside as unworthy of notice; and at the same time it is quite out of our power to speak of it as a whole in terms of commendation. Mr. Van Heddeghem is by no means destitute of musical feeling, though his ideas are not strikingly original; and in one or two of the eight movements of which the present setting of the "Stabat Mater" consists, he has been fairly successful. The duet for tenor and baritone, "Quis est homo" (though in some parts reminiscent of Rossini), and the chorus, "Pro peccatis," both contain good points, and are among the best specimens of the composer's workmanship; but in other movements we find such crudeness, not to speak of absolutely incorrect harmony, as to suggest the idea that Mr. Van Heddeghem's study of harmony has been scarcely so thorough as could be wished. For example, on the third bar of page 18 we find consecutive octaves between treble and tenor, and on the fifth bar of the same page a similar fault between the treble and the first bass; while on the last two bars of p. 45, octaves may be seen between alto and tenor. But besides this, the composer's ideas on the subject of accent seem rather vague, as witness the following (p. 45):—

and there are several examples of Latin words wrongly accented, e.g., "inclyti" (p. 4), and "plangere" (p. 41), with the accent on the second syllable, and "recolere" (p. 42), accented on the third; while at p. 54, we find "confoveri" with two accents, on the second and fourth syllables, producing a very curious effect. The funniest thing about the work is what is termed on the first page the "English adaption." Whether this has been made by the composer or not is not stated; but whoever is responsible for it seems to have set himself the task of finding the most utterly incongruous words possible, and to have been completely successful. For example, the English text fitted (?) to the first verse of the hymn "Stabat mater dolorosa" is—

"O thou to whom in ancient time
The lyre of Hebrew bards was strung,
Whom kings adored in songs sublime,
And prophets praised with flowing tongue."

Even more ludicrously inappropriate (if possible) is the "English adaption" of the "Pro peccatis":—

"In this thy house whose doors we now
For social worship first unfold,
To thee the suppliant throng shall bow,
While circling years on years are rolled."

Other instances equally comic might be quoted. As the music is at least fairly appropriate to the original Latin words, it may be imagined that it is grotesquely unsuited to the English. The arranger must be credited with some skill in fitting the entirely different metre to the same music.

Twelve original Kyries. By G. H. Starmer.

Some time since we received a copy of these Kyries, and finding really nothing to say about them—they being decidedly commonplace—we put them on one side. A second copy has now been forwarded to our office, with a note from the composer, expressing his supposition that the first had not come to hand. He was quite mistaken, and it will be as well to state explicitly that we do not undertake to review the whole of the pieces sent for that purpose, still less to review them (as so often requested) "in our next number." Our space is not sufficient to allow us to notice all, even were all worthy of it, which is by no means the case. When composers find their music is not reviewed within a reasonable time after they send it, they may fairly conclude that it is not considered of sufficient importance.

A Communion Service, in A. By W. H. Walter, Mus. Doc.

This short and pleasing little service will require no detailed notice; indeed we should probably have passed it over altogether but for the fact of its being American, and therefore interesting as showing the state of church music beyond the Atlantic. Judging from this work, we should say that things were in a healthy condition. There is nothing striking about the music, but there is nothing offensive; it is good sound writing, and doubtless effective in performance. The occasional solos remind us of the prevalent custom in America of engaging a quartett of singers to lead the congregation.

William A. Pond: New York.

Original Tunes to Selected Hymns, for use in Church and Home. Composed by H. B. Ellwanger.

These eighteen Psalm Tunes, though here and there containing a reminiscence, have much more in them than the larger number of tunes published in these days. Mr. Ellwanger appears to have a flowing vein of natural melody, of no very striking originality, but sufficiently pleasing to command attention. His harmonies, too, are correct. The weak point of the music is too great a monotony in the cadences. For example, in tunes 7 and 8 each line ends with the chord of the tonic, and three out of the four with a perfect cadence. This we take to be a sign of inexperience which further practice in composition will probably remedy.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

"GOD SAVE THE KING."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—I have been lately looking through various books and manuscripts in order to enlighten myself and to become acquainted with the various bearings of the much-vexed question as to who was the composer of our National Anthem. I do not pretend to have found out anything new, for the controversy dates back to the year 1745-6, when Dr. Arne and his sister, Mrs. Cibber, brought the tune into notice, and such favour did it then gain that S. Carey endeavoured, unsuccessfully, to obtain a pension from the King at Windsor, because he said his father had composed it. But Henry Carey died in 1743, and in his famous collection of one hundred tunes no melody bearing any resemblance to "God save the King" appears, nor did he in his lifetime ever claim to have written it. I might mention that the tune is also ascribed to Purcell, Jones, Young, and Rogers. Dr. Cooke, of Westminster, mentions that it dates prior to the Reformation! All these accounts and claims are very vague, and little reliance can be placed in them. But the following is, I apprehend, much more worthy of belief, and will, I trust, in some way account for the tune being heard at St. Cyr, as Mr. Allen mentions in his letter to you last month.

You will perceive that I name the composer at once, hoping that the evidence I shall bring forward, and which I shall give with references, will justify the assumption I make, though at the same time there are many people who have never for a moment believed in any other.

Mr. John Bull, Mus. Doc., Cantab., appears to have undoubtedly written our National Anthem, in the year 1607.

"· · · Dr. Bull, sworn in January 1585 to the Chapel Royal, St. James, and was trained there by Phelps and Blithman about the year 1592."—Vide The Old Cheque Book of the Chapel Royal.

"It is undoubtedly true that James the 1st was entertained in the Merchant Taylors' Hall, July 16, 1607.

"That Dr. John Bull did play all the dinner time, and the children of the King's Chapel did sing melodious songs at the said dinner; after which his Majesty came down to the Great Hall, did hear a melodious song of farewell by three rare men in a ship, and which song so pleased his Majesty that he caused the same to be sung 3 times over.

"That Dr. John Bull was admitted to the livery, though not sworn, for his love and kindness in bestowing the music which was performed in the King's Chamber gratis.

"To Mr. Benjamyn Johnson, the poett, for inventing the speech to his Majesty, and for making the songs, and his directions to others in that business, £20."—Vide Memorials of the Merchant Taylors' Company.

This banquet to the King "to congratulate his Majesty on his escape from the Gunpowder Plot" was of a most sumptuous character. No expense was spared; a full account of it—much too long for insertion here (vide The Records of the Merchant Taylors Company, and also a programme of music performed in their Hall, June 24, 1876)—is most interesting. I will merely mention that the gentlemen and children of the Chapel Royal were present for the purpose of singing, and that Dr. Bull did play all dinner time on a pair of organs in the King's Chamber, &c.

Now, I would ask any musician whether, for such an occasion, being the first musician of the day, a prolific and good composer, appointed to arrange the musical programme for a sumptuous banquet to the King and the nobility, on receiving a new and special poem by the first poet of the day, would he not set it to new music of his own rather than hunt up an old tune? I say, and I am sure many will agree with me, that the chances are very greatly in favour of new music being composed. But I will proceed with more evidence.

Extracts from a MS. letter of Richard Clarke to the Worshipful Company of Merchant Taylors, dedicating his work, entitled "An account of the National Anthem," to them.

"Gentlemen,—In the year 1822 I had the honour of dedicating my account of the National Anthem to the Worshipful Company of Merchant Taylors, and stated that it was written and composed at their request by Ben Johnson and Dr. Bull, and first sung in their Hall 1607. Much controversy and contradiction has arisen since that time. I have answered, during the long period of ninteen years, every account, and can now fully prove that Dr. Bull did compose the music, and which I have publicly performed at the Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover-square, by all the talent in town, &c.

"I have at last obtained Dr. Bull's only manuscript known of, and which I have at some expense followed to Boulogne and Paris. I am about to publish a copy from the same, and request that I may have the high honour to dedicate this work to the Master, Wardens, and Court of Assistants of the Worshipful Company of Merchant Taylors, to whom the whole honour belong; for had not this Worshipful Company invited King James the First, the Queen, Prince Henry, the Ambassadors, and all the nobility of this great country to dine in their Hall (as shewn by the names in their books), we should not have this National Anthem and Grace composed at all, for the occasion of such sentiments (viz., the Powder Plot)—'Confound their politics,' 'Frustrate their knavish tricks'—had passed away. Dr. Bull shortly afterwards left this country, and William Byrd died.

"Having now forwarded these further proofs of my original assertion, I shall await the honour of a reply before I print my prospectus, as I intend to circulate the same very widely, not only in England but in Germany, Italy, and France, where Dr. Bull's compositions are as well known as in this country.—Gentlemen, I remain your obedient humble servant,

"Westminster, July 6, 1841. Richard Clarke."

"That Dr. Bull went beyond the seas, October 1613, without licence and served the Archduke.

"• • • That he was organist of Notre Dame, Antwerp, 1617, and died there, March 1628."—Vide The Old Cheque Book of the Chapel Royal.

On leaving this country Dr. Bull first went to France, where I believe he stayed a short time; and then happened what is now a well-known tale—viz., his adding four more parts to a composition of 40 (sic) which the organist of St. Omer had written and vauntingly declared that none could add to.

The above extract from Mr. Clarke's MS. letter relative to his going to Boulogne and then to Paris to see this MS., and the fact of Dr. Bull having gone abroad soon after this banquet, makes me think that Bull must have taken the original score over there amongst his music and goods, then either given it to somebody, or left it behind when going elsewhere, and therefore I conclude that this MS., or a copy, must have been seen and thought suitable for the occasion of Louis XIVth's visit to St. Cyr, and that a translation with a few alterations was made by Madame de Brinon, while Lulli did the same to the music, to make it come in agreeably with the rest of the service. Madame de Maintenon was not born till 1635, and married to Louis XIV. in 1686, in which year the Convent was finished, so that there is no reason—as the words of the anthem were especially applicable to Louis XIV.—why everything should not have been as Mr. Allen mentions in his letter to you, the only difference being that Lulli and Madame de Brinon were not original composers but merely adapters.

The same argument might apply to other countries who lay claim to our Anthem; for it does not follow that Bull never travelled anywhere except to the Archduke's and to Antwerp.

I now will bring forward what is most conclusive (I might have mentioned it at first without any of the foregoing, only I was anxious to fix the date of the composition if I could).

In Ward's "Lives of the Professors of Gresham College" is a list of musical works in manuscript of Dr. J. Bull, in possession of Dr. Pepusch (Gentleman's Magazine): "But besides these, there is extant a large number of Dr. Bull's pieces in manuscript that make a part of the curious and valuable collection of music now deposited in the library of Dr. Pepusch of which I (i.e., Mr. Ward) shall add the following account as communicated to me by the Doctor:—

'For the Organ or Harpsichord:

A large folio, neatly written, bound in red Turkey leather, but not entered in the Catalogue, &c., &c.'"

[Here follows a long list of some 60 works, not necessary here, and then comes]

"'No. 18, quarto, Vol. I., Folio 56.

'God save the King.'"

I should mention that many of the MSS. and valuable papers from the library of Dr. Pepusch were carted away as rubbish, whether on his death, or on that of his legatee, I do not at this moment remember. The old library of Ancient Music was divided amongst its members, so that the chance of finding any very old copy of this tune is now unlikely.

Hoping that I may have afforded some few hints towards the solution of Mr. Allen's question, and apologizing for the length of my letter,—I am, Sir, yours truly, Montagu Sharpe.

Hanwell Park, Middlesex, July 17, 1876.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Dear Sir,—In reply to your correspondent's interesting letter on the above subject, in your last issue, it might interest him to know what the Germans think of the origin of the air.

In "Heil die im Siegeskranz," published by Peters, (Berlin and Leipzig), "God save the King" is given, with German words, by Heinrich Harries (1793), the music attributed to Henry Carey (1743). I presume this is the same man who composed "Sally in our Alley."—I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully, 24th July, 1876. Walter Douglas Seaton.

THE COPYRIGHT EMBROGLIO.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—It is not surprising that Mr. Julian Adams has resolved that no copyright music shall be given at his concerts, as that is his safest course. Messrs. Boosey and Co., the publishers of Balfe's "Bohemian Girl," by an advertised notice dated the 5th April, 1876, "state, in answer to numerous inquiries, that they make no claim for the right of performance of the various English songs, duets, &c., published by their firm."

By another advertised notice dated 1st June, 1876, "Madame Balfe, as the widow and executrix of the late

M. W. Balfe, has resolved henceforth (by arrangement with the Dramatic Authors' Society) to charge no fees for the execution of single songs or selections from his operatic works when given in concerts, and not performed on the stage."

In the Clerkenwell County Court, in the case of "Bodda v. The Clerkenwell Benevolent Society," Mr. Frank Bodda (the husband of Miss Pyne, the celebrated soprano), through the medium of a power of attorney granted to Harry Wall, the well-known informer in such cases, sued the Society for the penalty of 40s., incurred by permitting the song "I dreamt that I dwelt in Marble Halls" (from Balfe's "Bohemian Girl") to be sung at its Charity Concert. Mr. Shaw (counsel for the plaintiff) said that the plaintiff was the proprietor of the sole right of performing the Opera of the "Bohemian Girl." Mr. Lewis, on behalf of the defendants, made a very able defence. On a technical objection, not bearing on the law of copyright, the plaintiff was nonsuited.

A superficial reader of Messrs. Boosey's advertisement would conclude that there was now full liberty to sing "I dreamt that I dwelt in Marble Halls." The conclusion would be erroneous. Messrs. Boosey only say that they make no claim. It would spoil the sale of the song to say it could only be sung by permission of Mr. Frank Bodda; but it is quite clear Messrs. Boosey can make no claim for that which they do not own.

A person in ignorance of the various rights in a musical composition would, on reading Madame Balfe's advertisement, most certainly come to the conclusion that the dream in marble halls might be sung in peace; but this delusion is dispelled on reading about the action of Mr. Bodda.

The foregoing fully illustrates what I said in a former letter to you on the subject, and the only conclusions your readers can come to are as follow:—

1. That Messrs. Boosey are only the publishers, and can give no permission to sing in public either the music or the words of the song.

2. That Madame Balfe can only give permission to sing the music, and cannot give permission to sing the words.

3. That Mr. Bodda can only give permission to sing the words, and cannot give permission to sing the music.

Many publications are not copyright. The public have no means of knowing what publications are, and what are not, copyright. The advertisements and the law are a snare, and the musical public are the victims. This state of things is a disgrace to the law, to all concerned, and is a livelihood for the informer.

I again express a hope that the Copyright Commission, of which Sir Julius Benedict is a member, will in any amendment of the copyright laws compel publishers to notify any reservation of rights.

Yours truly,

J. Clelland.

Cheetham, Manchester, 15th July, 1876.

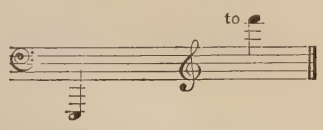
[We quite agree with Mr. Clelland that Madame Balfe's advertisement might lead singers to imagine that she has absolute authority over the works named. But it is right to inform those concerned that Messrs. Boosey and Co. are not the publishers of the "Bohemian Girl," and that they do not print the songs separately; they merely publish an octavo edition of the Opera by arrangement with Messrs. Chappell and Co., who possess the copyright.—Ed. Musical Times.]

THE TRUMPETS IN BACH'S MUSIC.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Having seen several times the remark made in your paper that the trumpet parts in Bach's Mass are not playable, I beg to inform those of your readers who take an interest in the matter that all the passages which occur in the works of that great master can be easily performed by the Saxhorns as used in the French Cavalry bands for a great many years.

The Saxhorns and Saxotrombe form a whole family of brass instruments: they are all provided with pistons and have their bells turned upwards, which is not only more convenient for the rider, but produces also more tone. The compass of all the instruments taken together ranges from



Their name and compass are as follow:—

1. Little high Saxhorn in B♭ (petit Saxhorn aigu: lit. acute).

2. Saxhorn Soprano in E♭.

3. Saxhorn Contralto in B♭.

4. Saxhorn Alto in A♭.

5. Saxotromba Alto in E♭.

6. Saxotromba Baryton in B♭.

7. Saxhorn Basso in B♭.

8. Saxhorn Contrabasso in E♭.

9. Saxhorn Contrabasso in B♭.

It will be seen from the foregoing table that there is range enough to play any passages, and particularly the Saxhorns Nos. 1, 2, and 3 would be most efficient for performing the passages referred to. Cornet-players, who now-a-days execute all sorts of florid music, could manage any of the instruments cited without difficulty, and we would thus obtain as near as possible the effects intended by Seb. Bach when he wrote for high trumpets and high horns. As it is, the score must necessarily suffer from the usual disfigurements in that department.

I am, Sir, yours truly,

July 4th, 1876. Allegro.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

Beverley.—A meeting of the trustees of the Minster New Fund was recently held, when Mr. Camidge, of York, was selected to fill the vacancy caused by the appointment of Mr. Mann, Mus. Bac., to King's College, Cambridge.

Blackburn.—An Organ Recital was recently given in S. Peter's Church by Dr. Spark. The programme was well selected and greatly enjoyed by the large audience assembled.

Eastbourne.—The opening Concert at the elegant New Hall erected by the Devonshire Park and Baths Company, in connection with the Park and Skating Rink, was given on Saturday evening the 8th ult. The artists engaged were Mdme. Edith Wynne, Mdme. Blanche Cole, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Signor Caravoglia, with Mr. Sidney Naylor as accompanist. Mdme. Edith Wynne, however, was unable to be present, owing to indisposition. The instrumental performance by Messrs. Weippert's Band consisted of Meredith Ball's Gavotte "Woffington," the Overture to Poète et Paysan, Mendelssohn's "War March," &c. At subsequent concerts on the 15th and 22nd ult., attractive programmes were provided and well rendered by Misses Sinclair and Russell, Mdme. Osborne Williams, Messrs. Wilford Morgan, Stedman, and J. L. Wadmore. The hall is excellently adapted for the purpose for which it has been erected, acoustics, ventilation, and comfort having been equally considered. For future concerts engagements have been made with Madame Edith Wynne, Misses Jessie Royd, Annie Butterworth, and Julia Elton, Mdlle. Risarelli, Messrs. E. Lloyd, Bernard Lane, Stedman, R. Hilton, and Thurley Beale, and Signor Foli. The spirited manner in which these concerts have been projected and carried out by the directors should ensure success to the undertaking.—Mr. J. H. Deane gave an Organ Recital on Thursday the 13th ult., at Trinity Church. His selection included No. 29 of Mendelssohn's Lieder ohne Wörte, Batiste's Andante in G, an Offertoire by Lefébure-Wély, a Fugue by Mendelssohn, and Gounod's "Marche Cortège" from Irene.

Kidderminster.—On Tuesday evening the 27th June, a performance of Haydn's Creation was given by the members of the Choral Society, in the Music Hall. The solos were well rendered by Miss Woolley, Mr. Welch, and the Messrs. Cotton and Muston. The band and choir, under Mr. Fitzgerald, performed their portions of the Oratorio exceedingly well; they were assisted by Mr. Attwood, of Stourbridge, an old member of the Society.

Leeds.—Dr. Spark concluded his Spring season of Organ Recitals in the Town Hall on the last Tuesday afternoon in June. There was a large attendance, and the hearty applause showed that the music performed was thoroughly appreciated. During the season Dr. Spark has introduced a larger number of novelties than usual; indeed, there is scarcely a new piece of any importance either written for the organ, or which can be transcribed for that instrument, which he has not brought forward.

North Berwick, N.B.—On Saturday, the 8th ult., Mr. Frank Bates gave an Organ Recital at S. Baldred's Episcopal Church. The programme contained selections from the works of Bach, Handel, Mendelssohn, Cherubini, and Lefébure-Wély.

Otago, New Zealand.—Mr. A. J. Towsey, organist and choirmaster of St. Paul's Cathedral Church, was presented on Easter Sunday with a very handsome testimonial, consisting of a complete set of fish and dessert knives and forks, and two small candelabra, with the accompanying, printed on an illuminated card: "To A. J. Towsey, Esq., as a slight recognition of his kindness in playing the organ to friends after service on Sunday evenings. Easter Sunday, 1876."

Tenbury.—The members of the Tenbury Musical Society gave their Summer performance on Wednesday, June 28th, the work selected being Handel's Theodora. The principal vocalists were: Theodora, Mrs. Holt; Irene, Miss E. Preston; Didimus, Miss Antelli; Septimus, and a Messenger, Rev. V. K. Cooper; Valens, E. Cholmeley-Jones, Esq. Leader of the band, A. Alexander, Esq.; conductor, Rev. J. Hampton. The rendering of the Oratorio was highly creditable, the choir showing the most careful training on the part of the conductor, the Rev. J. Hampton, and the band, under the leadership of Mr. Alexander, being thoroughly efficient. The recitatives were well accompanied by Mrs. T. L. Wheeler.

Windsor.—Mr. Liddle, assisted by Messrs. Zerbini, Blagrove, Marriott, and Aylward, gave a morning Concert in the Mechanics' Institute, on the 13th ult. The programme consisted of Mozart's String Quintett in C major; Haydn's Variations on the Austrian Hymn; Regondi's ms. Concerto for Concertina, with String Quartett accompaniment (excellently played by Mr. Blagrove); Macfarren's Barcarole for ditto; Beethoven's Romance in G; Bach's G minor Prelude and Fugue for Violin alone, and songs "Du bist wie eine Blume" (Schumann), "In a distant land" (Taubert), and Braga's Serenata, charmingly sung by Miss Amy Aylward. Sir G. J. Elvey, Mus. Doc., conducted.

Organ Appointments.—Mr. John Broadhouse, to Christ Church, Barnet.——Mr. C. M. Anderson, Organist and Choirmaster, to S. Bartholomew's, Islington.——Mr. George Ryle, to St. Mark, Battersea-rise.——Mr. Claude R. Fowles, Organist and Choirmaster, to SS. Michael's and All Angels', Swanmore, Ryde, Isle of Wight.——Mr. Horton Corbett, to York-street Congregational Church, S.E.

THE REV. THOMAS HELMORE'S

MANUAL OF PLAIN SONG.

NOW PUBLISHED.

An addition to the series of Works of Plain Song and Accompaniments, forming the several parts of this Manual, has just been brought out under the title of the "SECOND APPENDIX TO THE ACCOMPANYING HARMONIES OF THE BRIEF DIRECTORY."

8vo., Paper Cover, Two Shillings.

It will be found of great service to all who desire suitable harmonies, instrumental or vocal, or both, for use with the Psalter and Canticles Noted. It supplies a want long felt with regard to many of the Chants, as also to the fifth and sixth "Te Deum" in the second set of the Canticles, for which no corresponding harmonized arrangement has, till now, been provided. A short preface, brief general directions, and copious information as to sources from which its various portions are derived, add greatly to its utility and interest. The numbering of the various Forms of the Tones, and their several settings, as well as the references to the different Psalms and Canticles to which any one of them is set in the Plain Song books, are clear, and will add to the facility and interest with which the entire Manual (now wanting only the third Appendix to the Psalter and its Accompanying Harmonies for its completion) will be practically applied to the varying wants of Organists, Choirs, and Congregations. It is accented throughout in correspondence with the Psalter and Canticles Accented.

The fuller and more elaborate Accompanying Harmonies to the Canticles Noted, of which the two arrangements of the "Te Deum" from Baini and Alfieri; and the "Magnificat" from Orlando di Lasso, and Palestrina, are specimens, will form, when completed, an additional and supplementary volume for use in skilful choirs.

London: Novello, Ewer and Co.

Two Vols., cloth, gilt lettered, price 7s. 6d. each.

THE JACKDAW OF RHEIMS.

Words from the "Ingoldsby Legends." Music by GEORGE FOX. Performed for the first time on Thursday evening, June 29, at St. George's Hall, with enormous success. Price 2s. 6d. net. Harmonium Accompaniment, 1s. The Band Parts may be hired on very reasonable terms.

"Ingoldsby's humorous poem has been 'set to music' in appropriate style by Mr. Fox, and in this new form will obtain additional admirers. The music is dramatic, tuneful, and spirited, showing not only a fine appreciation of the wit of the story, but also a capability of giving musical expression to it. The solos and choruses are characteristic and good; and the cantata will be found useful both in the concert-room and private parties in affording pleasing entertainment."—News of the World.

These splendid instruments are manufactured only by W. HATTERSLEY & Co., with improved sound board, in double veneered cases, and from well-seasoned material, and have been tried side by side with the best English, American, French, and German Harmoniums, and have been pronounced to be far better both in quality of tone, variety in the stops, repetition in touch, and predominance of the treble over the bass. The large instruments, with double action, and several other improvements, are nearer to the organ than anything yet made.
W. H. & Co. have now enlarged their Manufactory and increased their hands, so that they may be able to keep up to the demand, which has been so pressing of late.

THE NIBELUNGEN TRILOGY AT BAYREUTH

BY JOSEPH BENNETT.

WHEN Richard Wagner first announced the carrying out of his darling enterprise at Bayreuth, men wondered why his choice fell upon such a place; they have wondered ever since, and they are wondering now. The master has thick-and-thin admirers, who credit him with the gift of infallibility, and believe that the fiction of the English Constitution, "The King can do no wrong," may be applied in his case as an absolute fact. Yet even these people can discover for Bayreuth nothing better than negative recommendations of a more or less whimsical kind. My own experience convinces me that scarcely could a worse selection have been made. As a dignified and respectable little town, with certain literary and historic associations, Bayreuth is, no doubt, a fit retreat for a man who desires to labour "far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife;" but to make it the scene of a great gathering, to put upon its feeble resources an unbearable strain, and consequently to inflict upon visitors a host of discomforts, was a step only explainable by reference to the wilfulness in which great men sometimes permit themselves to indulge. Among Wagner's qualities is a grim humour quite familiar to readers of his literary works, and it may be that a resolution to entice the musical world off the highway, so to speak, and along uncomfortable bye-paths was a practical manifestation of it. Anyhow, the feat gave proof of his influence, and every one of us who wasted hours for a morsel of food, after fighting for a place in which to eat it; who domiciled in strange quarters, and—not through poverty—became acquainted with "strange bedfellows;" who panted along dusty roads in a broiling sun, because the score or so of vehicles in the place were engaged twenty deep—every one of us, I say, had the consolation of knowing that here was practical homage paid to intellectual and artistic might. It was all of consolation we could get, and I am afraid it did not prevent a good deal of bad language. The natives, poor souls, did their very best under the pressure put upon them. They were willing enough, but fancy the chances they had in an encounter with 2,000 hungry and earnest strangers. As for the hotels—well, I will only observe that, if the statistics of the big lunatic asylum close to Wagner's theatre do not show a remarkable accession of patients from the class of landlords and waiters, my belief in the relationship of cause and effect will receive a blow.

Wagner chose a pretty spot for his theatre. There is a hill some 1,500 yards from the town, crowned with a wood, and having fields on its lower slope. Some distance up the slope stands the building, with a terrace on its town front, whence the eye ranges over the valley of the Red Main to the lofty hills beyond. Flanking the theatre, but slightly lower, are two wooden refreshment houses; and, lower still, the ex-meadow is planted with young trees, which border winding walks, the beginning of a pleasaunce "of the future." For the theatre itself little can be said—at any rate as regards the exterior. It is decidedly not beautiful; it comes very near being ugly, and signs that it has been erected "on the cheap" are more evident than pleasing to an æsthetic eye. But, here again, what matters? "The play's the thing," and Wagner cares more for one small accessory to his stage business than for the whole concern in front of the curtain. Look into the theatre and be satisfied of this. There may be a recognition of personal comfort, even of luxurious taste, in the Fürsten Galerie, but elsewhere behold a Spartan simplicity. It is assumed that he who goes to the Wagner Theatre does so as a lover of art. In that capacity alone is he recognized. "I will give you," says Wagner, "a good view of the stage; I will put my orchestra out of sight, and you shall not be annoyed by a gesticulating conductor; but if you expect a box in which to lounge, if you think to have light for the examination of your neighbours, or for the poring over libretti, if you expect facilities for disturbing the house by going in or out as you choose, then don't come to my place, for none of these things will you get. As you are not a prince, I cannot ask you to the Fürsten Galerie; but here is a cane seat in a vast parterre rising tier above tier, so that everybody sees well all that he ought to see. Take it or leave it." In such practical fashion is the whole business managed, and there has not been any grumbling. Some of the French and Belgian critics, it is true, wrote early letters home in a state of wonderment, but they grew reconciled when it appeared that a musical drama is not necessarily connected with a fashionable lounge. As for the Germans, they out-Wagnered Wagner, and I believe that they would have sat out the performances on spikes had the master so ordained.

What a crowd was that which filled Bayreuth on the eve of the Festival! Emperors and princes came, and were received with acclamation, Wagner himself going down (in a dress coat and white tie) to greet the German Kaiser, and to hear from the imperial lips that the imperial mind was a blank in the matter of the artistic questions at issue, but that a national enterprise should be supported. Bayreuth, for some days before in process of waking, opened its eyes wide to see the old soldier. But there were many others present quite as remarkable as he, though the more eminent among German musicians stayed away. Brahms, Hiller, Volckmann, Joachim, Rubinstein, Raff—none of these put in an appearance, for reasons about which it would be impertinent to speculate. But all countries were well represented, and the visitors' list published from day to day was a roll-call of eminence not only in music but in kindred arts. Franz Liszt made a prominent figure on more accounts than his own personal distinction, and, indeed, the Festival would not have been complete without him. In the days when Wagner had not a friend, and was picking up a bare living in Paris—when, moreover, the two were unknown to each other, it was Liszt who recognized the future author of "Der Ring des Nibelungen," and, in the nick of time, gave him precious encouragement. Hardly less important and gratifying to Liszt, therefore, than to Wagner himself, was an occasion which justified his previsions and realized his hopes. Among others present who engaged more or less attention were such musical littérateurs as Herr Hanslick, of Vienna; Signor Filippo de Filippi, of Milan; M. Albert Wolff, of Paris; Mr. Wheeler, of New York; and Mr. Davison, of London; while professors from all countries could be reckoned by the hundred. In short, the gathering was unique—the grandest tribute ever paid to the genius and will of a single man.

Life in Bayreuth during the Festival was busy enough, if in many respects uncomfortable. A large portion of the time not spent at the theatre was necessarily occupied in fighting for food, and for the balance there were plenty of claimants—old friends seen after long parting, new friends anxious to be useful, and chance acquaintances whose share in a matter of common interest gave them a right to attention. Nobody waited for an introduction to anybody at Bayreuth. People ignorant even of each other's names became confidential over the invariable glass of beer whenever opportunity offered, and till far into the night a buzz of conversation rose to the unaccustomed heavens. Of course opinions often clashed. There were some present who could not recognize the amazing perfection of Wagner's work, and who, in the face of terrible odds, had the boldness to say so. Such courage should have commanded the respect of their opponents; but, as far as my observation goes, the out-and-out Wagnerian is an intolerant person, not disinclined to use muscle as a means of conversion to the faith. At all events the meeting was disgraced by sundry quarrels and at least one assault, with which, it is to be feared, the majority sympathized, looking upon it as the pardonable result of laudable enthusiasm. Life in and about the theatre scarcely varied from day to day. As the performances—save that of "Das Rheingold"—began at 4 o'clock, there was, first of all, a hot walk to the building along an unwatered road, then a lounge in the shade, or a "restorer" in the refreshment booth, or an amusing inspection of the very remarkable-looking people who by means of long unkempt hair, à la Liszt, proclaim themselves devotees of modern German art. These mustered in strong force, and vied with each other in eccentricity, the palm of strangeness being unanimously accorded to a brother and sister (both, it is said, pupils of Liszt), who wandered about "looking mysteriously nowhere," the gentleman in an odd be-feathered hat, from under which streamed black straight locks, the lady in no hat at all, and with her tresses waving wildly. While these and such as these passed in review, a little procession of royal carriages ascended the hill; and, if Emperor William were there, as on the first two days, the Germans gathered round the state entrance to greet him with the dismal, long-drawn "Hoch!" which does duty for our more vigorous and exciting "Hurrah!" Then a blast of trumpets summoned all to enter, the "call" being invariably one or other of the Nibelungen motivi. It never took the audience long to settle down, and when the trumpets once more sounded and the lights were lowered till darkness became visible, a peremptory hiss stopped all motion and noise. During the performance silence and stillness were maintained; but on the curtain falling after each act, it was a sight to see with what relief the entire fifteen hundred poured themselves out of the theatre, blinking in the sunlight, and hurrying to find wherewith the exhausted body might be refreshed. So the days went on till the entire drama had unfolded itself, and the crowd, their curiosity satisfied, melted away, leaving Bayreuth to prepare for the next batch of visitors. The first series of representations, I should add, did not pass off without some disappointment. Owing to the temporary illness of Herr Betz, who filled an important part, the performance of "Siegfried" was put off from Tuesday to Wednesday, and, as a result, not a few had to leave without witnessing "Götterdämmerung," while many more were unable to attend a public supper given on Friday for the purpose of bringing Wagner and his patrons together. But matters might easily have been worse, as it would appear from the case of Herr Betz that the leading rôles were not "under studied."

The arrangements of the theatre for art purposes were singularly complete, and no question can arise as to the future influence of such of them as departed from established custom. Complete success attended the hidden orchestra, not only because a distracting spectacle was removed from the ken of the audience, but because, without loss of purely musical effect, a distinct and appropriate mental impression was created by the flood of sound streaming from a concealed source. Wagner's idea of a veil of music rising between the spectator and the stage, colouring all beyond with its rich hues, thus found justification, the result being precisely as he described it. But some one may ask, "How could a hundred and fourteen instruments find room without a huge ungainly chasm between audience and stage?" The answer is that the orchestral seats were arranged on an inclined plane descending far beneath the "boards." At the bottom of the plane were stationed the brass and percussion instruments, the "strings" occupying the higher rows. By this plan the visible width of the orchestral pit was not great enough to be an eyesore, while the position of the loud instruments secured depth and majesty of tone without blatant noise. That the orchestral players were satisfied with their novel station I cannot say. They objected on principle to be put out of sight, and they complained, with good reason, of most exhausting heat. True, because they were invisible, they could—and did—play in their shirt-sleeves; but this freedom hardly compensated for a situation which many of them declare they will never again occupy. Thanks to the good offices of Mr. Dannreuther, I was able to inspect the arrangements on and behind, above and beneath, the stage for the working out of scenic effects unequalled in magnitude, elaboration, and splendour. That I was much the wiser for gazing upon a mass of intricate machinery cannot be said with any regard for truth, but I came away with profound respect for the inventive skill of Herr Brandt, of Darmstadt, in whom Wagner discovered a man able to satisfy his most extravagant desires. Later on I shall have occasion to speak of the more prominent features in a series of stage spectacles, which may be regarded as the ne plus ultra of their kind. Fortunate in scenic resources, Wagner was not less so in all other departments of the complicated apparatus required by his music-drama. In Herr Doepler, of Berlin, he had an artist able to dress the characters after a fashion at once truthful—as far as truth can be ascertained—and picturesque. The stage groupings were admirably superintended by Herr Fricke, of Dessau; while Herr Richter, of Vienna, filled the all-important post of conductor in a manner absolutely beyond reproach. I may say this the more emphatically, because I have never seen Herr Richter. He is known to me only "by his fruits," and assuredly never did music so exacting receive such ample justice. It may be urged that the completeness of the performance arose from a multitude of rehearsals. Of course it did—otherwise Herr Richter and his men would have wrought a miracle. The secret of their success, apart from individual skill, was simply hard work. Let me give particulars on this head. The orchestral rehearsals alone of the four dramas were thirty-six in number—nine for each drama, to say nothing of subsequent rehearsals more or less "full." Many of these lasted four hours, the "wind" occupying two hours, and the strings the other two. In point of fact, active preparations began on the third day of June, and continued without intermission till within three days of the performance. "No wonder," it may be said, "that the result was perfect." The wonder is that, in our days of hurry, so much patient labour was thought needful and cheerfully bestowed. As a matter of course, the instrumentalists were the pick of Germany. Herr Wilhelmj led the 32 violins, having under him eight concertmeisters, to say nothing of artists well known as performers of chamber music; while the 12 violas, 12 violoncelli, and 8 double-basses, added to this splendid army of fiddles, made up a string band such as could only before have been dreamt of by the connoisseurs whose hopes it more than realized. Among the "wind" were 4 flutes, 4 oboes, 1 cor Anglais, 3 clarinets, 1 bass clarinet, 4 bassoons, 1 contra fagotto, 7 horns, 4 tenor and bass tubas (expressly made for the occasion), 3 trumpets, 1 bass trumpet, 4 trombones, 1 double-bass trombone, 1 bass oboe (also constructed specially), 1 double-bass tuba, drums, and 8 harps. The preponderance of bass in this scheme, especially of "sixteen-feet tone," must at once strike every reader. But in practice it was none too much. On the contrary, it gave surprising majesty to the ensemble, while the numerous phrases for the bass alone were rolled out with a force that sometimes approached the awful. As to the uniform excellency of the orchestra I cannot be particular, because, even if space were available, words would fail. Enough if I invite the reader to imagine all he can in the way of merit, and then believe that he has not done justice to Herr Richter's wonderful band. Turning to the vocal artists, let me first put on record their names and characters: F. Betz (Wotan), A. Niemann (Siegmund), G. Unger (Siegfried and Froh), E. Gura (Gunther and Donner), H. Vogl (Loge), C. Hill (Alberich), C. Schlosser (Mime), A. Eilers (Fasolt), F. von Reichenberg (Fafner), J. Niering (Hunding), G. Siehr (Hagen), A. Materna (Brünnhilde), F. Grün (Fricka), M. Haupt (Freia), L. Jaïde (Erda and Waltraute), J. Schefzky (Sieglinde), M. Weckerlin (Gutrune), L. Lehmann, M. Lehmann, and M. Lammert (Rhine Daughters)—in all twenty artists, not counting the representatives of three Norns, eight Walkyries, and a chorus of nine women and fifteen men. That all had been carefully chosen the result proved. The acting in most cases was irreproachable; in some super-excellent. In stature and bearing Wagner's chosen ones realized his ideal; nor were they destitute of the physical qualities necessary to sustained declamation at the top of the voice against a powerful orchestra. That no more than two or three had any right to call themselves vocalists is true, but as Wagner gave them no vocal music, in the ordinary sense of the term, the fact mattered little. They enunciated his lines with vigour, and left the musical effect to the safe care of the band. Among the artists specially worthy of honour were Frau Materna, whose Brünnhilde, a fine dramatic and declamatory character, is fitly described as splendid. Herr Betz, as the gloomy Wotan, showed great power, while the Loge of Herr Vogl and the Mime of Herr Schlosser were creations of the highest order. The stage effects gained their impressiveness chiefly through certain novel means, for, though the scenery was good, it is often, as scenery, equalled on the English stage. Drifting clouds were admirably simulated by a clever contrivance; the lightning and thunder, instead of burlesquing, exactly reproduced, nature, and the use of steam made possible such a display of apparently real smoke and flame as had never before been attempted on any stage. Per contra, the magic lantern did its work as badly as usual in the representation of the Walkyries flying through the air, the beasts were more grotesque than appalling, and in the performance of "Das Rheingold" accidents happened which, considering the months spent in preparation, were without excuse.

The preliminary and subordinate part of my task here ends, and I come to the gist of the whole matter — What is this new thing which Herr Wagner has bestowed upon the world?

It must be obvious that, in answering a question so comprehensive—when the thing comprehended is four long dramas—I cannot enter into minute particulars. To do so would be to fill this number of the Musical Times, and still leave much unsaid. All that I may attempt is the imparting of what autumn manœuvring commanders style a "general idea," by means of as many details as space allows.

First, let me touch the poem. "Der Ring des Nibelungen" consists of four sections: an Introduction, "Das Rheingold," and a trilogy—"Die Walküre," "Siegfried," and "Götterdämmerung." So constituted it is a complete work, bound together in all its parts by the closest ties, having a distinct beginning, an equally distinct ending, and comprising within itself all that is necessary to perfect elucidation. Looking at the technical completeness of "Der Ring des Nibelungen," it is easy to assume that the plan was carefully defined from the outset. Not so, however. It grew under the author's hands till that which was once but a single drama became four. Curiously enough, it stretched backwards in point of time. Dealing at first with results arising from hidden causes, Wagner felt the necessity of revealing those causes, and so was led to the source whence all the effects arose. We have his own authority for believing this; moreover, he has told us exactly where and under what circumstances he began the work. Having drawn a succession of heroes—the Dutchman, Tannhaüser and Lohengrin—from the region of myth, he looked about, more than twenty-five years ago, for a successor to those famous personages, and, after glancing at Frederic Barbarossa only to find that historical characters were unmanageable, according to his theory, he alighted upon Siegfried, one of the most prominent actors in Teutonic and Scandinavian mythology. Siegfried was a tempting subject. Himself a splendid being, he formed the central figure of a group of events unsurpassed in romantic interest and poetic beauty. But as the limits of a single drama would not admit even the chief events of Siegfried's life, Wagner chose those immediately preceding his death, and based upon them the poem now known as "Götterdämmerung"—fourth and last section of "Der Ring des Nibelungen"—but then entitled "Siegfried's Tod." The story of this drama is highly exciting, and its outlines show that the author had in view an impressive stage spectacle analogous to that of "Tannhauser" and "Lohengrin." We find the same rapid series of exciting events, the same highly-wrought climaxes, the same employment of crowds upon the stage, and, in short, all the elements of spectacular lyric drama as accepted by Wagner at an earlier period of his career. How much "Götterdämmerung" differs from "Siegfried's Tod" the author has not revealed. It is probable that some additions were made, but internal evidence goes to show that the poem, as we have it, belongs mainly, in point of dramatic construction, to the "Lohengrin" period. Like all its successors, however, it differs as to the character of verse. For reasons he has fully set forth, but which need not be discussed here, Wagner adopted in "Siegfried's Tod" the unrhymed alliterative verse of the old Teutonic and Scandinavian poets, believing that its marked accents and positive rhythm best harmonized with the idea he had formed that the melos should be suggested by, and grow from, the "word." I take an example of this form from Mr. Alfred Forman's excellent translation of "Der Ring des Nibelungen"—a translation as yet only circulated in private, but which, it is hoped, will soon be made public—choosing part of a song that throws a halo of beauty even around an incestuous love-making of brother and sister:—

"Winter storms make way to the wakening May, in placid splendour
prospers the Spring;
on bending breezes
buoys his journey, weaving wonder
on his way; over field and forest floats his freshness, wide and wakening,
He sounds in boundless singing of buoyant birds, breath is sweet
with scent he sighs:
his liquid blood blooms out in life of blossoms, seed and leaf
are the leap of his heart.
With grace of gentle weapons
he forces the world:
winter and storm give way to his stately war."

In this poem Wagner saw the ideal of musico-dramatic poetry, and throughout "Der Ring des Nibelungen" it is exclusively employed. Adopted as a matter of convenience by the composer, he alone perhaps can fully estimate its value; but impartial listeners must have felt that, brought to the test of performance, greater variety is required. Under certain circumstances, the rugged and strongly-accented lines are all that could be wished; under others, more particularly when soft and tender sentiments prevail, both ear and mind—perhaps from force of habit—demand a gentler rhythm, and long for the suave effect of rhyme.

From this necessary digression I return to the story of the drama. Having completed the poem of "Siegfried's Tod" ("Götterdämmerung"), Wagner, enamoured of his subject, and necessitated to show much that else had to be intellectually perceived, took up the earlier life of the hero. From this sprang a second drama, called at first "Junger Siegfried," and now, as "Siegfried," forming the third section of the great work. There is reason to assume that here the whole scheme of "Der Ring des Nibelungen" dawned upon the author's mind. The force of circumstances carried him, almost despite his will, further and further back to the origin of that which had previously occupied his thoughts, and from the working of this necessity arose "Die Walküre" and "Das Rheingold," connecting ultimate effect with remotest cause. It is not difficult to see in these later dramas—I avoid the word libretti throughout, especially here, where it would have no business at all—how Wagner had passed completely under the dominion of a theory that the poem ought to make no concession for the sake of musical effect. He had laid out "Götterdämmerung" with a view to the usual mingling of solo and concerted piece (though in setting it to music at a later time he refused the opportunities his own hand had prepared, and crowded the stage with dummies), but its successors became, more and more rigidly, dramas. In "Siegfried" there is not a single chorus, and only a few bars of concerted vocal music. In "Die Walküre" there is one chorus for female voices, and in "Das Rheingold" we have what, elsewhere, would be called a trio. In effect, therefore, the three works just named are "plays," throughout which but a single voice is heard at any given time. Unhappily for those who do not accept Wagner's theories, they are "plays," moreover, in the fulness—should I not say prolixity?—of their dialogue. The poet is wholly regardless of the musician. He will utter everything necessary to the completeness of his poem—and very often a good deal is thought needful—the result being a series of conversations, some of them wearisome repetitions, others abounding in allusions, and based upon ideas which are all very well for a reader who can pause to think, but which, on the stage, and associated with music, are embarrassing. Take, as an example, the interview between Wotan and Erda in the third act of "Siegfried," where 183 lines are devoted chiefly to telling us what we already know, or to references the significance of which by no means lies on the surface. I do not urge this as against the beauty and completeness of the poem, but simply to point it out for consideration as connected with a "drama for music." The question, of course, arises—and a most important one it is—whether a drama for music should so rigidly consult its own separate necessities, and yield nothing to the conditions of its alliance. My own answer given deliberately after the experience of Bayreuth, is in the negative. It is true that Wagner has so far recognized the demands of music as to identify each scene with some distinct emotion, powerfully expressed; but even this is not enough to save his theory from rejection. In every drama so constructed there must be passages with which music has nothing to do, and the effect of which music, especially when written on the principles hereafter mentioned, simply mars. But the question underlying all is whether Wagner has not hit upon a fallacy in supposing that he can, from a practical point of view, subordinate music to drama. In theory, his system appears perfect; in reality, I doubt whether it will ever work. The way to test this is for the audience at Bayreuth to ask themselves what part of the compound thing there presented engaged most of their attention. Wagner, as the official mouthpiece of his system, would urge that the mind should have been sensible of nothing but a whole; but that was impossible. The three grand elements—music, poetry, and stage representation—stood separately before every eye, and there can be no doubt as to which was most earnestly regarded; which was most discussed, which contributed before the others to the judgment pronounced. The predominance of music in all these respects might have been foreseen, and was, in fact, inevitable. Associate music and poetry on equal terms you cannot. The more universal, emotional, and powerful art will prevail; and not all the force of twenty Wagners can alter the fact. Wherefore, I contend, that to write a drama with a view to dramatic exigencies alone, and then to ally it with music, must not only result in failure, but is contrary to the very nature of things.

Leaving these general considerations, I approach the particular illustration of his theory with which, in "Der Ring des Nibelungen," Wagner has furnished us. Does it prove that the domain of myth is that wherein the writer of music-drama should look for his subject? The answer is neither an unqualified "Yes" nor an unqualified "No." On the one side, the poet is free, in myth-land, from a number of embarrassments and restrictions which surround him elsewhere. He can, as Wagner has shown, well define and condense the emotion of each particular scene, and he is not bound by historic truth or regard for conventionalities. These are such immense advantages, that I am far from sure whether they do not outweigh anything on the opposite side. But, per contra, it may be urged that the more mythical a subject the further does it stand away from the sphere of human interest and emotion. In all ages the greatest dramatists have recognized this cardinal fact. Take Shakespeare and his "Midsummer Night's Dream" as a conspicuous example. Essentially a fairy drama —the embodiment of a myth—the "Dream" is full of every-day humanity. The Athenian lovers, Bottom and his crew, the Duke and his court, are all so mixed up with Oberon, Titania, and Puck, that we are never sensible of a want of personal sympathy with character and event. But in "Der Ring des Nibelungen" the humanity is, speaking broadly, too faint for a sustained and absorbing interest. Note the subjoined outline of the story running through all four dramas, and say whether it comes very near the heart: The Rhine Daughters guard a golden treasure in the depths of the river. The treasure gives control of the world to its possessor, but can only fall into the hands of one who forswears love. Alberich, a Nibelung, representative of the subterranean powers of evil, fulfils the condition, seizes the gold, and fashions out of it a ring, the embodiment of his acquired might. At this time Wotan (Odin), chief of the upper gods, is in difficulties. He has engaged giants to build him a castle, Walhall; and, not liking to give them the reward agreed upon, descends to the Nibelungs on a raid after the Rheingold and ring. By trickery he wins these, and with them pays the giants, not before Alberich has attached a curse to the ring, the first fruit of which is seen when one giant kills the other in a dispute over the spoil. The survivor carries off the ring, and, in the guise of a dragon, sleeps upon it, too brutish to avail himself of its power. Wotan, desiring to defend Walhall, allies himself with Erda, the Earth Goddess, by whom he has nine daughters, Walkyries, whose business it is to people the gods' abode with the bravest knights slain in battle. Wishing also to obtain the ring, he, by another alliance, raises up a hero, Siegmund, for whose use he destines a sword so buried in the stem of an ash that none other can pull it out. Siegmund meets with his twin-sister, Sieglinde, married to Hunding, and though the relationship is discovered, carries her off as his wife. On the interposition of Wotan's wife, Fricka, a subsequent combat between Hunding and Siegmund is made fatal to the seducer, though Brünnhilde, the Walkyrie charged by Wotan to effect this result, disobeys and protects, unavailingly, him whom she should have caused to be destroyed. Wotan himself intervenes, and the god-given sword, Nothung, which Siegmund has drawn from the ash, shivers against the god-held spear which symbolizes Wotan's power. Sieglinde, after the fight, seeks refuge in a forest, and Brünnhilde is condemned to sleep, surrounded by fire, upon a rock, till a man shall wake her and claim her as his wife. The incestuous union of Siegmund and Sieglinde produces a son, Siegfried, who, on the death of his mother, is reared by Mime, brother of Alberich, in hope of, through his means, winning the ring for himself. Siegfried, by-and-bye, discovers his parentage; welds together the pieces of the broken sword, Nothung; kills the dragon-giant; kills also Mime, who attempts treachery; carries off the ring, and by miraculous means, understanding the language of birds, hears from them of the sleeping Brünnhilde. Longing for human sympathy, and not knowing fear, he reaches Brünnhilde's rock, plunges through the fire and wins the maid. But he cannot stay with her always, and sets forth in due time to see the world and seek adventure. Lighting on the Court of King Gunther, he drinks a magic draught brewed by Hagen, son of Alberich, forgets even the existence of Brünnhilde, becomes enamoured of Gutrune, Gunther's sister, and to obtain her agrees to win Brünnhilde for the King, who has heard of the sleeping heroine, yet cannot face the fire. Siegfried fulfils his promise in the guise of Gunther, and Brünnhilde is carried off as Gunther's wife. But the treachery is revealed through the ring, which Siegfried, acting for his friend, had wrested from Brünnhilde (who wore it as a love token) and forgotten to hand over to Gunther when they changed places. Full of revenge, the outraged woman reveals to Hagen where Siegfried is vulnerable, and, in the course of a hunting excursion, the Nibelung's son kills the hero. The body is carried to the palace, where Brünnhilde, putting the ring on her finger, leaps into the flames of the funeral pyre. The Rhine overflows the spot, and the Rhine Daughters recover the accursed ornament at the moment that Walhall in flames proclaims the downfall of the reign of force and the advent of that of love. Looking at this wonder-story, with its array of gods, demons, giants, dragons, miraculous gauds, potent drinks, and what not that ever entered into the fabulist's head, it may naturally be doubted whether the drama at any time approaches the spectator near enough to touch the spring of his emotions. That it does so, here and there, is true, but it is also a fact that, generally speaking, we care little what becomes of anybody concerned. The supernatural beings, when not repugnant, are indifferent, the mortals as a rule are more or less contemptible, while upon all rests the dark shadow of an incestuous crime so rare even in the days of myth that Fricka exclaims, urging Wotan to punish Siegmund:—

> of brother and sister!
> When, where was it known > to mate with the child of your mother!"

Is this story, wherein poetic beauty and ingenious circumstances are allied to childish imaginings, made black by association with a sin, which horrifies even a goddess, and degraded by connection with love that rises in but a single instance above animalism—is this a model for the national music-drama of Germany? Heaven forefend.

Here I have done with the poem of "Der Ring des Nibelungen." A consideration of the music is obviously impossible within the limits of the present article. Let it be postponed, then, till space enough is available for the treatment of a subject at once so novel and so important in its relations to the "Art-work of the future."

EVERY English musician must feel gratified at the success of the "Balfe Memorial Festival," given during the past month at the Alexandra Palace, more particularly as it was organized to perpetuate his name by founding a "Balfe Scholarship" in our Royal Academy of Music. Whatever may be thought of his latest work, "Il Talismano," there can be no doubt that it is not by this opera that he will be eventually judged; for he was essentially a people's composer, and in setting Sir Walter Scott's story to music he unquestionably forsook the style which won the hearts of the masses in days gone by. The great merit of Balfe was that he kept English opera alive at a time when, but for his efforts, it might have utterly collapsed. As we have said, therefore, we cordially welcome the "Balfe Memorial Festival," not only, however, on its own account, but because it leads us to hope that native talent may eventually be recognized, and especially that another English composer, named Purcell—who has written a few things worth re-hearing—may some day have his "Memorial" also, with as many eminent artists to do justice to his works, and as many thousands of people to listen to them.

Possibly few persons knew of the existence of "The Musicians' Company" until, on the 1st ult., a dinner of this ancient Guild took place at the Albion Tavern, under the presidency of the Master, Mr. William Chappell, for the purpose of presenting Sir Henry Cole, K.C.B., and Mr. Freake with the freedom of the Company. In the present day we have no distinct idea of what the real duties of this Company may consist; but when we are informed that "power was given to examine the qualifications of all public performers, and to silence the incompetent," many will regret that this privilege, at least, should have ceased.

As music is now represented in the metropolis exclusively by the "Promenade Concerts" at Covent Garden Theatre, it is satisfactory to find that the direction of them is entrusted to so eminent an artist as Signor Arditi, and that the programmes rarely include such sensational pieces of clap-trap as those which had their origin in the days of M. Jullien, and have been continued down to very recent times. We could certainly wish that "refreshments" held a less important part in the entertainments of the evening, for although these are certainly carefully served and partaken of behind the orchestra, the effect is unquestionably visible before it; yet whilst the Messrs. Gatti remain lessees of the establishment we can scarcely, perhaps, hope for much reform in this department. We still think, too, that in the selection of music the taste of the audience is somewhat underrated; and it might be well to consider whether, having formed what is advertised as the "finest coup d'œil in the world," attention should not be directed towards forming an equally attractive feast for the ear.

No doubt the time is fast approaching when it will be unnecessary to send music for review, because publishers will review it themselves. Passing over the announcement, for instance, in a morning paper, of the Moore and Burgess Minstrels' "new and lovely songs," we come to "the most elegant piano solo published this season," a "very charming new waltz;" and then, in an advertisement of a ballad, we are told that "the words and music of this song are charming," although this praise is said to be extracted from a "Review," the name of which is not given. But that the Americans are ahead of us in laudation of their own wares the following advertisement, published in a London newspaper, will amply testify: "Steinway Pianofortes.—It gives a feeble and altogether inadequate conception of the value and importance of the Steinway instruments—grand, upright, and oblong—merely to say that they are the greatest pianofortes in the world, the fact being universally conceded. More important is the further fact that no one can possibly form an idea of the capabilities and resources of the pianoforte who has not seen and heard the Steinway creations." What will become of Messrs. Broadwood, Collard, and Erard when the "universally-conceded" fact and the "further fact" shall have been sufficiently advertised?

THE MUSICIANS' COMPANY.

The Master and Wardens of the Worshipful Company of Musicians entertained a large party at dinner on Tuesday the 1st ult., at the Albion, Aldersgate-street, Mr. William Chappell, F.S.A., the Master, presiding.

In giving the toast of the Musicians' Company the Master said:—

"I will preface the toast of the Musicians' Company by a few words about its history. It was originally instituted as a Guild or Fraternity of Minstrels by King Edward IV. in the ninth year of his reign. The charter is still extant, and is printed in Rymer's Fœdera (xi. 642). The Court of the Company was formed of musicians in the service of the king who had also been in that of his predecessor, Henry VI. The master, who was then called the marshall, held his appointment for life, and his two wardens were elected annually. Power was given to examine the qualifications of all public performers, and to silence the incompetent. The Guild was attached to the Chapel of the Virgin, under S. Paul's Cathedral, and to the Chapel of S. Anthony, which is only described as in the City of London. It was to keep wax tapers burning in each of the two chapels, and to pray for the health and for the souls of the king, the queen, the Duke of York, and the rest of the royal family. Funds were provided by a payment not exceeding three shillings and fourpence from each person upon admission, and by fines inflicted upon pretenders to minstrelsy, or upon delinquents for irregularities or indifferent performance. This was the charter of the company until the reign of James I. Among the Remembrancia of the City of London recently brought to light, No. 16 is a letter from the Lord Keeper, Sir John Puckering, to the Lord Mayor, requesting him to see that William Warren, lately chosen Master of the Musicians' Company, but prevented from the peaceful exercise of his office by some of the members of the company, be not further interfered with. This letter is dated the 29th September, 1594. The new charter granted to the company by James I., in the second year of his reign, dispenses with the wax candles and the praying for souls, and substitutes for them the right to hold land and houses. It renews the powers of the former charter, but makes the election of the master annual, as well as that of the wardens.

"I will now give you the old toast: 'Prosperity to the Musicians' Company, root and branch—may it flourish for ever!'"

In reference to the presentation of the freedom of the company to Sir Henry Cole and Mr. Freake, the Master said:—

"At the last meeting of the Court of this Company it was unanimously resolved that the freedom of the City of London, with the livery of our company, should be presented to Sir Henry Cole, Knight Commander of the Bath, who is one of our honoured guests this evening, and to Mr. Charles James Freake, of whose company we are unfortunately deprived through illness.

"Of Sir Henry it may be said that he is half a citizen already, through having received his education at Christ's Hospital. Although his energetic and useful career may be known to many here present, yet permit me on this occasion to refer to a few of the more salient points—those from which the public has derived lasting benefit.

"Having entered the public service, under the Record Commission, in 1823, Mr. Cole became an assistant-keeper of the Public Records, and, having drawn attention, both publicly and privately, to the dispersed and neglected state of his charge, he paved the way to the establishment of the General Record Office. Hence the classification and the cataloguing of the records, with the gradual extension of facilities for consulting them—a privilege which is absolutely necessary to historians and to other students of the past. For this gain all literary men are debtors to Sir Henry Cole, as to the mainspring which first set the wheel in motion. Their cordial thanks are also due to the patriotic men—encouragers of learning—who have promoted this admirable result.

"A second public service was the energetic assistance rendered by Mr. Cole to the establishment of penny postage. He gained one of the four prizes of £100 offered by the Treasury for suggestions to develope Sir Rowland Hill's plan, and continued his aid to Sir Rowland until his object was fully attained. He had himself accepted the office of Secretary to the Mercantile Committee on Postage, and was thus instrumental in furthering the success of a measure which he had helped to carry. The system of cheap postage, thus worked out, has been adopted by other nations, and thereby a more general public benefit has accrued than even its sanguine projectors may have contemplated.

"Passing over other general services, I now turn to some of those which have been rendered to art and to science. It may be supposed that these should be our special charge in the City, since this ancient guild is the only one now remaining which was established for any art or science unconnected with a trade.

"The exhibitions of art manufactures which commenced about the year 1846, at the rooms of the Society of Arts, were projected and organized by Sir Henry Cole, who is a vice-president of that very active and useful association. The intention was to encourage artistic design in manufactures of everyday use and of general utility. He won prizes for his 'Felix Summerly' designs. These annual displays were designed to lead to national exhibitions of arts and manufactures every fifth year. The first of this series would have taken place in 1851, but the plan was extended by the late Prince Consort to an exhibition of the works of industry of all nations. Mr. Cole was one of the executive committee of that famous and most successful exhibition, and, with Dr. Lyon Playfair and others, received the honour of Companionship of the Order of the Bath at its conclusion. In the following year he was invited by the Government, through Earl Granville, to improve the system of the Schools of Design, and he was thus instrumental in establishing the Science and Art Department, of which he was at first senior secretary, and afterwards inspector-general.

"To the pecuniary success of the Great Exhibition in Hyde Park, which sprang out of Sir Henry Cole's projection of one of more limited character, we are mainly indebted for the present magnificent establishments at South Kensington. In 1860 Sir Henry was appointed General Superintendent of the South Kensington Museum, and also acted as secretary of the Science and Art Department, under the Committee of Council on Education. In this capacity we know that he created, or was directly responsible for, the system of Science and Art Schools which by general consent are acknowledged to have done so much good already for the country. In 1865 he was chosen chairman of a committee to investigate and to report on the whole subject of musical education in this and in foreign countries, and very full and lucid reports were published by that committee; and in 1873 he retired from office at South Kensington, after fifty years of public service.

"Much more might be said of so useful a life, but it is not desirable to extend a speech into a biography. I will, however, add that Sir Henry's services were acknowledged by Her Majesty in conferring on him the rank of Knight Commander of the Bath about two years after his retirement. I am sure you will all cordially join with me in presenting the freedom of the City of London, with the livery of the Worshipful Company of Musicians, to Sir Henry Cole.

"I have now to bring before you the name of Mr. Charles James Freake, of whose company we are unfortunately deprived this evening by severe indisposition. Mr. Freake is an energetic and useful member of the Council of the Society of Arts, and he has munificently presented to the nation a National Training School for Music at South Kensington. About eleven years ago a committee was formed by the Society of Arts, at the instigation of Sir Henry Cole, to investigate the whole subject of musical education both at home and abroad, and especially to inquire into the systems and the management of conservatoires for gratuitous instruction in music for those who show talent. These institutions are either wholly supported by the State, or receive considerable annual grants from the respective Governments. It is, indeed, an anomaly that, in so wealthy a country as our own, we have no institution of the kind. The parsimonious contribution of £500 a year to the funds of the Royal Academy of Music is unworthy the name of support. Other arts are better cared for in England. At the time our Guild was established music was taught in all schools, whether for rich or for poor, and it is a mistake to suppose that the poor were only taught church music. Instrumental music was included, as well as vocal. The children were taught to read music at sight, and some instruction was given in harmony. A familiar example of the last is the roundel or catch made by the watermen of London upon Sir John Norman, Lord Mayor of London in 1453. It is good harmony in three parts, and although very simple, it shows that musical education was more solid then than it usually is now, even among the higher classes. There are hundreds of equally good musical specimens extant, and for the most part relating to the trades and amusements of the lower classes. Then England was proud of her music, and foreign visitors reported well of it. In the reign of Edward IV. came two illustrious tourists, and from them we learn that the chorus consisted of about sixty voices, and that they nowhere heard better singing or music than at the court of the English king. Similar quotations might be multiplied indefinitely. It was a recommendation to all servants that they could read music, and it formed the chief indoor amusement of the people. Men like Samuel Pepys would only have servants who could sing at sight. If we educate the rising generation to music, there will be far less of drunkenness among the people. Men take to drinking to relieve dulness by the excitement which alcohol causes in the brain. To increase home enjoyments is a far better system than a crusade against public-houses. To shut them will not prevent drunkenness; means will be found to supply the craving at home. Moreover, it is punishing all because some are prone to drink to excess. There are and will be some drunkards in every country, but the English were not characterized by that vice in the times of Merrie England. They drank less potent liquors; and even at the commencement of the last century, when an almost prohibitory duty was laid upon French wines, and Tom Durfey sang—

"'As well might Dutchmen without Brandy fight,
As English poets without claret write'— and the people had their ballads with such burdens as—

"'French wine's prohibition means no other thing
Than to poison the subject and beggar the king.'

"We are returning to a more sober age, and there is no such soother to the brain as music. This is now so generally admitted by physicians that music enters largely into their treatment of insanity.

"The question of establishing a State Training School for music has been under the consideration of the Lords of the Committee of Council on Education, and it may be hoped that Mr. Freake's munificent gift may stimulate their long-desired action. It is a reproach to England that genius and talent for music are still suffered to die out for want of an education which only a Government can permanently supply. It will also be very gratifying to the lovers of music to hear that Mr. Freake's energetic action for his country's good is likely to receive some recognition from the Government. Let us hope that the reinstatement of music as a moral agent will be made complete. I have only one word to add in regret that the two institutions were not combined in one. With so earnest a man in the cause of music as Professor Macfarren at the head of the Royal Academy of Music, my conviction is that this might have been arranged. So long as the National Training School remains for gratuitous instruction only, it will relieve the Royal Academy of some of its unprofitable work, but it may draw away some pupils of the greatest promise. There ought to be scholars enough in England for both, as there were in former days. Let us, then, hope for the success of both.

"I will now propose to you the health of Mr. Charles James Freake, whose munificent gift to the nation we acknowledge by the freedom of the City of London and the livery of our Company, and couple with his name that of his accomplished lady, Mrs. Freake, who has presented five scholarships to the school of her husband's founding."

The music at the banquet was under the direction of Mr. E. Land, with Miss Jane Wells, Miss Helen Heath, Mr. Land, and Mr. Lawler as vocalists.

Taking the names of the six new livery men of this year in alphabetical order they are—

Mr. Frank Chappell, 123, Harley Street;
Mr. Edward Land, 4, Cambridge Place, Regent's Park;
Mr. George Thomas Metzler, 37, Great Marlborough Street;
Mr. Thomas Molineux, Kean's Villa, Regent's Park.
Mr. Henry Phillips, Old Jewry Chambers, and 10, Bolton Street, Piccadilly; and
Dr. William Henry Stone, F.R.C.P., Physician to St. Thomas's Hospital, 14, Dean's Yard, Westminster.

ALEXANDRA PALACE.

IT is scarcely necessary to offer any critical remarks upon the "Balfe Memorial Festival" which took place at this establishment on the 29th July, because, in justice to the composer, of course only the choicest specimens of his works were selected, and with such executants as Mesdames Christine Nilsson, Rose Hersee, and Marie Roze, Messrs. E. Lloyd, G. Perren, Maybrick, &c., it is obvious that every justice was done to the music. The concert, conducted by Sir Michael Costa, was highly successful; and the performance of "The Bohemian Girl," with Madame Hersee, Miss Bessie Palmer, Messrs. G. Perren, Fox, and Henry Pope in the principal characters, was listened to by a large audience with much pleasure, most of the popular pieces being, as in former days, re-demanded. Mr. Weist Hill conducted the Opera in his usually careful and intelligent manner. In order to establish some kind of connection between the fireworks and the design of the Festival, one of the set pieces presented a lyre, surrounded by flags and laurel leaves, the name of Balfe being conspicuous in fiery letters. The attendance was so large that the foundation of a Scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music, in memory of the composer—which was announced as the principal object of the meeting—may be considered as secure.

THE "Promenade Concerts" commenced at Covent Garden Theatre on the 5th ult., under the direction of Messrs. A. and S. Gatti. The orchestra, strengthened by the band of the Coldstream Guards, and under the able direction of Signor Arditi, is thoroughly efficient; and we can only regret that such excellent performers as are there assembled should be called upon occasionally to exercise their talents upon waltzes and galops. Full overtures and scraps of symphonies have, however, been included in the programme, for the especial benefit of those who are attracted by the music alone, and these have all been received with the warmest marks of approbation. Mdlle. Bianchi has thoroughly won the good opinion of the frequenters of these concerts by her finished singing, and Madame Fernandez-Bentham and Signori Gianini and Medica have also contributed vocal pieces with much success. M. Ketten—whose style may be imagined by his being termed "The French Rubinstein"—has been the pianist, eliciting frantic applause by his performance of the "Adagio" and "Scherzo" from a pianoforte Concerto by Litolff, and some showy Fantasias. The concerts have been fully attended, in spite of the proverbial "thinness" of the metropolis at this time of the year.

THE English Opera Season at the Lyceum Theatre, under the direction of Mr. Carl Rosa, will commence on Monday, the 11th inst., the work selected for the opening night being Cherubini's "Water Carrier," the production of which at the end of last season was so heartily welcomed by all music lovers. Sir J. Benedict's "Lily of Killarney," with alterations and additions specially written for this company, will be performed; and for novelties we are promised "Joconde," by Nicolo Isouard; "Giralda," by Adolphe Adam (both for the first time in England); a new opera, "Pauline," by F. H. Cowen, written expressly for this company; Beethoven's "Fidelio" (as originally composed, without recitatives); and Wagner's "Flying Dutchman," for the first time in English. The company will include, among others, Mdlle. Ida Corani, Miss G. Warwick, Miss Cora Stuart, Miss Gaylord, Miss Josephine Yorke, Miss Lucy Franklein, Mr. H. Nordblom, Mr. F. C. Packard, Mr. C. Lyall, Mr. F. H. Celli, Mr. A. Cook, and Mr. Santley. The orchestra will be led by Mr. Carrodus.

AN article recently published in the Standard draws attention to the good work now progressing in Italy, under the earnest direction of Signor Giulio Roberti. All music lovers who remember the state of the art in Italy some time back must have been struck with the inferiority of modern performances, both sacred and secular, the services at St. Peter's, even the singing of the nuns at the once celebrated Trinità dei Monti being far from satisfactory; and at the opera houses the "Spectacle" and the "Ballo" are now the principal attractions. In the hope of remedying this state of things, Signor Roberti, who has already made his name in England by the publication of a Mass and several pieces of chamber music—obtained permission to found a school of choral singing at Florence, the success of which has been remarkable. Since then he has been charged with the establishment of classes of music in all the municipal schools, and with the yet more important organization of a normal school for masters and mistresses. Although it must be some time before great results can be achieved, the movement is steadily advancing; and we trust that the efforts of Signor Roberti in initiating so important a reform may be fully and extensively recognized.

WE regret to find that Mr. Charles S. Barker, the inventor of the pneumatic action, and by whose research many invaluable improvements in organs have been perfected, is, at the advanced age of 70, in very reduced circumstances. A Committee has been formed with the view of obtaining, by subscription, a sufficient amount to purchase an annuity which shall secure him from want for the remainder of his life, and we trust that a liberal response will be made to this appeal. A list of the Committee, with other particulars, will be found in our advertising columns.

HER Majesty has conferred the honour of knighthood upon Mr. H. S. Oakeley, Mus. Doc., Professor of Music at the University of Edinburgh, in commemoration of his services at the ceremony of unveiling a statue of the late Prince Consort in the Scotch Capital, on which occasion he composed a Chorale—which was sung by the Edinburgh Choral Union, supplemented by members of some of the church choirs of the city—and directed the whole of the music performed.

THE opening of Chester Cathedral, after its restoration, took place on the 7th ult. before a congregation of between three and four thousand persons. The surpliced choir and clergy assembled in the vestries, whence they walked in procession around the cloisters, singing "Lift the strain of high thanksgiving" as a processional hymn. The effect of the distant melody, gradually becoming nearer and more distinct until it resounded through the nave and was taken up by the organ, was most telling. About 100 choristers from the various English and Welsh cathedrals were followed by four times that number of clergy until the interior of the choir was filled. The evening service was conducted by the precentor and the cathedral clerical staff, Mr. Gunton (organist) and Mr. Bridge (deputy organist) playing the accompaniments, anthems, &c. The canticles were sung to Attwood in D by the Chester choir. The anthem "It came even to pass" (Ouseley) was given by the Lichfield choir, and the one "In that day shall this song" (Elvey), by the Windsor choir, the composer taking part in its performance. The anthem "Hosanna to the Son of David" (Gibbons) was sung by the full choir, without accompaniment. The musical services were continued until the 16th ult.

A CHORAL Festival will be held in Rochester Cathedral towards the end of October, in aid of the Choir Benevolent Fund.

MR. D. J. WOOD has been appointed Organist to Exeter Cathedral, in place of the late Mr. A. Angel.

THE formal inauguration of the organ in Christ Church, Westminster-road, built by Messrs. T. C. Lewis and Co., together with a special musical service, took place on the 28th July, when Mr. George Cooper played a selection of music with his well-known ability. The following eminent organists have visited the church, and have expressed their approval of the tone and workmanship of the organ: Messrs. W. T. Best, Henry Smart, George Cooper, and Dr. John Stainer. Mr. F. G. Edwards is the organist and director of the choir of the church.

THE St. George's Glee Union (Pimlico Rooms) Monthly Concert took place on the 4th ult., when the Choir sang "Sleep, gentle lady" (Bishop), "The welcome home" (Haking), "Softly fall" (Hatton), "Good night, farewell" (Garrett), &c. The solos in the latter were given by Miss Spear and Mr. Thurley Beale, who, in conjunction with Messrs. King and Coles, also sang "Good night, thou glorious sun" (Smart). Among the most successful songs were "Beautiful summer" (Nelson), by Miss Spear, "Voi che sapete" (Mozart), by Miss Goldsmith, "My Queen" (Blumenthal), by Mr. A. Bennett, and "A Rover's life" (Trego), by Mr Thurley Beale, the last accompanied by the composer. Mr. F. Augarde played a violin solo with fair success, and Chopin's brilliant Pianoforte Impromptu in A flat was excellently rendered by Miss Julia Augarde. In the absence of Mr. Garside, the Concert was conducted by Mr. J. Monday with great care and ability. Mr. G. Fox's new Cantata, "The Jackdaw of Rheims," will shortly be performed by this Society.

ON the 22nd ult., the first day of the Welsh National Eisteddfod, at Wrexham, the principal event was the choral competition, open to choirs not exceeding one hundred and fifty voices, the prize being £100 and a gold baton, value £10, for the conductor. Sir Julius Benedict and two other gentlemen were the adjudicators. Four choirs competed, viz., the Carnarvon Philharmonic Society, the Birkenhead Cambrian Society, the Penrhyn Choral Union, and the Dinorwic Choir. The pieces sung were, "Ye nations offer to the Lord," from Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise, and "Achieved is the glorious work," from Haydn's Creation. Sir Julius Benedict highly complimented the several choirs upon the excellent manner in which they had rendered the above difficult pieces, and eventually awarded the prize to the Birkenhead Choir.

WE have received, on a card, a fac-simile of Purcell's Gravestone in Westminster Abbey, showing the inscription as restored. The work has been entrusted to Messrs. Henry Poole, of Westminster, and so admirably have they performed their task, that the inscription may be expected to last for centuries, since instead of being merely engraved, it is formed entirely of solid brass characters let into the black marble ledger. The monument to Purcell has also been repaired and re-lettered, and is now securely fixed to the column from which it threatened to fall. Surmounted by the usual antique lamp in place of that which had altogether disappeared, the monument is now seen as represented in old engravings. From the balance remaining in hand the monuments to Blow, Croft, Cooke, Burney, Bartleman, &c., have been repaired, and the lettering upon them restored where necessary, the inscription on Bartleman's tablet having a special interest from the fact of its having been written by Dean Ireland. The remainder of the balance has been handed to the Secretary of the Choir Benevolent Fund.

REVIEWS.

NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

The Morning and Evening Service, together with the Office for the Holy Communion. Set to music in an easy form. By Charles Lawrence.

THIS is a service which may be taken as a fair sample of a very large class. It is written in the conventional modern form—that is, with a free organ part; the composition is in general sufficiently correct, though Mr. Lawrence seems rather fond of introducing his $\frac{6}{4}$ chords in cadences on the unaccented part of the bar (there are two examples on page 6, both of which produce an uncomfortable effect—at least to our ears); the work is quite easy enough for an ordinary parish choir, but it seems to lack one thing—charm. It would be unfair to call it bad; but it fails to interest. A mere succession of chords, however well put together, is not sufficient to make a fine composition, and a great deal of Mr. Lawrence's service reminds us of nothing so much as the thorough bass exercise of a well-advanced student.

Three Magnificats à Faux Bourdons, in the 1st and 2nd Ecclesiastical Tones, with varied Organ Accompaniments, Interludes, &c., for festal use. By the Rev. C. J. Ridsdale, B.A.

As it is more than probable that the great majority of our readers will not have the faintest idea what a "Faux Bourdons" is, it will be as well to explain that it was an old method of harmonizing a canto fermo, principally in thirds and sixths, and usually, but not always, note against note. We must confess that the specimens furnished by Mr. Ridsdale in his three settings of the Magnificat have not inspired us with any violent affection for this species of composition. To most modern ears, and we include our own, Gregorian music if presented, except in very small doses, in its original form, has an unpleasant effect. There is, it must be admitted, a certain rude grandeur about it when sung (as recently at St. Paul's) by an enormous choir, but the ear accustomed to more modern harmony soon tires of the uncouth and rude progressions; and, to judge from the music before us, they are certainly not made more palatable by an accompaniment of "Faux Bourdons." Mr. Ridsdale's idea of interludes seems also somewhat peculiar. Those that he has given are for the most part quite modern in their harmony, and therefore entirely out of keeping with the rest of the music; while in one instance (p. 5) we find such a very lively strain with triplet quavers on the pedals and abundance of diminished sevenths, that if we heard it played during divine service, it would certainly suggest to our minds the idea that the organist had dined shortly before entering church. This style of music may, however, be possibly the composer's idea of "festal use."

Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, set to music in the key of F, for four voices, with a free accompaniment for the organ. Composed by S. Percival.

THERE is no greater relief to the hearer, and no better resource in the power of composers, than the occasional abandonment of harmony in extended works. This, however, can not only be carried to excess, but in vocal pieces loses force, if in unison passages for the voices the accompaniment contains even fuller harmony than has gone before. The announcement of a free part for the organ raises a hope of a less curtailed liberty than is allotted to the instrument by Mr. Percival. These two remarks sum up our criticism of the movements before us, which will be found agreeable and effective in performance.

Nearer, my God, to Thee. Anthem for four voices, by Frederick Iliffe, Mus. Bac.

WE recently had occasion to notice some short anthems by Mr. Iliffe, and we are happy to be able to say that the favourable opinion formed as to his abilities by their perusal is more than confirmed by the composition now before us. The writing is throughout excellent, and the ideas interesting; but what pleases us most in the work is the genuine musical feeling it evinces. The spirit of the words has been well caught, and there is an entire absence of commonplace in the treatment. The anthem is in four movements. It opens with a chorus in E flat, with some excellent vocal writing; the last half of the chorus we particularly like. The second verse of the hymn is set as an unaccompanied choral in G flat, and the third as a solo (for tenor or treble) in B major. This movement is very good, but we think Mr. Iliffe would have improved it by compression. Why was it necessary at the bottom of page 6 to repeat the words of the whole verse? The final chorus is similar in feeling to the opening; a very good effect is produced by the introduction in the tenor of the choral, which forms the second movement. The anthem as a whole can scarcely be called easy, but it contains nothing beyond the reach of a fairly good choir, and it will, we think, repay for the trouble spent in its preparation. We have much pleasure in heartily recommending it.

Harvest Carol: "Holy is the Seed-time." Composed by Albert Lowe.

BUT few words are necessary in noticing this Carol, for the simplicity of Mr. Lowe's setting of the four verses of thanksgiving scarcely provokes criticism. Yet a "Harvest Carol" should be simple; and when we affirm, therefore, that although unpretentious the little composition is sufficiently tuneful, and that the voice parts are written by an evidently practised hand, we hope that we have said enough to recommend it to the many who will be desirous of giving thanks for the abundant harvest which has been gathered in during the present season.

Impromptu, No. 1, in D minor; for the Pianoforte. Composed by Walter Handel Thorley.

MR. THORLEY will scarcely believe us when we say that his Impromptu reminds us so strongly of Mendelssohn's "Lied ohne Wörte," No. 1, Book 4—although one is in a major and the other in a minor key—that it seems almost a paraphrase. The fact is that the general character of a piece is often reproduced unconsciously by a composer, because the notes differ; in proof of which we may say that we once heard an Overture which recalled throughout that to "Le Nozze di Figaro," although not a single passage in it was identical with any one in Mozart's work. Apart from this, we see much to admire in the Sketch before us, although there is too uniform a colour in the composition to justify its length. The harmonies are good, and the passages lie well under the hands; but a very legato touch will be required to do full justice to the author. The second subject contrasts well with the opening theme. The return to the 12-8 rhythm, however, strikes us as somewhat common; and we should like to dispense with the doubled leading-note on the dominant harmony before the double bar. As the Impromptu is marked "Op. 2," we may hope to meet with better works from this composer.

Minuetto in C, for the Pianoforte. By J. Baptiste Calkin.

IT is difficult indeed in the present day to write a Minuet which shall strike the hearer as sufficiently original to stand apart from the many musician-like specimens of this form of composition so constantly published; and when we say, therefore, that Mr. Calkin has given us as graceful and melodious a Minuet and Trio as we might expect from so practised a composer, we presume that we have awarded him all the praise he anticipated. The opening subject is flowing, but somewhat monotonous, the "Trio" in F being in our opinion by far the better movement of the two. We may say that the passages lie well under the hands; and as a fair example of artistic workmanship, we can conscientiously recommend it to the notice of those who want good, rather than showy, music for drawing-room performance.

Chanson du Moulin. Caprice, pour Piano. Gavotte, pour Piano. Par E. Sauerbrey.

BOTH these pieces, "pour Piano," are composed by (or rather "par") an artist already known well enough in England to justify him in adopting the language of the country. The "Chanson du Moulin" is a slight sketch, easy to play, and melodious, but, both in the first and second subject, recalling compositions bearing a similar title, and written especially for young performers desirous of cultivating music "with a character." The "Gavotte" we like better; the theme, in B flat major, and what is termed the "Trio," in the tonic minor, having some little originality of treatment, although we cannot but think that our stock of such pieces is now ample for present requirements. We shall be glad to find Mr. Sauerbrey employing his talents upon compositions somewhat less conventional than those now before us.

Donec gratus. Ode by Horace. Duet for Soprano and Tenor. The English version by Malcolm Charles Salaman. Music by Charles Salaman.

THE delicate poetical feeling with which Mr. Salaman has musically coloured Horace's Ode should earn for him the earnest praise of every conscientious critic, the more so as it is extremely doubtful whether the general public will fully appreciate his efforts. The refined and melodious theme—first given to the tenor, with an effective syncopated pianoforte part and afterwards to the soprano, with an arpeggio accompaniment—is deeply sympathetic with the words. An appropriate simplicity is preserved where the voices unite, the harmonies throughout seeming to spring up naturally, instead of being, as is too often the case, unduly forced in, for the purpose of displaying the theoretical profundity of the composer. Amongst the many good points in this extremely interesting composition, we may mention the temporary return to the syncopated accompaniment, and the final vocal phrase, to the words "Amem vivere obeam libens," the chromatic descent for the tenor, when the soprano rises to the high G, having an excellent effect. The Ode is difficult to translate; but the spirit of the original has been fairly well preserved by Mr. Malcolm Charles Salaman. Vocalists, however, must remember that they are only half realizing the intention of the composer when they do not sing the Latin words.

The Charge of the Light Brigade. Words by Tennyson. Composed for Chorus, with Orchestral Accompaniment (or pianoforte), by Edward Hecht.

THE power displayed in Miss Thomson's picture on the subject of the Balaclava Charge has recently drawn public attention anew to Tennyson's lines, so forcibly depicting this great military exploit; and Mr. Hecht in the composition before us has employed the powerful aid of music still further to glorify the deed. The piece was originally composed for an unaccompanied chorus, and reviewed by us in that form in January 1873; but so immensely is it strengthened as it now appears that the observations we then made upon it require to be qualified. The full pianoforte accompaniment now added materially enhances the general effect; but the orchestra must be called in perfectly to realize the composer's intention. It is an excellent and stirring piece as it here stands, and amongst the alterations which have been made, we are particularly struck by the effect of the additional eight bars at the conclusion.

CHAPPELL AND CO.

Morning and Evening. Song. Words by Louisa Gray.
At close of day. Song. Words by Cummins O'Brien.
Composed by Amy Compton.

THESE two songs, although simple in construction, are decidedly beyond the average of the compositions of this class which we are unfortunately called upon either to notice or pass over in silence. There is little pretence about the first song, the theme merely melodiously expressing the words, but there are many artistic touches in the accompaniment which show that the composer has studied in a good school. We are particularly pleased with the last phrase, which dies off on the fifth of the key-note, the repetition of the voice-part in the accompaniment adding much to the effect of the concluding bars. On the whole, we think "At close of day" the better of the two songs, although perhaps in the last page too much is attempted in the pianoforte part for a song of this kind. The melody is so tenderly harmonized at the commencement that we feel disappointed when the accompaniment breaks off into chords for the concluding phrases. Perhaps this is expressive of "victory"; but it must be remembered that the victory of a lover is not the same as the victory of a warrior: Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" is not suited for the battle-field. Let us, however, warmly compliment the composer on her success, and express a hope that our counsel may be accepted as kindly as it is meant.

J. B. CRAMER AND CO.

Only a glance. Song. Words by Charles J. Rowe.
Childhood. Do. Do. do.
Composed by Julia Woolf.

As these songs have been so extensively advertised (even at Railway Stations) accompanied by laudatory reviews, extracted from various journals, we presume they must be by this time tolerably independent of criticism. Although thoroughly popular in character, however, musically speaking, there are some points which in a second edition might be altered with advantage. The modulation into C minor, for instance, in the first song, contains consecutive octaves between voice part and bass, from subdominant to dominant (Bar 5, page 5), which listeners not over sensitive would scarcely admit; and we cannot say that we like the bare fourth in the accompaniment doubling the chromatic note with the voice (Bar 6, page 4), although we are fully aware that the desire has been to carry on the theme in the pianoforte part. In every respect we consider "Childhood" a much better composition. The following melody in 12-8 rhythm is well supported by the accompaniment, and the harmonies are appropriate and well considered throughout. It is an "English ballad" in every sense of the word, but sufficiently well treated to rise above the dead level of common-place. Nevertheless, we should like so clever a composer to venture on somewhat higher ground.

AUGENER AND CO.

Original Pieces for the Organ. By Francis Edward Gladstone. No. 10, Prelude and Fugue.

IN the present composition Mr. Gladstone has departed altogether from the conventional form of the organ prelude, without at the same time losing sight of the characteristics of the instrument for which he is writing. The prelude in C minor is in the form of the first movement of a sonata, with a second subject in the relative major, the repetition of the first part, and a short "free fantasia" before the resumption of the first subject. The whole prelude is an interesting piece of music, and well treated. The fugue, which is in C major—a curious innovation after a prelude in C minor—is less to our liking. It is decidedly clever, but somewhat dry, and seems rather to have come from Mr. Gladstone's head than from his heart. That the treatment is skilful and musicianly need hardly be added; but the writing of a really interesting fugue is one of the most difficult tasks which a composer can set himself, and it is no reflection upon Mr. Gladstone to say that the present effort shows more ingenuity than genius.

DUFF AND STEWART.

Anthem: What are these which are arrayed in white robes? By CHARLES H. SHEPHERD, A.R.A.

WE learn from the title-page that this anthem was composed for Mr. Charles Bradley's choir, St. Paul's, Middlesborough. We do not know whether we ought to infer that Mr. Bradley's choir is unable to sing any but the simplest and most elementary music; but we certainly never met with a composition of the length of the present—twelve folio pages—in which there is so little of what is generally understood as "part-writing." With a few unimportant exceptions, the voices move together in chords throughout, and thus an inevitable monotony is produced, detrimental to the effect of an otherwise pleasing and melodious composition. The ideas in the anthem are by no means bad, but they might certainly have been better treated. Mr. Shepherd, however, doubtless knows best the capacity of the choir for which he wrote, and we do not think it would be fair to judge him from the present specimen of his workmanship, especially as we believe, from other of his pieces that we have seen, that he is a well-educated and able musician. This is apparent, moreover, from the harmonising of the work before us, but for the reason already given it fails to produce a wholly satisfactory impression.

WEEKES AND CO.

Gavotte, for the Pianoforte. Minuet and Trio, for the Pianoforte. Composed by George B. Thackwray.

THE custom of throwing our musical language into the idiom of a past age is so gaining ground in the present day that it becomes a question whether—as in the case of dramatists who, in the reign of Victoria, write plays reflecting the reign of Elizabeth—it is not too often used to cover a poverty of invention in the author. Mr. Thackwray's Gavotte is a fair imitation of a class of composition of which our great writers have left us such excellent specimens; but it has scarcely sufficient strength to stand solely on its own merits. The "Minuet and Trio" is better. Based on a simple and unobtrusively harmonised theme, the Minuet is tuneful enough to command attention, and the Trio serves sufficiently well as a contrast. The composer might, we think, be justified in trying his powers upon some pieces which should more decidedly test his inventive faculties.

Six Songs, Inscribed to Mrs. Titus Salt.

1. Cool and clear . Words by Rev. Charles Kingsley.
2. O, wert thou in the cauld blast . . Robert Burns.
3. A widow Bird . . . Percy Bysshe Shelley.
4. Annabel Lee . . . . Edgar Allan Poe.
5. Whither . . . . . H. W. Longfellow.
6. Farewell . . . . . Lord Byron.

Composed by Frederick C. Atkinson, Mus. Bac., Cantab.

MR. ATKINSON has chosen good words for the exercise of his talents, but the result has justified his choice, for although the songs are unequal in merit, the spirit of the poetry is in no case lost sight of. No. 1 well expresses Kingsley's lines, the tonic minor being most felicitiously used for the middle verse, and a good effect being gained by the marked descending bass, with the restless semiquaver accompaniment. No. 2, a simple theme, most appropriately accompanied, is not only an excellent setting of Burns's words, but deserves commendation as inducing no reminiscence of Mendelssohn's well-known two-part song. No. 3, in D minor and major, is charmingly harmonised, and if sung sympathetically will be certain to make its way with the most impassive listeners. No. 4 is remarkable for word-painting throughout—perhaps almost too much so—but the song is an artistic work, and will fairly earn its meed of praise, even with those who believe that effect could be gained by simpler means. Nos. 5 and 6 have somewhat too heavy accompaniments, but they are both melodious and vocal. We especially like the concluding bars of No. 5, where the voice retains the key-note, with an accelerated accompaniment, on a short pedal bass. It is good to find a Mus. Bac. writing such unaffected music as Mr. Atkinson has given us in this group of vocal pieces.

WOOD AND CO., LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

Theory, with relation to the practice of Technical Studies for the Pianoforte. By Max Blume; from the Conservatorium of Music, Leipzig.

THE following sentence, from the preface to this little book, explains the object of the author in writing it, and we therefore quote it entire. "As it is you that play, and not your fingers, which are only the means of it, you must be first taught to command your fingers to play what your mind has, through your eyes, conceived, by understanding what is written on the music sheet." So much of theory, then, as is necessary for the young pianist to become acquainted with is here taught; and we are bound to say that the lessons are conveyed in remarkably clear language, more especially when we recollect that the work is not a translation, but written in the English language by a German. The remarks on "touch" are exceedingly good, the cultivation of a singing tone being truly insisted upon as indispensable for all who aspire to become good performers. There are also some valuable remarks upon the method of practising the scales, the sympathy of tone between the two hands—a matter ordinarily much neglected—being constantly called to the mind of the student by showing where the strong and weak fingers fall both in contrary and similar motion. We cannot, however, endorse our author's opinion that the minor scale should be practised with the sixth and seventh raised in ascending, and restored to the signature in descending. He certainly mentions an ascending minor scale where the sixth is minor and the seventh major, and says this is called the "Harmonic Minor Scale," but only chords are derived from it, and the notes are not moving one to another, but remain stationary, and there can be no anti-melodic step then between the sixth and seventh. But a reference to the best existing pianoforte works will prove that the descending minor scale with the seventh major and the sixth minor is even of more frequent occurrence than the one he advocates; and it certainly becomes an absurdity to see an advanced pupil blundering at the performance of a scale so constantly to be met with. Much care has been bestowed upon the subject of fingering, and we shall be glad if a perusal of this book should lead pupils to adopt some system of fingering in arpeggios, instead of trusting to the pencil mark of the master. The division of "broken chords" into three classes is a very good method of fixing the matter in the mind, the first class consisting of those which are formed either by three white or three black keys; the second of those which have either one white or one black key in the middle, and the third of those formed on B and B♭, including the diminished chords. For the manner in which these broken chords are recommended to be practised—with rhythms of three and rhythms of four—we refer the reader to the book itself, which is appropriately dedicated to the author's pupils.

METZLER AND CO.

Transcriptions for the Organ. By Frederic Archer. No. 1. Marche Cortège, from Gounod's "Irene." No. 2. O Salutaris (Gounod). No. 3. Gavotte in D (Rameau). Batiste's Celebrated Andante in G, for the Organ. Edited by Frederic Archer.

THE talented organist of the Alexandra Palace is well known as one of our leading performers on the "King of Instruments," and the present arrangements are a satisfactory proof that he can write for the organ as well as play upon it. First-class players are sometimes apt to write up to their own level—as, for example, Liszt and Rubinstein frequently do in their pianoforte music, forgetting that what is sport to them may be, if not death, at least an impossibility for average executants. Into this not uncommon error Mr. Archer has not fallen. We do not mean to imply that his arrangements are easy: on the contrary, they require a proficient on the instrument to do them justice; but they contain nothing beyond the reach of a good average player, though they are certainly not intended for the use of beginners. The showy march from Irene (La Reine de Saba) is probably on the whole the most difficult number; but Mr. Archer has not only given occasionally a simplified version, in addition to that which he would doubtless use himself, but he has in the more difficult pedal passages marked the—we were going to say "fingering"—"heeling and toeing" will be the proper term—so as to lighten as much as possible the labour of the learner. All three numbers are excellent pieces for concert use. The 'O Salutaris' is also suitable for a voluntary in the Church service.

We presume that the "editing" of Batiste's Andante consists of revising the proofs and giving English equivalents for the French names of the stops. The piece is undeniably pretty; but we confess it is not a style that we are partial to on the organ. Rapid arpeggios and chromatic scales played upon a four-feet flute stop seem unsuited to the dignity of the instrument; such passages are far better adapted to the piano. This, however, is entirely a matter of taste; there are many who like the modern French style of organ music, and with such Batiste's melodious Andante will certainly be a favourite.

ASHDOWN AND PARRY.

Short Pieces for the Organ. Edited by W. Spark, Mus. Doc. Book 1.

THE present book of arrangements is apparently intended for only very moderately-advanced players; they present very little difficulty to the performer, nor is there much in them which requires criticism. We find in this collection a "Prayer" by Arcadelt, a short Andantino by Batiste, a Larghetto by Spohr (from his Faust), an "Alla Marcia" by Schumann, a Prelude for soft stops by the editor, and an "Andante" by Walter Henry Nichols, all of which will probably be found acceptable by the amateur players for whose use they seem to be intended.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

CALCUTTA.—The annual Dedication Festival of St. James's Church was held on St. James's Day, and attracted a large congregation. The Preces and responses were those used in Rochester Cathedral; the "Cantate" and "Deus Misereatur"—Bridgewater, in A, and the anthem, Sir George Elvey's "In that day." The Old Hundredth psalm was sung with great effect. The Rev. W. Spens intoned the first part of the service, and the Vicar, Dr. Jarbo, the remaining portion. The Rev. Mr. Flinter was the preacher, and the collection, which amounted to a goodly sum, is to be appropriated towards the late Bishop Milman's scholarship, in connection with St. James's boys' school. The regular choir of St. James's was strengthened by the principal members and boys of St. John's, and to Mr. Compton, the organist, much praise is due for his exertions to make this festival a success. Mendelssohn's "March of the Priests," from Athalie, was the concluding voluntary.

CHERTSEY.—Through the kindness of Lady Holland, the Colnbrook Choral Class spent an enjoyable day at St. Ann's Hill, on the 9th ult. A selection of music was performed in the open air, under the conductorship of Mr. Richard Ratcliff. The arrangements of the day were most satisfactorily carried out by Mr. John Ross, the secretary to the class, and Miss Saunders, the treasurer and accompanist to the choir.

LINCOLN.—At the opening of the organ at the "John Hannah" Wesleyan chapel, on the 2nd ult., a Recital was given by Dr. Spark, of Leeds, when a tasteful and judicious variety of music was selected from the works of Handel, Rossini, Beethoven, Haydn, Guilmant, and Sebastian Bach. By particular desire, Dr. Spark introduced the music of the pastoral symphony from the Messiah, and concluded with the Hallelujah chorus. Dr. Spark is evidently an enthusiast in his profession, and did not limit his performance to the afternoon. He gave some voluntaries during the morning and evening services, and wound up at night by playing the Grand March in Sir Michael Costa's Oratorio Eli. The new organ is a magnificent instrument, and forms a fine finish to the chapel, which is itself an example of simple elegance in the formation and fitting up of a place of worship.

MACCLESFIELD.—The new organ at King Edward-street chapel was opened on Sunday, the 6th ult., by W. H. Ford, jun., organist of the chapel. The following is the specification of the instrument, which has been erected by Mr. John Bellamy, of Hanley. Great organ, C C to A (58 notes): Cremona, 8 ft.; open diapason, 8 ft.; stop diapason bass, 8 ft.; dulciana, 8 ft.; principal, 4 ft.; hohl flute, 4 ft.; fifteenth, 2 ft.; swell organ, C C to A (58 notes); hautboy, 8 ft.; double diapason, 16 ft.; open diapason, 8 ft.; lieblich gedacht, 8 ft.; gemshorn, 4 ft.; piccolo, 2 ft. Pedal organ, C C C to F (30 notes); grand Bourdon, 16ft. Accessories: tremulant to swell, swell to great, pedals to swell, pedals to great, two composition pedals. The manuals are upon a new principle by Mr. Bellamy, and are extended to full modern compass. The pedals are radiating, and the general quality of tone excellent, the solo stops being especially admired.

MANCHESTER.—An open-air Promenade Concert, under the patronage of the Earl of Wilton, was given in Heaton Park, on the 12th ult. The band and chorus numbered upwards of a hundred performers; the solo vocalists were the Misses Mawrey, Brown, and Tervin, and the Messrs. T. Allen, C. Turner, Edgar, and Foulkes. Mr. Gault conducted, and Mr. Cooper and Mr. Page accompanied. Many of the pieces were encored.

PEEL, ISLE OF MAN.—A Choral Festival was held in the ruins of St. German's Cathedral, on the 17th ult., in which fifteen choirs (200 voices) took part. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to chants, and the Anthem was "O Lord, how manifold" (Barnby). The rendering of the various parts of the service was very creditable to the choirs engaged, but the accompaniment of a harmonium was insufficient to sustain so large a body of voices. The sermon was preached by the Bishop of Lichfield, and the Rev. F. Moore acted as conductor. The congregation numbered 2,000, and the collection realized about £50.

SANDOWN, I.W.—An excellent Concert was given on the 3rd ult., in the Town Hall, by Mr. Augustus Aylward, of Ryde. The artists were Miss Amy Aylward, R.A.M., Miss Leila Aylward, R.A.M., Miss Gertrude Aylward (Stuttgart Conservatoire), Mr. W. H. Aylward, R.A.M., Mr. T. E. Aylward (organist, Cathedral, Llandaff), Mr. W. P. Aylward, Mr. A. Aylward, Mr. F. H. Simms (organist, All Saints, Ryde), and Mr. A. Burnett (Royal Italian Opera). A LIST of GRADUATES in the FACULTY of MUSIC, drawn from Official Sources, from 1830 to 1876.

PREFACE.—The following list of Graduates in the faculty of Music has been carefully drawn up from Official sources, with a view of exposing all sham degrees of Mus. Doc. and Mus. Bac. Being thoroughly exhaustive, and correct in every detail as far as it was possible to make it so, it is clear that every Degree in Music claimed by anyone, which is not contained in this list, is spurious. No foreign Universities possess a faculty of Music at all, neither do the Universities of Scotland. The only way, then, of obtaining degrees in Music is by graduating at either Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, or Durham, or else by having an Honorary Degree of Mus Doc. conferred by the Archbishop of Canterbury. It has been thought unnecessary to record any Degrees granted before the year 1830, no Graduates of an older date being now alive. The list has therefore been made out from Jan. 1, 1830, to March 1876. It is commended to all lovers of honesty and fair dealing.

THE REV. THOMAS HELMORE'S

MANUAL OF PLAIN SONG.

NOW PUBLISHED.

An addition to the series of Works of Plain Song and Accompaniments, forming the several parts of this Manual, has just been brought out under the title of the "SECOND APPENDIX TO THE ACCOMPANYING HARMONIES OF THE BRIEF DIRECTORY."

8vo., Paper Cover, Two Shillings.

It will be found of great service to all who desire suitable harmonies, instrumental or vocal, or both, for use with the Psalter and Canticles Noted. It supplies a want long felt with regard to many of the Chants, as also to the fifth and sixth "Te Deum" in the second set of the Canticles, for which no corresponding harmonized arrangement has, till now, been provided. A short preface, brief general directions, and copious information as to sources from which its various portions are derived, add greatly to its utility and interest. The numbering of the various Forms of the Tones, and their several settings, as well as the references to the different Psalms and Canticles to which any one of them is set in the Plain Song books, are clear, and will add to the facility and interest with which the entire Manual (now wanting only the third Appendix to the Psalter and its Accompanying Harmonies for its completion) will be practically applied to the varying wants of Organists, Choirs, and Congregations. It is accented throughout in correspondence with the Psalter and Canticles Accented.

The fuller and more elaborate Accompanying Harmonies to the Canticles Noted, of which the two arrangements of the "Te Deum" from Baini and Alfieri; and the "Magnificat" from Orlando di Lasso, and Palestrina, are specimens, will form, when completed, an additional and supplementary volume for use in skilful choirs.

London: Novello, Ewer and Co.

Two Vols., cloth, gilt lettered, price 7s. 6d. each.

The above Committee, having learned with deep regret that Mr. CHARLES S. BARKER, the inventor of the pneumatic action, is, at 70 years of age, in very reduced circumstances, and without any means of support, are desirous of providing him with an annuity for his declining years; and as it is of urgent necessity that some immediate steps be taken with a view to save him from actual want, the Committee trust that all Organists, both professional and amateur, will generously respond to this appeal in favour of one who, by the successful application of the pneumatic action to the touch of Organs, made modern instruments and modern performances on them a possibility. Subscriptions will be gladly received by the Honorary Treasurer, F. DAVISON, Esq., 24, Fitzroy-square, London, N.W.

THE BIRMINGHAM AND HEREFORD MUSICAL FESTIVALS.

BY HENRY C. LUNN.

However the received canons of art may have been disturbed by the recent Wagner Festival at Bayreuth, which represented the music of the future, the effect was certainly not observable at the still more recent Festival at Birmingham, which represented the music of the past and present; for the programmes there presented were sufficiently attractive to fill the Town Hall at almost every performance, and to enable the Committee to hand over a large sum to that excellent institution, the Birmingham General Hospital. Pecuniary results of course are not paramount in considering the success of such artistic gatherings; but before passing to a review of the purely musical aspect of the Festival, we cannot help turning with the deepest interest to the records of their origin and growth. Mr. John Thackray Bunce's book on the "Birmingham General Hospital and the Musical Festivals" tells us how, like most important events, these meetings had an extremely modest beginning; how in 1768, when it was found impossible for the funds of the hospital to pay the secretary's salary of £10, it was decided to have a musical entertainment in aid of the institution; and that then, as now, the "Messiah" was relied upon as the most powerful incentive to the cause of charity that could be selected, the sacred performances being given in "S. Philip's Church," and the secular at the "theatre in King Street." That the produce of this Festival amounted to £800 speaks well for the taste of Birmingham and the immediate neighbourhood; for in those days travelling was both expensive and laborious; and it can scarcely be imagined, therefore, that, either from musical or charitable motives, many persons could be attracted to these performances from a long distance. We regret that space will not allow us to follow Mr. Bunce in his carefully-compiled account of the gradual advance of the Festivals to their present position; but we cannot help remarking, before ceasing to speak of their history, how much it redounds to the credit of all concerned in their direction that the high character of the music given at the very first performances should have been steadily preserved; and that from 1799, when they became triennial, the zeal evinced in their management, so far from decreasing with the frequency of the meetings and the additional laboriousness of the duties, has been displayed to an extent which can scarcely be credited by those who have not, like ourselves, witnessed the many individual sacrifices both of time and money cheerfully accorded by those who periodically devote themselves to the cause.

In anticipation of the present Festival, the Town Hall had been placed for months in the hands of the painters and decorators. The entrances, passages, and corridors are painted in an appropriately quiet and pleasing style, and the effect on entering the hall itself is really beautiful, the harmony of colour having been studied with an artistic taste reflecting the highest credit upon Messrs. Martin and Chamberlain, who have had the sole management of the designs. We cannot, however, award the same praise for the medallion portraits which are intended to adorn the room, for assuredly if such men as are there represented could ever have become eminent in anything high or noble, there can be little truth in either phrenology or physiognomy.

Those who announce the fact that the performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" on the opening day of the Festival—Tuesday, August 29th—was scarcely up to the standard of excellence which we have been led to expect at Birmingham, should also state that band, chorus, and principal vocalists were rehearsing the day before from early in the morning until between ten and eleven at night. As distinct from all other Festivals, it is the custom here to commission composers to write works especially for the occasion, and to crowd the rehearsal of them all into one day. When we state, therefore, that a full Oratorio, three Cantatas, and a "Scriptural Scene" were novelties, any slight defects were perhaps somewhat excusable, especially as both the choral and instrumental parts of most of the new compositions were marvellously rendered throughout. The soprano solos in "Elijah" were divided between Madame Sherrington and Mdlle. Titiens, the contralto between Madame Trebelli and Madame Patey, and the tenor between Mr. E. Lloyd and Mr. Vernon Rigby, Mr. Santley singing the part of the Prophet throughout, and thus preserving that effect of continuity which we miss in other portions of a work expressly intended by the composer to be essentially dramatic. With few exceptions, the choruses were finely given; and although we have spoken of the hard work to which all the artists had been subjected on the previous day, we cannot say that there were any signs of fatigue in the holders of the trombones, who certainly blew their loudest. As usual, the President (on this occasion the Marquis of Hertford) exercised his privilege of demanding encores, graciously selecting for repetition the two Quartetts, with chorus, "Cast thy burden" and "Holy, holy," the airs "O rest in the Lord" and "For the mountains" (the first sung by Madame Patey and the second by Mr. Santley), and the Trio "Lift thine eyes," although the choir had actually commenced the following chorus. Comment upon this time-honoured absurdity is, we fear, useless. The Oratorio (which was preceded by the National Anthem) was conducted by Sir Michael Costa, who was warmly received on his entrance.

The feature of the Evening Concert was Mr. F. H. Cowen's Cantata "The Corsair," the libretto of which, by Mr. R. E. Francillon, follows pretty closely Byron's poem, save that on the return of Conrad to the island he finds Medora dying instead of dead, so that she is enabled to breathe her last to "soft music." The general effect of this Cantata is somewhat disappointing; for, musically considered, it scarcely rises to a high level of artistic excellence, and, viewed as an appeal to popular taste, its success may be gauged by the fact of a somewhat commonplace "Dance of Almas" being the only piece encored. Of the merit contained in the work, however, there can be no question; and had the composer relied less upon the effect of that delusive "local colouring" which is so often resorted to by young artists in the hope of strengthening weak music, his Cantata would not only have sustained but materially increased his former reputation. The work is arranged in six scenes, the first opening with a chorus of pirates, the theme of which, in F minor, is used, according to the Wagnerian method, to represent the piratical element throughout the Cantata. In this scene we may especially praise a ballad for Medora, in G minor, "I know not, I heed not"—delicately instrumented, and with some charming and sympathetic passages for the oboe—and a highly dramatic duet, in which the separation of Conrad and Medora is happily expressed. The commencement of the next scene (Seyd's Palace), a chorus of female slaves, "Twine we the roses," interspersed with solo passages for Gulnare, although most unquestionably a fanciful and original piece, was passed over without that demand for its repetition which seems accepted as the surest proof of success. We care not much for Seyd's solo, the commonplace character of which is only relieved by an orchestral figure by no means in keeping with the voice part; but the "Dance of Almas," which follows, although somewhat trifling, is so cleverly scored and has such a pleasing subject that, as already mentioned, it obtained the one encore in the work. The entrance of Conrad in disguise, his interview with Seyd, and the impassioned scene for these characters, Gulnare and chorus, includes some well-written music; but the interest is chiefly sustained in the orchestra, the choral portions, especially, being scarcely equal to the exigencies of the occasion. After a very melodious and appropriate Entr'acte, which was deservedly much applauded, the next scene opens in the dungeon of Seyd's Palace, and here, preceded by a brief Recitative, occurs the most beautiful vocal piece in the Cantata—a Slumber Song for Conrad. In this ballad the attractiveness of the theme, the graceful accompaniments—two harps principally sustaining the prominent figure—and the inexpressibly lovely modulation from B flat to G flat major, produced such an effect upon musical listeners that we longed to clear the room of those who had encored the "Dance of Almas," in order to show the composer which is, in truth, the gem of his work. The following duet between Conrad and Gulnare has many passages of passionate expression, but on the whole it is scarcely a favourable example of the composer's dramatic power. The fourth scene—"On the Island. Sunset"—carries on the story in a wearisome manner, Medora's prayer, even, being by no means so devotional in the music as in the words. The long instrumental introduction to Scene 5—"In the Dungeon. A Thunderstorm"—is extremely conventional, and indeed throughout this and the final scene—"On the Island"—the composer seems to have somewhat tired of his task. Amongst the best pieces may be mentioned the air "Fly hence," in which Gulnare urges Conrad to escape, and the final scena for Medora, with the Chorus of Pirates in the distance, which has many dramatic points, and is well written for the voices. The singing of Madame Lemmens-Sherrington as Medora, Mdlle. Titiens as Gulnare, Mr. E. Lloyd as Conrad, and Signor Foli as Seyd, was beyond all praise; and the composer, who conducted the Cantata, must indeed have been highly gratified, both by the rendering of his music and the cordial manner in which he was received by the Birmingham audience. Mr. Cowen may have a brilliant future before him if he only take to heart what Mendelssohn said in a letter to his brother Paul, who complained of his want of activity: "The people, indeed, shout and applaud; but that quickly passes away, without leaving a vestige behind." Of the miscellaneous selection which formed the second part of the evening's concert it is sufficient to say that the programme was well calculated to please a mixed audience, and that Mdlle. Albani met with a most enthusiastic reception.

Wednesday morning's performance commenced with Handel's "Occasional Overture," after which Mendelssohn's Psalm, "Hear my Prayer," was given, the solo finely sung by Mdlle. Albani. Then came a commonplace Offertoire by Wély, played by the local organist, Mr. Stimpson, and Hummel's Motetto, with chorus "Alma Virgo," in which Mdlle. Albani again displayed her exceptional talent as an exponent of sacred music.

Professor Macfarren's Oratorio, "The Resurrection," which followed after a brief pause, excited an attention due alike to the high standing of its composer in this country and the fact of his having already given evidence in "St. John the Baptist" of his power in treating a scriptural subject. That the genius of a composer invariably ripens with the years through which he works would be a comforting creed, but unfortunately it is one which can scarcely be supported by facts; for, looking back upon the history of the art, we shall find that for the few who have diligently toiled towards an ideal standard of perfection, there are many who, despite a commendable perseverance, have written their best works in their youth, and a still larger number who, with undoubtedly high powers, have been tempted to barter an enduring fame for the mere popularity of the hour. But Professor Macfarren's life has been one of continuous progress; and much as we appreciate the varied secular compositions he has given to the world, we cannot but believe that he is destined to found his lasting fame chiefly upon his sacred works, for, like his great predecessor, Handel, his attention has been turned to Oratorios at a point in his career when experience in the treatment of voices and orchestra has placed him in a position to express his highest thoughts with a freedom which cannot be acquired by even the most gifted and ambitious at an early period of their artistic life. When we say, therefore, that, in a strictly musical sense, "The Resurrection" is the best work he has yet written, we are convinced that we are recording the realization of a hope which animated him during its composition; for although "St. John the Baptist" achieved a success so decisive as materially to advance his reputation, we are much mistaken if, in responding to an appeal from Birmingham for a new Oratorio, he did not form a resolution to prove that it is the mission of a real artist to improve upon rather than to equal any of his previous works.

The text of the Oratorio is from the 20th chapter of St. John's Gospel, interspersed with reflective passages from Holy Writ, the Book of Common Prayer, and from "Popular Hymnology," selected by Dr. E. G. Monk. In setting this subject, it is obvious that the composer had no easy task before him; for by adopting the narrative form in a series of recitations for a single vocalist, the opportunity of giving a "telling" song to the same singer must be lost; and in treating the popular hymns no tune already identified with the words existed ready to his hands, so that he had to rely solely upon his own power of expressing well-known verses by music never before allied with them. That he has successfully grappled with these obstacles was fully proved by the result, for the recitatives by which the work is carried on, although in their nature monotonous, were recognized by all earnest thinkers as deeply sympathetic with the text throughout; and so much was the audience impressed by the beauty of the hymns, that one, "O Christian, cease to weep" (words by Godfrey Thring, 1866), was re-demanded, and would, we are certain, have been heard even a third time with infinite pleasure. To give any idea of the grandeur and massiveness of the writing in the most prominent choruses would be an impossibility after a single hearing; and we cannot but regret that the work was not published, so that we could have followed the performance with the score. We must, however, select for especial commendation, both for its masterly construction and its adaptability to the words, "This is the victory that overcometh the world," the fugue in which is remarkable, not only as an exhibition of contrapuntal power, but for consummate knowledge of vocal and instrumental effect. "He is the resurrection and the life" is also a vigorous yet truly devotional setting of the words, a marked feature in the instrumental introduction being a series of ascending scale passages, which lead with much effect to the commencement of the vocal part. The climax of this chorus is extremely fine. "He that wavereth" and "O Lord my strength" contain some of the most masterly choral writing in the Oratorio, the contrast between the minor and major in the former giving much intensity to the text. The final chorus, based upon the tune of the 100th Psalm, appeals with equal force to the musical and unmusical listener, for the theme, like the chorales treated in his sacred works by Bach, is in the hearts of the multitude, and the manner in which it has been handled by the composer may be studied as a contrapuntal model by all who aspire to the highest school of sacred writing. Amongst the more placid choruses we must mention "Woe unto us," in C minor, and "He pardoneth and absolveth"—commencing in the ecclesiastical tone known as the "Dorian Mode," and afterwards passing into the major—both of which made a deep impression upon the audience. The two soprano songs, "For this our heart" and "Sing, rejoice and give thanks," and those for the contralto, "Let us have grace" and "His right hand," are truly melodious and religious in character, although the words are by no means vocal. The tenor has also two solos, "Now is our salvation" and "The wages of sin," the second of which is our favourite; but there can be no question that all these songs will shortly make their way, even apart from the work in which they occur, as must also a charming trio for soprano, contralto, and tenor, "The peace of God," which, in spite of the length of the morning's performance, was encored. The purely instrumental portion of the work—the Overture—may well come last in our necessarily brief and imperfect analysis, for it is not until the conclusion of the Oratorio that we find how accurately it depicts, not so much the incidents, but the varied feelings, of the text. The introduction of the organ alone was slightly marred by the flatness of the instrument, but in other respects the Prelude was rendered to perfection, and well prepared the listeners for the Oratorio. When we say that the whole of the narrative recitatives were delivered by Mr. Santley, that the soprano music was sung by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, the contralto by Madame Patey, and the tenor by Mr. E. Lloyd, it is almost unnecessary to add that the solos were given with admirable effect throughout. The choruses, too, considering the brief time allowed for preparation, were remarkably well rendered, and in the difficult and abstruse accompaniments the band was everything that could be desired. As Sir M. Costa invariably resigns the baton when new works are performed, the Oratorio was most skilfully conducted by the composer's brother, Mr. Walter Macfarren, who holds the appointment of Conductor of the Orchestra at the Royal Academy of Music. At the close of the work Professor Macfarren, in obedience to a unanimous call, was led forward into the orchestra by Sir M. Costa, and received the warm congratulations due to one who has so worthily laboured to uphold the dignity of his art.

At the concert in the evening Gade's Sacred Cantata, "Zion," was produced, and achieved a success which must have been highly gratifying to the composer, who not only wrote the work for this occasion, but journeyed to England to conduct it. The Cantata is divided into three parts, the first, after a short choral introduction, treating of the departure of the Israelites from Egypt, the second of their captivity in Babylon, and the third of the return and prophecy of the New Jerusalem. The music of the Cantata shows that, although Gade has scarcely developed that individuality of style which first drew Mendelssohn's attention to his works, his writing is melodious and vigorous, in parts, indeed, displaying both power and originality. The introduction is bold, but somewhat commonplace; the commencing chorus of the first part, however—beginning in E major, with a well-marked subject, and changing with much effect at the words "He clave in twain the sea" into the tonic minor—proves that the composer has well studied his text, and although somewhat encroaching upon the ground previously trodden by Handel, that he is by no means even an unconscious imitator. The resumption of the major key, by a phrase led by the Alti, brings the chorus to a conclusion, the movement dying off with a placid instrumental symphony. No. 2, "The Captivity," after a few bars for the orchestra in D minor, has a short fugal passage commenced by the basses, succeeded by an animated choral point in B flat major, the return to the key being the commencement of some extremely effective writing, the fugue, started by the basses on the dominant harmony, containing much clever counterpoint. "The Return," forming the third part, was originally written for baritone solo with chorus, but, being found too high, was slightly altered for a tenor, and sung on this occasion, with good effect, by Mr. Vernon Rigby. A melodious symphony, in A major, introduces the solo, the accompaniments to which are rich and varied, a beautiful and unexpected change of key from A to F giving intense expression to the phrase, "There shall come a Redeemer," and a highly-effective point being gained by the entry of the treble and alto choir, lightly accompanied, on the half-bar, to the word "Bethlehem." The final Allegro of this movement, although perhaps not the most "popular" number in the Cantata, includes some thoroughly artistic workmanship. It is true that the subjects are not developed at great length, but much attention has been given to the due expression of the words, as an instance of which we may mention the reiteration of the E by the tenors, with a changing harmony, which gives much dramatic force to the words "Never shall thy sun be setting, and never thy moon withdraw herself." From the nature of the subject, the setting of this Cantata is somewhat monotonous, no variety of incident enabling the composer to exhibit more than his power over the resources of choir and orchestra; Gade, however, has not only proved that in this respect he is a consummate master of his art, but that a didactic work need not be sombre and wearisome. "Zion" is, we are convinced, one of the few compositions written "to order" that must live; and the composer, who directed the Cantata, must have been more than satisfied both by the excellent manner in which it was rendered and the hearty applause which accompanied his entrance into, and exit from, the orchestra. The miscellaneous selection which followed Herr Gade's Cantata contained, besides a number of vocal pieces, Mozart's "Jupiter Symphony," Mendelssohn's Overture to the "Midsummer Night's Dream," and Gounod's clever "Funeral March of a Marionette," which was enthusiastically encored.

The "Messiah," on Thursday morning, attracted, as usual, a large audience, and the Oratorio—excellently rendered throughout—created as deep an impression as ever. The principal singers were Mdlles. Titiens and Albani, Mdmes. Patey and Trebelli, Mr. Vernon Rigby and Signor Foli. At the evening concert Herr Gade's Cantata, "The Crusaders," was the important item in the programme; and on the composer taking his place at the conductor's desk, he was received with a burst of applause, which showed how thoroughly he had won the good opinion of the Birmingham people by the work especially written for their Festival. But although "Zion" had proved a success, such a furore as was created by "The Crusaders" could scarcely have been anticipated even by the composer himself; indeed so completely did the highly dramatic and picturesque music of this Cantata excite the admiration of the audience that we could not but wonder how such a composition, written as much as twelve years ago, should now be heard in England for the first time. The original text of the Cantata is by Carl Andersen; but the English adaptation, by the Rev. J. Troutbeck, M.A., is so excellent that it almost appears as if the music had been written to it. The work is divided into three Parts—1, "In the Desert;" 2, "Armida;" and 3, "Towards Jerusalem." The first Part opens with a Chorus of Pilgrims and Women from the Crusaders' host, admirably descriptive of the weary march through the desert. Then, after a scene between Rinaldo and Peter the Hermit, we have a stirring tenor solo, called the "Crusaders' Song," partially accompanied by the choir, which, although containing three verses, has so bright and tuneful a theme, and was, moreover, so capitally sung by Mr. Vernon Rigby, that the applause at the conclusion might have been accepted by a less modest conductor as an encore. The choral prayer, in which a solo for Peter the Hermit is interwoven, concludes the first Part with excellent effect. Into the second Part the composer has thrown his whole strength, and, with the exception of a pardonable reminiscence of Mendelssohn's music to the "Midsummer Night's Dream," especially in the opening chorus, the treatment of the whole of this subject is as original as it is beautiful; indeed, the blandishments of the Sorceress Armida, who, summoning the Spirits of Darkness to her aid, endeavours to arrest the Crusaders on their mission, exercised so fascinating an effect upon the hearers that Rinaldo might well be forgiven for temporarily yielding to their influence and forgetting his sterner duties. From the chain of pieces forming this attractive scene we must particularly mention the Scena for Armida, "They softly sleep," in B minor, which includes an Allegro Moderato, "Build me straight a palace here," charmingly instrumented throughout—a Chorus of Sirens, "The wave sweeps my breast" (preceded by a melodious symphony for the strings), through which runs a solo for Rinaldo, expressing his wonder at the scene around him—the following Duet, with Chorus, for Armida and Rinaldo—and the final scene, in which the "Crusaders' Song," heard in the distance, rouses Rinaldo from his luxurious repose, the dramatic effect of the Sirens' strains, interwoven with the martial music of the Crusaders, and broken phrases for Armida and Rinaldo, being heightened by an instrumental colouring evidencing not only that the composer thinks with the mind of a true poet, but that he works with the hand of a trained artist. The third Part carries on the March of the Crusaders towards the Holy City. The opening Chorus has but small musical interest, the "March of Pilgrims," with the bright solo for Rinaldo, in B major, however, making ample amends for this immediately afterwards. Peter's animated address to the Crusaders, with the expressive Andante, "Holy, holy is the ground," interspersed with choral responses, may also be cited as most thoughtful and highly-appropriate music; and the final chorus, "God wills it"—especially from the point where the enharmonic change to E flat major occurs—is appropriately bold and energetic. No praise can be too great for the principal vocalists—Madame Trebelli (Armida), Mr. Vernon Rigby (Rinaldo), and Signor Foli (Peter the Hermit)—who all exerted themselves to the utmost; and equal commendation must be bestowed upon band and choir, every member of which joined with the audience in the applause which overwhelmed Herr Gade at the conclusion of his Cantata. The miscellaneous selection which preceded and followed "The Crusaders" included Rossini's Overture to "William Tell," which was encored and repeated from the "Allegro."

Of the performance of Spohr's "Last Judgment" and Beethoven's "Mass in C," on Friday morning, we have but little to say. Mr. C. Tovey, who sang the bass part in these works, may be commended for the quality of his voice and his feeling for sacred music, but he has yet much to do before he can assume so prominent a position. The other principal vocalists were, in Spohr's Oratorio, Mdlle. Titiens and Mr. E. Lloyd; and in Beethoven's "Mass" (called in the programme "Grand Service"), Mdlle. Albani, Madame Trebelli, and Mr. Vernon Rigby. Both compositions were done ample justice to, the Quartett, "Blest are the departed," in "The Last Judgment" and the "Benedictus" in the "Mass" being encored; but the added trombone parts in the latter work somewhat astonished those who believed that the composer best understood what instruments he wanted. Between these two works, and concluding the first part of the morning's performance, came the last novelty of the Festival—a "Scriptural Scene," by Richard Wagner, translated into English under the title of "The Holy Supper of the Apostles." This is one of the composer's early works, and might probably now be considered by him as unworthy of the reputation of one who has courted the world's criticism as the great musical reformer of modern times. But those who care not for abstract theories of art, and are content to judge solely by what they hear, could not but admit that, in spite of an undue monotony of colour throughout the work, there is much that is both original and powerful. Written entirely for male voices, the part for the twelve Apostles being divided into three separate choirs, and a large portion of it almost unaccompanied, it is doubtful indeed, after its faulty rendering by so fine a body of choristers as that at Birmingham, whether we may ever hear the composer's intention fully realized. In the first chorus, Andante Tranquillo, in F major, we have some remarkably clear and orthodox writing, the bold subject well expressing the words of the text. Especially effective is the phrase for the first basses, joined afterwards by the choir, and leading to a forte passage, ending pianissimo, in the original key. From this point to the conclusion of the movement the three separate choirs already mentioned are employed with great ingenuity, the unison passage, "Draw near, ye that hunger," for the first choir, entering with much effect on a dominant harmony, and combining with the second and third choirs to the end. The following chorus for the twelve Apostles, commencing, in unison, to the words "You do we greet," responded to and occasionally accompanied by the full choir, may be mentioned as one of the best points of the work, the pianissimo close, after a pause, on the dominant of D minor, most pathetically expressing the phrase, "On pain of dying." The next striking effect is where, after a close for the full choir on the chord of D major, an unexpected change to C major occurs, with a choral passage presumed to represent "voices from above." This is succeeded by an instrumental dominant pedal sweeping up in rapid semiquavers, the choir commencing piano, with the words, "What rushing now fills the air?" the powerful orchestration giving much intensity to the vocal phrases. The final chorus is noisy, and certainly was not softened in effect by the manner in which it was rendered. It is difficult indeed to sing; but human throats were never intended to contend against such an incessant uproar as was permitted to reign supreme in the orchestra, and the impression at the conclusion of the work upon those who could not disentangle the several parts by reference to the score, was anything but favourable.

Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" formed a worthy climax to the Festival at the Evening Concert. In this work the soprano solos were given by Mdlle. Titiens and Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, the contralto by Madame Patey, the tenor by Mr. E. Lloyd and Mr. Vernon Rigby, and the bass by Signor Foli, Mr. Campion being associated with these vocalists in some of the concerted music. The performance of the Oratorio was on the whole extremely good; but as Birmingham has always been famed for a reverential feeling towards the works of Mendelssohn, we could not but wonder what had become of the two basses in the duet "We verily have heard;" for although the accompaniment was played straight through, not a sound was audible from the voices. If this were an accident, it was a very inexcusable one; and if it were design, we scarcely think that the effect of the innovation was sufficiently successful to warrant its repetition. At the conclusion of the Oratorio the National Anthem was sung; then Sir Michael Costa was vigorously applauded, and Mr. Stockley (the energetic conductor of the Birmingham Festival Choir) was called forward to receive his well-earned share of the general congratulation.

A very few words are necessary in conclusion, for our impression of the general rendering of the several works has been stated in the course of our remarks; and although we cannot give the same unqualified commendation to every performance that we have been justified in doing on former occasions, the causes which have produced such results are so obvious as to allow of an easy remedy in the future. We admit that the organ was flat; but this fact will not account for all the shortcomings. In the first place, there must be more rehearsals or fewer new works; the choir must, in the next place, consist solely of tried and experienced singers, who have been in the habit of practising together; and, in the third place, the tone of the orchestra must be held in sufficient subjection to allow the voices to be heard. This is plain speaking; but the Birmingham Festival has a world-wide reputation to support, and those who labour so zealously to ensure its pecuniary success should remember that this can only be attained by steadily resolving to uphold its artistic pre-eminence. We have much pleasure in recording that the receipts of the Festival amounted to £15,180.

Could the Dean of Worcester have foreseen how much his protest against the Three Choir Festivals would strengthen them in the future, we question whether, from motives of policy, he would not have withdrawn his ill-advised opposition to them last year, and trusted by a mere exhibition of apathy to their eventually dying a natural death. The obstinacy, however, with which he turned a deaf ear to the overwhelming force of public opinion has, as we anticipated, so roused the ire of those friendly to the cause that a demonstration in favour of these time-honoured meetings was at once resolved upon, and the result is that for the Hereford Festival this year 118 stewards volunteered their services, the Corporations of Worcester and Gloucester made a sort of triumphal entry into the city on the opening day—the 12th ult.—breakfasted with the Mayor of Hereford at the Green Dragon Hotel, and entered into a compact over their wine to uphold the integrity of the Three Choir Festivals against all the assaults that might be directed against them. Whether the attractions of the déjeuner were so forcible that the civic dignitaries could not tear themselves from the Green Dragon at the appointed time for commencing the Oratorio in the Cathedral, we cannot say; but although Mr. Townshend Smith, himself a model of punctuality, waited, baton in hand, for some time, the performance of "Elijah" had progressed considerably before the municipal body entered the building, and of course temporarily eclipsed Mendelssohn's music by a display of glittering gold lace, and of conscious yet subdued official power which tacitly demanded due recognition. In the first part of the Oratorio the principal soprano and contralto solos were sung respectively by Madame Edith Wynne and Miss Enriquez, and in the second part by Mdlle. Titiens and Madame Trebelli, Mr. Cummings taking his own solos and those set down for Mr. Sims Reeves, without any apology for the absence of the latter gentleman being given. Of Mr. Maybrick, to whom was assigned the character of the Prophet, we should have liked to say everything that is kind, because he really has a fine voice, and uses it with an earnestness which commands respect. But Elijah is beyond him, because he has not grown to the feeling of the exquisite music he has to sing, and contents himself with what is technically termed "getting up" the part by a careful study of the notes. We do not say that any portion of the work is too high or too low for him, nor do we affirm that he failed in a single passage; but that he did not lay hold of the sympathies of his auditors, and make them follow the career of Elijah through the varied colour of the music, is unquestionable. Many of his quiet solos—as, for instance, the pathetic air, "It is enough"—were delivered with genuine expression, but when passion was demanded the voice was unduly forced, especially in the lower notes, and often, therefore, the conclusion of a piece marred the effect of the preceding portion. Mr. Maybrick is still young enough to remedy his defects. He is gifted with an excellent vocal organ; but that he has yet to study the poetry of his art, and to learn how to create a love for that poetry amongst his listeners, is a conviction forced upon us by attentively following his rendering of Mendelssohn's music, and that we frankly record that conviction is a proof how strong is our belief that he has qualifications which, if properly directed, should place him in the first rank of sacred singers. We are happy to say that there were no encores throughout the Oratorio, and that the choruses, with few exceptions, were well rendered. We may also mention that the Rev. A. Robinson, the Rev. W. D. V. Duncombe, and Mr. J. H. Lambert lent efficient aid in some of the concerted music.

The evening performance in the Cathedral—Handel's "Samson" (with some omissions) and the first part of Haydn's "Creation"—drew a sufficiently numerous audience to encourage us in the belief that these sacred concerts will in time supersede the miscellaneous secular entertainments in the Shire Hall, which, good as they are of their kind, are scarcely worthy of forming a portion of a Festival of this class. The principal vocalists in "Samson" were Madame Edith Wynne, Madame Trebelli, Mr. Cummings (who again replaced Mr. Sims Reeves), and Mr. Maybrick. Everything went well, save that Madame Wynne proved to us that, great as an artist may be, she is not infallible, for she sang with an uncertainty of intonation throughout the work which surprised us, especially in "Let the bright Seraphim," Mr. Harper's trumpet obbligato, however, making ample amends for any shortcoming on the part of the vocalist. In Haydn's "Creation" Mdlle. Titiens, Mr. Cummings, and Mr. Lewis Thomas were more than usually successful, Mdlle. Titiens giving so admirable a rendering of "With verdure clad" as to cause a murmur of satisfaction which, in a secular building, would undoubtedly have culminated in an encore. The choruses in both works were sung with much precision, and, except that "Fix'd in his everlasting seat" was taken at too slow a pace, all the tempi were thoroughly satisfactory.

We have no hesitation in saying that the performance of Spohr's "Last Judgment" and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," on Wednesday morning, was about the finest ever heard in a Cathedral. Spohr's expressive and melodious music found most able interpreters in Madame Edith Wynne (who had thoroughly recovered her voice), Miss Enriquez, Mr. Cummings, and Mr. Lewis Thomas, and the deep impression it made upon the audience was the best comment upon the conduct of those who would wish that such purely religious works should be heard only amidst secular surroundings. The instrumental movements in the "Hymn of Praise" were played with a delicacy and refinement which cannot be too highly commended. Mdlle. Titiens was in fine voice, and gave all the soprano solos with excellent effect, Mr. Cummings again coming forward to replace Mr. Sims Reeves in the arduous tenor part, and singing with a purity of expression and a truth of intonation which thoroughly dispelled any feeling of disappointment at the absence of the vocalist announced.

The concert in the evening, at the Shire Hall, included the overture, and a selection from, "Oberon," and Beethoven's "Pastoral Symphony," a concession to the taste of classical listeners which was sternly resented by those who came to "hear the singing," a lively conversation being kept up incessantly during the purely instrumental portions. In consequence of the continued absence of Mr. Sims Reeves, extra songs were given by Mdlle. Titiens and Madame Trebelli; but the programme was quite long enough without such additions. A decided effect was created by the Bradford Choral Society in Pinsuti's part-song "In this hour," the precision of intonation and minute observance of the variations of tone delighting every musical ear. An excellent performance of Saint Saëns's "Rondo Capriccioso," for the violin, by M. Sainton, and a somewhat nervous but careful rendering of "The meeting of the waters," by Miss Bertha Griffiths, must also be mentioned amongst the successes of the concert.

On Thursday morning Mr. J. F. Barnett's Oratorio "The Raising of Lazarus" was given, the solos being assigned to Mdlle. Titiens, Madame Trebelli, Mr. Cummings, and Mr. Lewis Thomas. On the occasion of the production of this work at St. James's Hall, three years ago, we gave our candid opinion of its merits, and a second hearing of it has fully confirmed the impression then recorded. It is undoubtedly the work of a musician, and of one who has thoroughly grounded himself in the solid school of sacred writing; yet with every admiration for the excellent manner in which both choir and orchestra are handled, we cannot but feel that this very scholastic knowledge stands in place of that creative power which alone can invest a work with enduring vitality, and that in certain places, therefore, the desire of making good music has overridden the need of forcibly and sympathetically expressing the words. Considered as abstract fugues, for instance, many portions of the choruses are really entitled to the utmost respect; but we could cite many instances where, instead of the text suggesting the music, fugal passages appear forced in against the spirit of the text. As good specimens of pure and natural writing we may mention the chorus of female voices, "She goeth to the grave," and the placid choral piece, "Thy mercy, O Lord," although many of the more vigorous choruses have a solidity which proves that Mr. Barnett, with a better and more connected libretto, and a riper experience (for we hear that this is an early work), is capable of accomplishing even better things than he has yet given us. The best solo is that for the soprano, "They that sow in tears," exquisitely sung by Mdlle. Titiens, and there is also a good contralto air, "Thou art near, O God," which was rendered with much feeling by Madame Trebelli. The choruses went well throughout; and Mr. Barnett, who conducted his Oratorio, must have felt highly gratified at the earnest manner in which every one worked to ensure a success. Gounod's Service in G, "St. Cecilia," which followed, was excellently sung both by the choir and the principal vocalists, Madame Edith Wynne, Mr. Cummings, and Mr. Maybrick. This composition is now too well known to demand more than a passing eulogium upon its many beauties; but we must mention that a short instrumental movement, chiefly remarkable for smooth and musician-like writing, now commences the work. The morning's performance terminated with the "Hallelujah" chorus, from Beethoven's "Mount of Olives."

The second Secular Concert, at the Shire Hall, in the evening, contained, as usual, a number of popular vocal pieces, with the "Jupiter" Symphony of Mozart, and Rossini's Overture to "William Tell," for the benefit of those who, in spite of Wagner, still love to linger over the beauties of "abstract music." The Overture to "William Tell" was finely played, and encored. We do not know whether Mr. Cummings was surprised, but he certainly must have felt gratified, at the hurricane of applause which greeted his appearance on the platform to sing "Tom Bowling," in the programme assigned to Mr. Sims Reeves. So signal a recognition not only of the artistic merits, but of the personal kindness, of a vocalist who, when the directors of the Festival were placed in a dilemma, by his own unaided exertions extricated them from it, may be accepted as a proof that an artist may achieve many triumphs during his career besides those legitimately earned by the exercise of his profession, and it is gratifying to record that his services were substantially recognized by a gift of fifty guineas. The two songs volunteered by Mdlle. Titiens and Madame Trebelli, in place of those set down for Mr. Sims Reeves, were cordially received, Mdlle. Titiens's "Home, sweet home" of course causing much excitement; the Bradford Choral Society achieved another success in Festa's Madrigal "Down in a flow'ry vale;" Mr. Lewis Thomas sang an expressive song by his son, called "Homelight;" and the concert concluded with the National Anthem.

Every seat in the Cathedral was taken for the "Messiah" on Friday morning, and we believe that the applications for admission were much in excess of the means of accommodation. A final telegram had been received from Mr. Sims Reeves, stating that he was detained at Clifton with a severe cold, and could not, therefore, sing at all; so that Mr. Cummings ended the Festival as he commenced it—by taking the tenor solos in both parts of the Oratorio. The other vocalists were Mdlle. Titiens, Madame Edith Wynne, Madame Trebelli, Miss Enriquez, Mr. Cummings, Mr. Maybrick, and Mr. Lewis Thomas. The choruses went steadily throughout, the "Hallelujah" especially being given with excellent effect, and the rendering of the work formed a fitting termination to the generally excellent performances in the Cathedral. The Festival concluded with a Chamber Concert at the Shire Hall, when a well-selected programme of classical music for stringed instruments was provided, including two Quartetts, and the well-known Otetto in E flat of Mendelssohn, the executants being: violins—M. Sainton, Mr. Ralph, Mr. Rendle, and Mr. J. H. Reed; violas—Mr. R. Blagrove and Mr. Hann; violoncellos—Mr. Pettit and Mr. Aylward. There was a very full attendance, and the applause throughout proved how highly the works were appreciated, even by an audience unaccustomed, as we should imagine, to listen to works of this character. Vocal pieces were successfully contributed by Madame Edith Wynne and Miss Bertha Griffiths, and Mr. Cummings gave with much expression the charming song "I attempt from love's sickness to fly," from Purcell's opera "The Indian Queen," which was enthusiastically encored. Mr. G. Townshend Smith accompanied.

A record of the Festival would be scarcely complete without mentioning that at the early services in the Cathedral the musical portion was excellently given by the United Choirs of Hereford, Gloucester, and Worcester, and that on the first morning (at which the civic authorities already mentioned were present) an eloquent sermon, in favour of the Festival, was preached by the Bishop of Hereford. We may also say that, according to custom, Mr. C. H. Lloyd, the newly-appointed organist of Gloucester Cathedral, was pianoforte accompanist at all the secular concerts; that Mr. Done presided at the organ in the Cathedral—with the exception of the evening's performance, when it was taken by Mr. Lloyd—and that Mr. G. Townshend Smith conducted the whole of the performances.

The unexampled success of the Three Choir Festival of 1876 must have been highly gratifying to all who believe with us that sacred music of the highest order will always do more to aid the cause of charity than the best sermons that can be written, and that nowhere can the works of the greatest masters be heard with such sublime effect as in a Cathedral. Hereford has this year had a duty to perform, apart from the organization of its musical arrangements; and it has performed it so nobly that we question whether the clerical intolerance recently exhibited at Worcester will be repeated. But whilst bearing testimony to the hearty good-will of all who helped to produce so satisfactory a result at this meeting, we cannot close our notice without a special word of praise to Mr. Townshend Smith; for on him rested not only the heavy responsibility of conducting both the sacred and secular performances, but of receiving and replying to the entire mass of correspondence on the business of the Festival, his interest in the event urging him to add the duty of "Secretary to the Directors" to that which legitimately devolves upon him by virtue of his office as Organist of the Cathedral. That all this arduous work should be so systematically arranged that no symptom of hurry or confusion is ever apparent, merely proves the possession of business qualities which eminently fit him for the task he undertakes; but when we say that, amidst the most pressing demands upon his time, his courtesy of manner to those around him is as uniformly exhibited as if he were perfectly at leisure, there can be no wonder that Mr. Townshend Smith and the Hereford Festival should be so constantly coupled together that the two are rarely thought of apart. We are glad to say that the financial results are exceedingly satisfactory, the collections at the doors of the Cathedral amounting to £1,124 8s. 5d.

We are unfortunately compelled, by a press of matter, to hold over the continuation of Mr. Bennett's article on the Wagner performance at Bayreuth until our next number.

Those who were present at the Birmingham Festival and witnessed the ovation received by Professor Macfarren, who was led forward by Sir Michael Costa, after the performance of "The Resurrection," will be surprised to read the following in a musical contemporary: "Mr. Walter Macfarren conducted his brother's work, the Professor being prevented from attending the Festival by indisposition."

The disastrous effects produced by the low pitch of the organ at the Birmingham and Hereford Festivals having been freely attributed to the "whim" of Mr. Sims Reeves, it can scarcely be wondered at that he should have written a remonstrance on the subject to those who have attacked him. That he should lay the whole blame upon Sir Michael Costa is perhaps scarcely fairer than that the fault should be said to rest entirely with himself. The fact is that instead of accepting the altered pitch as originally proposed by Mr. Reeves, Sir Michael Costa waited until it was forced upon him by vocalists with whom he came more immediately in contact. Then arose the difficulty of refusing to a tenor at Birmingham what he had granted to a soprano at Drury Lane, and therefore the organ was lowered and raised at various Birmingham Festivals until the question of "pitch" became a perfect bugbear both to singers and instrumentalists. At Hereford the organ was found so low during the rehearsal that it was slightly raised before the Festival commenced; and the pitch during the performances, therefore, was at least endurable. It is true that our Government has matters upon its hands presumed to be of more importance than that of deciding how many vibrations shall represent the note C; but we are convinced that until there is some official enactment upon the subject, confusion will continue to reign supreme.

Many of our readers are probably aware that for some time a movement has been on foot for presenting the noble Cathedral of our metropolis with a set of bells suitable to its position in, and connection with, the great city. The late Lord Mayor, warmly supported by several Aldermen and influential citizens, gave the project its first start at a meeting held last year in the Mansion House. The fruits of their interest begin now to show themselves; for several of the great City companies have made liberal donations to provide special bells of the peal. Finally, the Corporation itself has made the most handsome donation of £530 for the tenor bell. When the petition was presented by Messrs. Bedford and Shaw, of the Common Council, to whose interest and kindness the successful result is mainly due, it was supported by a deputation from the Cathedral consisting of the Rev. Canon Lightfoot, D.D., Rev. Sub-Dean Webber, Dr. Stainer, and C. Shone, Esq., honorary secretary of the Committee. Some rather irrelevant questions were put to the Rev. Canon as to the fund for the Restoration, the alterations of the west front, &c., &c., the answers to which, considering that the Lord Mayor is ex officio one of the Trustees of the Cathedral, could have been easily obtained elsewhere. But the warm and somewhat amusing discussion of the petition was followed by an almost unanimous vote of the sum asked.

The following shows how liberally the appeal to the Companies has been responded to:—

The Drapers' Company has presented	bells	1 & 2.
„ Salters' „	„	bell	7.
„ Merchant Taylors' „	„	„	8.
„ Fishmongers' „	„	„	9.
„ Clothworkers' „	„	„	10.
„ Grocers' „	„	„	11.
and lastly the Corporation „		„	12 (Tenor).

In each case the arms of the donors will be made to stand out in bold relief from the side of the bell. It will be seen that only bells 3, 4, 5, 6 remain ungiven, but as several Companies have not yet been formally asked to contribute, it is more than likely that the whole of the peal will be a genuine offering from the City itself. Although nothing has been finally settled as to the founding of the bells, it may be said that the peal of 12 will weigh not less than 11 tons, the tenor bell being of about 2¾ tons weight. The handsome donation of £100 by the Dean, £50 by Canon Lightfoot, and several smaller sums by those interested in the Cathedral will be required towards the machinery for working the Belgian Carillon (to be in future called the Celestine) so generously given, at a cost of £1000, by Mr. Hora, of the City and of Victoria-street. These bells will be cast in Belgium, to the number probably of 40.

Those who reside in the neighbourhood need not be afraid of any annoyance from the sweet discourse of these bells; on the contrary, when at some future day Royalty again favours the City with a visit, instead of tolling its one bell to show its joy, a merry peal will brighten the hour. Not much less pleasure will it give the S. Paul's ringers to muster at their bells when the Lord Mayor and Common Council appear, to take their accustomed seats in the stalls of the Cathedral. As further funds are still required, it is not likely that the whole of this important undertaking will be completed in less than twelve months' time, even if founders' estimates are at once obtained and the orders given without delay. It should be added that the liberal money gifts of the Companies and Corporation include the probable cost of raising and hanging the bells.

MR. CARL ROSA'S ENGLISH OPERA COMPANY.

Following up the success he obtained at the Princess's Theatre last year, Mr. Carl Rosa has during the past month commenced a second, and somewhat longer, series of performances, having on the present occasion chosen the Lyceum Theatre in preference to the house in Oxford-street. We think he has been well advised in making the alteration, as the situation of the Lyceum is so central, while the building itself is admirably adapted for such performances as those of Mr Rosa's company.

The season commenced on the 11th ult., with a most charming performance of Cherubini's "Water Carrier" ("Les Deux Journées"). This dramatic masterpiece was produced for the first time in English during the last week of Mr. Rosa's previous season at the Princess's; and the conductor could not have chosen a fitter work to inaugurate his second series of performances. The cast of the work was nearly the same as last year. Mr. Santley again appeared as the noble-hearted water-carrier, Micheli; Mr. Henry Nordblom was Count Armand, and Mdlle. Torriani Constance, as before; and Antonio and Daniel were represented by Mr. Charles Lyall and Mr. Aynsley Cook. The part of Marcellina was in the hands of Miss Julia Gaylord, who sang and acted extremely well throughout; other smaller parts being filled by Miss L. Graham and Messrs. Celli, Ludwig, Arthur Howell, Muller, and Cushing. The rendering of the opera was excellent; and, as it has since been several times repeated, the work may be said to have established itself as a stock-piece on the repertoire. It is curious to think that when the very same work was produced a few years since at Drury Lane it proved an utter failure—the house being half empty. Its present success would certainly seem to show that our average public has a better musical taste than the "upper ten thousand" who patronize the Italian operas.

Benedict's "Lily of Killarney," the second opera produced, was quite as well given, and quite as successful as the work of Cherubini. The composer had made considerable alterations in the score for this performance; indeed it may be said that the third act was to a great extent rewritten. The chief additions consisted of a new scena for Danny Mann, a capital Irish jig, and a new finale for the third act, founded upon the favourite song "Eily Mavourneen." There can be no doubt that the alterations are an improvement to the work. The principal parts were excellently given by Miss Julia Gaylord (Eily), Mr. Charles Lyall (Myles na Coppaleen), and Mr. Santley (Danny Mann), while among the subordinate characters the Sheelah of Mrs. Aynsley Cook, the Corrigan of Mr. Ludwig, and the Father Tom of Mr. Aynsley Cook deserve special commendation.

Mdlle. Ida Corani, a lady already favourably known in our concert-rooms, made her début in "La Sonnambula," with considerable success. In the same work Mr. J. W. Turner, a gentleman with a remarkably fine tenor voice, appeared as Elvino; another specially good feature of the performance being the Lisa of Miss L. Graham, who sang and acted excellently.

Adolphe Adam's sparkling opera "Giralda" was produced for the first time in England on the 21st ult. The work, which is considered one of its composer's best, is an excellent specimen of the light French comic opera. The libretto by Eugène Scribe is full of amusing situations, and the music is melodious, piquant, and most charmingly scored for the orchestra. The performance was an exceedingly good one. The part of Giralda was allotted to Mdlle. Ida Corani; Miss Josephine Yorke was excellent as the Queen of Spain, and Mr. Celli no less so as the King. The Don Manuel of Mr. Nordblom and the Ginès Perès of Mr. Charles Lyall were also thoroughly satisfactory, while Mr. Aynsley Cook as Don Japhet was irresistibly droll.

In the course of the present month Wagner's "Flying Dutchman" is to be given, with Mr. Santley as the hero.

The Prospectus of the Saturday afternoon concerts at the Crystal Palace, announced to commence on the 30th ult., promises many highly-interesting works during the series of 25 performances, 12 of which are to take place before, and 13 after, Christmas. The following compositions will be given for the first time: Palestrina.—Ave Maria. Purcell.—The Yorkshire Feast-song, for solos, chorus, and orchestra. Bach.—Concerto for orchestra. Haydn.—Two Andantes from his earliest symphonies. Mozart.—Concerto for violin in E flat, Concerto for pianoforte in E flat, recitative and aria for soprano, "Ahi lo previde," being centennial works composed within 1776-77. Beethoven.—Dances for orchestra, composed for the Redouten Saal at Vienna, and a fragment of a violin concerto with orchestra. Schubert.—Fantaisie in C, Op. 15 (adapted for pianoforte and orchestra by Liszt). Sterndale Bennett.—Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor." Berlioz.—Overture and selection from Benedict and Beatrice. Raff.—Overture on "Ein feste Burg" (Op. 127), and his newest symphony or other orchestral work. Wagner.—"Der Walküren Ritt," from "Der Ring des Nibelungen;" the Centennial Philadelphia March. Rubinstein.—Symphony, Ocean; pianoforte concerto, No. 2, in F, with other compositions in pursuance of his arrangement to appear as pianist and conductor at two concerts. In addition to these novelties, composers of every school will be fully represented, and an engagement has been offered to Herr Brahms on the occasion of his visit to England to receive his degree as Doctor of Music at Cambridge. The orchestra will maintain its usual standard of efficiency; and the performances will be, as before, under the conductorship of Mr. A. Manns, whose zeal in organizing and directing these concerts is now too well known to need eulogium.

We regret to record the death of M. Félicien David, which occurred at Paris during the past month. He was born at Cadenet, in the Department of Vaucluse, on the 13th April 1810, and although compelled for some time to earn a livelihood as an attorney's clerk, his musical talents soon attracted the notice of Cherubini, and at twenty years of age he entered as a student at the Conservatoire. Having become a disciple of St. Simon, he composed many of the hymns sung by the community at Ménilmontant; and on the dispersion of the fraternity he made a journey to the East, accompanied by some fellow-missionaries, to preach and practise his doctrines far away from his native country. On his return to France he composed his "Oriental Melodies," which met with little success; but his "Ode Symphony," The Desert, which was brought out at the Conservatoire, at once made his name. He was also the composer of several Operas, the names of which are even now, however, scarcely remembered. In 1868 he received the biennial prize from the Emperor, and also became an officer of the Legion of Honour.

As Government Inspector of Music in the Training Colleges of Great Britain, Mr. John Hullah has published his Report of the Examinations in 1875, by which we find that a large majority of the students obtained "60 per cent. and over" of the utmost number of marks obtainable, whether for theoretical knowledge or practical skill, some, however, having attained as many as 90, and even 100 per cent. He also speaks most hopefully of the future, and lays particular stress upon the manner in which instrumental music is now cultivated in the Colleges. Many of his suggestions are highly valuable—particularly as to the advisability of devising some method of enabling the male and female pupils to sing together—and we trust that they will receive every attention from the Council to which the Report is addressed.

The New York papers announce the recent decease of Carl Bergmann at the German Hospital in that city. He was for many years leader of the Philharmonic and Arion Societies, and held a high position as a sound and earnest artist.

The fifty-fifth monthly concert of the Grosvenor Choral Society was given on the 15th ult., at the Grosvenor Hall, to a very large audience. The choral works consisted of glees, part-songs, &c., by Benedict, Wagner, Mendelssohn, Barnby, Elliot, and Cowen, and Schumann's Cantata, "Gipsy Life." The last piece was so well given that its repetition was demanded. The solo vocalists (all members of the Choir) were Mrs. Alfred Dye, Mrs. Smyth, Miss Hellier, Miss J. Wilkinson, Mr. Henry Baker, Mr. T. Nettleship, and Mr. A. Lawrence Fryer. Mr. J. G. Callcott conducted, and also played two pianoforte solos. Mr. Henry Leslie's dramatic Cantata, "Holyrood," will be performed at the next concert, on Friday, the 20th inst.

The death is announced of the veteran French organist, M. Michel Engalbert. He was 96 years of age, and played the organ at Nôtre Dame on the occasion of the coronation of Napoleon I.

We regret that an undue pressure upon our space prevents the possibility of quoting any portion of the eloquent address given by Professor Macfarren to the pupils of the Royal Academy of Music on their re-assembling after the summer vacation. It is rarely that a speech so elevated in tone, so powerfully inculcating a love of art for its own sake, and yet so deeply sympathetic with student-life, has been delivered at an educational institution; and we need scarcely say that it created a profound impression, not only upon the youthful portion of the audience, for whom it was specially designed, but upon the many riper artists who were present on the occasion.

Ernst Lubeck, who held a high reputation as a pianist and composer, has recently died in an asylum for the insane, where unfortunately he had been for the last few years confined.

The Brixton Choral Society announces for performance during the season 1876-7 three Oratorios—"The Light of the World" (Dr. Sullivan), "Mount Moriah" (Dr. Bridge), and "Esther" (Handel), and three Cantatas—"The Corsair" (F. H. Cowen), "The Good Shepherd" (J. F. Barnett), and "The Crusaders" (Niels W. Gade). As usual, the concerts will be under the able direction of Mr. William Lemare, the first taking place on Monday November 6.

A legacy of £1,000 has been left to the Royal Society of Musicians by the late Mr. Ed. Schulz, the pianist.

The musical portion of the proceedings at the Welsh National Eisteddfod, held at Wrexham, appear to have been this year unusually interesting. Both the instrumental and vocal competitions were keenly contested, and in many cases the adjudicators, Sir Julius Benedict, Mr. Brinley Richards, and Mr. John Thomas, were somewhat puzzled in awarding the prizes, an unusually large amount of talent being displayed by the candidates, both male and female.

The Choral Festival and Concert in aid of the Choir Benevolent Fund at Rochester is now fixed for the 19th inst., and, if it be fair to judge from the long list of patrons and stewards, including Lord Darnley, the Mayor, and all the resident and neighbouring clergy and gentry, promises to be most successful. The organ of the Cathedral, which has been for some time past undergoing extensive alterations and improvements, will be completed in readiness for the occasion, and Dr. Bridge, Dr. Longhurst, and Mr. E. J. Hopkins, besides Mr. J. Hopkins, the organist of the Cathedral, will take part in the service. The Mayor and Corporation will be present officially at the Festival.

The celebrated contralto singer Mrs. Alfred Shaw, also previously known as Miss Postans, has lately died, at Hadleigh.

St. Paul's Cathedral Bells.—Since going to press we have been informed that Lady Burdett-Coutts has undertaken to defray the cost of bells 3, 4, 5, and 6, thus completing the peal.

REVIEWS.

Novello, Ewer and Co.

Musical Myths and Facts. By Carl Engel. In two volumes. Vol. I.

It is by no means an easy task to write a thoroughly readable and interesting book on a musical subject. On the one hand, if the author be an accomplished musician there is the danger that in his anxiety to impart information he may become so technical as to be dry, if not unintelligible, to amateur readers; while, on the other, there are numerous instances of books on music written for the general public which are so superficial and rhapsodical, even where not absolutely inaccurate, as to possess little or no value for an earnest student. Between these two quicksands Mr. Engel has carefully steered. Those readers who are acquainted with his previous writings will need no testimony as to his thoroughness; and the present book is full of interesting and curious information, so pleasantly imparted that it may safely be predicted that few who take it up will leave the reading unfinished. As the second volume is not yet before us, we shall confine the present remarks to the first, supplementing this notice by another upon the completion of the work.

As may be inferred from the title, the book consists of a series of detached essays, and collection of anecdotes bearing more or less directly upon musical subjects. The first article in the volume is entitled "A Musical Library." It commences with an expression of surprise that a country in which the diffusion of music is so general as in England "does not yet possess a musical library adequate to the wealth and love for music of the nation." Some remarks are made on the musical department of the British Museum Library, which, it may be said, are not half so severe as they might be. Speaking from an experience of more than twenty years, we plainly say that the musical library at the Museum is—we were going to say disgracefully—incomplete. We can at least say that more than half the works—standard works too—that we have wished to consult are not to be found in the catalogue. To give but one example. We know not how it may be now, but a few years ago there was only one orchestral score of Mendelssohn's (the Italian symphony) in the whole of the library. We believe that there has been some slight improvement of late years; but even now the library is lamentably deficient in full scores, which are just the class of works most wanted, because owing to their cost many students cannot afford to buy them for themselves. Mr. Engel then goes on to consider what the constitution of a national musical library should be, and concludes with some pertinent remarks as to the daily increasing difficulty of forming one. To this every collector can bear testimony. The standard works of the great masters—we are not speaking now of Beethoven or Mozart, of whom complete editions have been or are being issued—are ever becoming scarcer. For instance, the scores of Gluck, Cherubini, Boieldieu, or Auber are hardly to be had for love or money; and if by chance one finds its way into a music sale it probably fetches a fabulous price. We therefore cordially endorse Mr. Engel's concluding remark, that "if the acquisition of such a national musical library is thought desirable, no time ought to be lost in commencing its formation."

The second essay in the book is entitled "Elsass-Lothringen," and contains an interesting account of the state of music in Alsace and Lorraine. The notice of the Republican Hymn, written in 1792 by Ignaz Pleyel, then Kapellmeister of Strassburg Cathedral, is very curious, but too long for quotation.

After a paper on "Music and Ethnology," containing the questions drawn up by the author, at the request of the British Association, for the guidance of travellers in uncivilized countries, to assist them in collecting information as to national music, we reach one of the most elaborate articles in the book, on "Collections of Musical Instruments." Here the Author is peculiarly at home. Many of our readers will be aware that the large collection of old and curious musical instruments at South Kensington was made by Mr. Engel; and the present paper contains an account, not merely of that collection, but of the principal ones to be found on the Continent. To the musical historian and archæologist the present will be one of the most valuable articles in the book.

"Musical Myths and Folk-Lore" is a very curious collection of old legends, both European and Asiatic, some of which are especially interesting as illustrating the music of the great composers. Thus the story of "The Bold German Baron" (p. 87) recalls the "demon huntsmen" in the Incantation Scene of the "Freischütz," while the legend of "Al Farabi" (p. 82) has a singular resemblance to the subject of Handel's "Alexander's Feast."

The article on "The Studies of our Great Composers," though containing little that will be new to a well-read musician, brings together a number of interesting details and anecdotes as to the habits of composition of the great masters, and a few examples of curious coincidences in their works. The paper is one which will be read with much pleasure, as also the following on "Superstitions concerning Bells."

Two valuable contributions to musical history follow in the articles on "Curiosities in Musical Literature" and "The English Instrumentalists." The former gives an account of some of the most remarkable books on music which have appeared both in this country and on the Continent, some of which are very scarce. The author also quotes some of the contemporary criticisms of the great masters who were in advance of their age. The following, which is most certainly a "curiosity," we do not remember to have met with before. It is a notice from a Berlin paper of 1790 of the first performance of "Don Giovanni" in that city.

"It is not by overcharging the orchestra, but by expressing the emotions and passions of the heart, that the composer achieves anything great, and transmits his name to posterity. Grétry, Monsigny, and Philidor are, and ever will be, examples of this truth. Mozart, in his 'Don Giovanni,' aimed at producing something extraordinary. Thus much is certain, and something extraordinary surely he has produced; nothing, however, which could not be imitated or which is great. Not the heart, but whim, eccentricity, and pride are the sources from which 'Don Giovanni' has emanated."

Who in our day would dream of comparing Grétry, Monsigny, and Philidor with Mozart? Yet while we laugh at the blindness of the critic of 1790, we shall do well not to forget that it is only a few years since the majority of musical critics in this country spoke in nearly the same contemptuous manner of Schumann, and that even now there are many who are quite unable to appreciate Brahms and Wagner. Like Mozart, these great composers are in advance of their age.

The article on "The English Instrumentalists," giving an account of the chief musicians who visited Germany from this country in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, contains much valuable information, but is chiefly of antiquarian interest. The following paper on "Musical Fairies and their Kinsfolk" gives a number of charming little fairy tales. As a sample of Mr. Engel's style, we quote a short one, which is further interesting from the identity of its chief incident with one in Wagner's "Tannhäuser."

"A clergyman in Sweden riding one evening over a bridge heard most delightful sounds of some stringed instrument. He looked about, and saw on the surface of the water a youth wearing a little red cap, and with golden hair, long and wavy, which streamed over his shoulders. In his hand he held a golden harp. The clergyman knew at once that this must be a Neck (water-spirit); he therefore, in his zeal, called out to him:—

"'How canst thou play so cheerfully on thy harp? As likely is this dry staff which I am carrying in my hand to bud and blossom, as that thou shouldst inherit eternal life!'

"The unhappy Neck sorrowfully threw his golden harp into the stream, and sat down on the water, weeping most piteously.

"The clergyman spurred his horse, and continued on his way. But he had not proceeded far, when, to his great surprise, he saw that his old walking-staff began to put forth leaves; and soon there appeared between them flowers more beautiful than he had ever seen. This he understood to be a sign from heaven that he should teach the consoling doctrine of reconciliation in a more liberal spirit than he had hitherto done. So he hastened directly back to the Neck, who was still sitting on the water sorrowfully complaining; and showing him the green staff, he said:—

"'Dost thou see now my old staff is budding and blossoming, like a young plant in a garden of roses?—thus also blossoms hope in the hearts of all created beings, for their Redeemer liveth!'

"Consoled, the Neck took up again his golden harp, and heavenly sounds of joy resounded far over the water the whole night long, and many people heard them along the banks of the stream."

It will, perhaps, interest our readers to learn that the name "Neck," which appears in the above story, is said by Mr. Engel to be the origin of the term "Old Nick," which is used with quite another meaning.

The last article in the present volume is on "Sacred Songs of Christian Sects," and contains an enumeration of the principal collections of Chorales, Psalm-Tunes, and other Church music.

We need not, in concluding this notice, add a single word in recommendation of the volume. If the account of its contents which we have given does not induce readers to get the book for themselves, nothing that we could say would be likely to do so. We shall await with interest the appearance of the second volume.

Communion Service, in Unison, with Organ Accompaniment; by Philip Armes, Mus. Doc.

The fashion of writing, and we presume also of singing, services in unison seems within the last few years to be decidedly on the increase. This may, perhaps, be partly owing to the more general introduction of Gregorian music in a certain section of the Established Church, and probably also in part to the self-evident fact that such services make far less demands upon the choir than those that are written in harmony. There are, however, certain points which are too frequently lost sight of by the composers of unison services. In the first place, music which is to be sung by a large mass of voices in unison (for we are assuming that in these cases the congregation as well as the choir join in the singing) requires great breadth of melody: mere prettiness is out of place: a dignified and stately character should predominate. Besides this, the treatment of the organ obbligato demands care on the part of the writer. If nothing is given beyond an accompaniment of simple chords, an effect of monotony will probably result; what is generally known as a "free organ part," with independent melody, is the most suitable, care being of course taken that nothing inconsistent with the sacred character of the music be introduced.

These remarks have been suggested to us by Dr. Armes's service, which we consider one of the best specimens of its class that has come under our notice. The opening "Kyrie" is very ingenious, the same melody being harmonized in three keys—B flat, F, and D minor. The "Credo" is an excellent setting of the words, and by no means difficult to sing, though a little attention to the "accidentals" will be required from the choir. The enharmonic change of notation (from G flat to F sharp) at the words "And was crucified," which is very effective, will also demand a little care from the singers. The "Sursum corda" and "Sanctus" are necessarily so short as to offer but little scope to the composer; but the concluding "Gloria in Excelsis" is another capital number. Here again is another enharmonic change (p. 11), at the words "Thou that takest away the sins of the world," which, however, presents no difficulty in performance. The entire service is one which is likely to be popular, the organ part being of more than average interest, and the harmonies throughout excellent.

The Office for the Holy Communion; set to music in the key of E flat. By S. P. Tuckerman.

We believe we are correct in saying that Dr. Tuckerman is the only American composer whose music has found its way into our cathedrals. Those of his works with which we are acquainted are certainly not undeserving of that honour, being not only very melodious but written in a thoroughly ecclesiastical style. The present is rather an elaborate setting of the Communion Service, occupying in all nineteen pages. There are no pretensions to contrapuntal writing in it; the voices move together throughout; and the work is evidently designed for general utility rather than as a means of showing the learning of the composer. It contains a "Kyrie," sentences before and after the Gospel, the "Credo," "Sursum Corda," Preface and "Sanctus," and "Gloria in Excelsis." A peculiarity of the work is the large predominance of unison passages for voices. As the work is not professedly a unison service, we cannot but think that Dr. Tuckerman has introduced such passages almost too frequently, and thereby diminished their effectiveness. This, however, is altogether a matter of taste, and in no way affects the merit of the work. The gem of the Service we consider to be the "Sanctus," in five-part harmony, but each movement contains much that is interesting. It may be as well to point out that on p. 7, first line, last bar, a ♮ is wanting before the A in the alto.

There be none of beauty's daughters. Song. Poetry by Lord Byron.

Wert thou like me in life's low vale. Ballad. Poetry from Sir Walter Scott's "Legend of Montrose."

Composed by S. S. Wesley.

It is good that the public should know some of the secular compositions of the late Dr. Wesley (organist of Gloucester Cathedral), and we are glad, therefore, to find that these two songs, which have been some time out of print, are now re-published and issued by a firm so long associated with the Doctor's sacred works. That they are in every respect worthy of the high reputation of their composer may be confidently assumed; but singers may, perhaps, not expect to find that, as songs for drawing-room performance, they are infinitely more vocal and melodious than most of those modern effusions which are merely "made to sell." No. 1 will require a good accompanist, for the instrument and voice have equally important parts throughout. The harmonies are extremely beautiful; and amongst the many effective points may be mentioned the delicate colouring of the phrase commencing "And the midnight moon is weaving." The second song is in the true ballad form, but lifted above the level of the majority of works of this class by the manner in which it is treated. We commend both these compositions to vocalists who would desire to choose rather what is good than what is new.

Weekes and Co.

On Tuning the Organ; by A. Hemstock (Organist, Diss).

This little pamphlet, of 32 pages, is written by a practical man who understands his subject, and contains much useful information. It must, however, be added that the manner is not equal to the matter, as Mr. Hemstock's style is a close imitation (whether intentionally we cannot say) of that of the celebrated Mrs. Brown. In proof of this assertion it will be sufficient to quote one sentence (p. 26):—

"Every organist ought to be acquainted with the interior of the instrument that he has the care of, as little faults continually occur, and the inconvenience that is caused, such as the whole manual not being able to be used, the remedy in many cases is so simple, provided the organist knows where to alter it, and in that case often prevent the builder coming a great distance for perhaps a few minutes' work when he gets to the instrument, and save great expense very often."

Lamborn Cock.

Minuetto Sentimentale; for the Pianoforte.
Cantilena Affettuosa; Do.

Composed by Franz M. D'Alquen.

The affected titles of these two pieces will certainly not attract, and may repel, purchasers; for when music will not establish its own character it is not worth hearing. Beethoven went so far as to say that those persons who could not feel the time of his compositions should not attempt to play them, but this is perhaps expecting rather too much. The "Minuetto" before us, in F minor, with a "Trio," in the tonic major, is a musician-like piece, and may be commended for containing some quiet and unobtrusive writing, which is refreshing in these days of pretence. The second piece—a Cantabile melody, with a flowing semi-quaver accompaniment divided between the two hands—has a second subject in the relative minor which forms an effective contrast. Without displaying any feature of special interest the composition is fully equal to the average "drawing-room music" of the day.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

Auckland, New Zealand.—A service was held in S. Paul's Church on the evening of Tuesday, July 25, the special feature being the music (all of Dr. Dykes's composition), led by a mixed choir of twenty-eight voices. Mr. Brown conducted, and Mr. J. A. Beale presided at the organ. Instead of the Psalms, three hymns were sung in succession. The anthem was a selection from Dr. Dykes's "These are they." An offertory was made, realizing £13 18s. 4d., which will be sent home to be added to the fund for the maintenance of the composer's widow and children.

Buxton.—The opening of the new Music Hall, which will now leave the Pavilion free for promenade, was in every respect thoroughly successful, the ceremony being attended by His Grace the Duke of Devonshire and many influential gentlemen connected with, and interested in, the undertaking. At the luncheon the highest compliments were paid to Mr. Julian Adams, who has certainly been mainly instrumental in introducing a taste for good music in Buxton, and to whom indeed the credit of creating the necessity for more extended accommodation for the musical performances is entirely due. The concerts which have already been given in the new room have fairly tested its acoustical properties, the result being eminently satisfactory. ——An Amateur Concert was given on the 6th ult., in the new Hall, in aid of the funds for the restoration of Earl Sterndale Church, which was in every way a great success. The orchestral pieces, Mendelssohn's overture to Athalie and Haydn's "Surprise" symphony, were effectively rendered by Mr. Julian Adams's band. "Auld Robin Gray" was pathetically sung by Mrs. Robert Wilmot, and Mrs. Arthur Goodeve in "Tell me, my heart" was highly successful. Mr. Adams received an enthusiastic encore for his pianoforte solo, Handel's "Harmonious Blacksmith." Miss Ridgway, the Rev. W. H. Robertson, the Rev. E. Greatorex, Mr. Wass, and the Rev. G. Robertson contributed songs, duets, trios, and part-songs.

Dunster.—The parish church, after being completely renovated, was re-opened on the 13th ult. The organ, which is placed in the north transept, has been considerably enlarged and improved, by Messrs. Bryceson and Co., of London. Mr. Thomas J. Dudeney, formerly of Hatch Beauchamp, has been appointed organist, and he exhibited the grand powers of the instrument by playing a selection of music from the works of Dr. G. A. Macfarren, Sir W. Sterndale Bennett, J. S. Bach, &c. Mr. C. A. W. Troyte, with his noted set of ringers from Huntsham, attended, and several changes of double and triple grandsire were rung on the bells during the day. The peal consists of eight five-toned bells.

Gavinton, Dunse.—On Tuesday, the 12th ult., Mr. Matthew Dunn gave a musical demonstration with his elementary Tonic Sol-fa class, in the old schoolroom, which was crowded. The first part of the programme was devoted to sacred, and the second and third to secular, pieces. The entertainment passed off with great success, and reflected much credit upon the conductor.

Glasgow.—The St. George's Choral Union (instituted in 1873) has in preparation Haydn's Seasons, which will be performed during the coming session, the resident orchestra, led by Mr. Carrodus, having been engaged for the occasion. Several works have been given by this Association during the brief period of its existence; and we trust that the increased patronage and support of the Glasgow music lovers will strengthen the directors in their efforts to spread a taste for the highest classical compositions.

Isle of Wight.—Concert and operatic entertainments were given at Sandown, Newport, and Cowes on the 4th, 5th, and 7th ult., under the direction of Mdme. Liebe Konss. Miss Beatrix Young gave "The three ravens" with much taste and expression, and Mr. Newton Baylis's rendering of Boyce's "Roving life" was very effective. Special praise, however, must be given to Mdme. Konss for the excellent style in which she sang "Light of love" ("C'est l'Espagne"); and Miss Edith Goldsbro', R.A.M., gave two pianoforte solos with skill and taste. In Lecocq's comic operetta, Retained on both sides, which concluded the entertainment, the acting and singing of Mdme. Liebe Konss and Mr. Newton Baylis were much applauded.

Newmarket.—A recital of Organ Music was given by Mr. W. F. W. Jackson, in St. Mary's Church, on the 21st ult. Compositions by Beethoven, Bach, Handel, Mendelssohn, &c., formed the programme.

Reading.—Miss Agnes Larkcom gave a Concert in the Town Hall on the 4th ult., when she was assisted by Miss M. Hancock, Miss A. Butterworth, Mr. H. Guy, Mr. H. Brandon, and Signor E. Bonetti in the vocal department, and Mr. J. W. Keppel (flute) and Signor G. Bisaccia (piano). Both vocalists and instrumentalists acquitted themselves very much to the satisfaction of the audience, and encores were numerous. Mr. T. Hill and Mr. F. G. Cole acted as conductors and accompanists.

Stafford.—On Thursday, the 7th ult., a meeting of local Choirs, fourteen in number (350 voices), took place in St. Mary's Church, for the afternoon service, when a very successful programme was admirably performed. The services were Tallis's; the Chants to the Psalms, Nares in A, Langdon in F (double), and Crotch in A; Magnificat, Monk in G; Nunc dimittis, Bervon in C. The Anthem was Goss's, "O praise the Lord, laud ye the name of the Lord;" Hymns—Processional, Sullivan's "Onward Christian Soldiers;" before Sermon, "Crown him with many crowns;" Recessional, "Light's abode," from Hymns Ancient and Modern. The Choirs were ably prepared and conducted by Mr. Inglis Bervon, Organist of St. Mary's. Mr. H. Deakin presided at the organ.

Worcester.—The prospectus of Mr. Spark's Subscription Concerts for the season 1876-7 announces the first performance for the 24th inst., with the following eminent artists: Madame Edith Wynne, Madame Antoinette Sterling, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Lewis Thomas, Mr. Lindsay Sloper (pianoforte), and Mr. Ould (violoncello). Three concerts will be given during the session.

York.—The twenty-third annual meeting of the Amateur Musical Society was held in the Spen Lane School-room, on the 4th ult. Mr. Ed. Robinson, in the absence of the president, occupied the chair. Mr. John Thorpe, hon. sec., read the report, which showed that the society was steadily progressing. On the 3rd July, Herr Oberhoffer was elected conductor in the place of Mr. Duffill, resigned, since which there had been a considerable increase in the attendance. The finances of the Society were also proved to be in a satisfactory condition After the election of officers for the ensuing session, and a cordial vote of thanks to the chairman, the meeting terminated.

For further particulars address the Author at Broadstairs, Kent.

DR. FOWLE'S TREATISE ON MUSICAL DEGREES.—Delay has been unavoidable. Since I promised the work, both my father and mother have died, my wife has been in a helpless condition, and my own health so very uncertain, that my fourth book of Voluntaries (for which hundreds of subscribers are waiting) is also delayed. Only about a dozen copies of the Treatise are ordered, my numerous patrons and the public generally declaring, "We estimate your value by the usefulness of your published works, and on that ground we petitioned the Premier on your behalf, without reference to any degree you hold." The Treatise will appear, and rather astonish some weak minds; but, after the gratifying expression of opinion evinced, not until 100 copies at 1s. each have been ordered. T. Lloyd Fowle, Broadstairs, Kent. Send for high testimonials.

MUSICAL DEGREES.—R. SLOMAN, Mus. D., Oxon., receives PUPILS in Town, and prepares them for Oxford, Cambridge, and London University Examinations. Address Dr. Sloman, Reading.

ATTACK ON DR. FOWLE.—Dr. Fowle is informed that an attack has been made on him in a musical journal which the late Dr. Wesley and himself gratuitously aided in establishing. The said paper has for years sought to injure him, and he is advised never to see it, but to leave a solicitor to guard his interests, and to take action as occasion may require. He greatly regrets that the flattering movement in his favour should have caused such bitter jealousy amongst a few musicians, who, being alike unknown and unimportant themselves, have endeavoured to exalt their own position by attempting to degrade that of Dr. Fowle, because his Publications are so widely known from their acknowledged worth and usefulness.—Broadstairs, Kent.

A COMMUNION SERVICE IN D. Price 3s. net. (Kyrie, Credo, Sursum Corda, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, Tantum Ergo, Gloria in Excelsis.) By Henry G. Rew.

"The first Kyrie is smooth and pleasing, and is cleverly harmonized in three different ways. . . The Creed contains some effective unison passages and a very charming little bit of treble solo to the words 'And was incarnate,' &c. In fact, the whole of the music to the Passion Sentences is expressive and full of feeling . . in which (Sanctus and Gloria), as well as in the Creed, the music is generally effective, and often very expressive. . . These three movements, however (Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Tantum Ergo), contain some of the best music of the whole Service."—Musical Standard.

"Bears evidence of careful and conscientious workmanship. . . Written with a solidity based upon admirable examples. For use in the Church we can confidently recommend Mr. Rew's Service in D."—Sunday Times.

A LIST of GRADUATES in the FACULTY of MUSIC, drawn from Official Sources, from 1830 to 1876.

PREFACE.—The following list of Graduates in the faculty of Music has been carefully drawn up from Official sources, with a view of exposing all sham degrees of Mus. Doc. and Mus. Bac. Being thoroughly exhaustive, and correct in every detail as far as it was possible to make it so, it is clear that every Degree in Music claimed by anyone, which is not contained in this list, is spurious. No foreign Universities possess a faculty of Music at all, neither do the Universities of Scotland. The only way, then, of obtaining degrees in Music is by graduating at either Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, or Durham, or else by having an Honorary Degree of Mus. Doc. conferred by the Archbishop of Canterbury. It has been thought unnecessary to record any Degrees granted before the year 1830, no Graduates of an older date being now alive. The list has therefore been made out from Jan. 1, 1830, to March 1876. It is commended to all lovers of honesty and fair dealing.

THE ORGANIST'S QUARTERLY JOURNAL.

From "The Queen," August 19, 1876.

"The Organist's Quarterly Journal, Parts 30 and 31, edited by William Spark, Mus. Doc. (Novello, Ewer and Co.)—Thirty-one quarterly numbers of this periodical clearly intimate that its existence has exceeded seven years—indeed, that its eighth year is all but completed. Seeing that organists, although not a small party, are—as compared with pianists—limited, this is a very remarkable fact, and testifies strongly to the liberal spirit and altogether efficient manner in which the publication has, on the whole, been produced; and it also proves to demonstration that there is a demand for new organ music, and that this is a branch of composition to which our musicians may profitably turn their attention. The Journal consists of exclusively new and original works. No pains have been spared to obtain contributions from most of our leading musicians, and the editor may well feel proud to have brought together such names as Sir Frederick Ouseley, Dr. G. A. Macfarren, Sir R. P. Stewart, and Sir Herbert Oakeley—the Professors respectively of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, and Edinburgh; of the late Dr. Wesley and Charles Edward Horsley, of Drs. Steggall and E. G. Monk, and of Messrs. Henry Smart, E. Silas, Walter Macfarren, J. F. Barnett, B. Tours, C. E. Stephens, E. Prout, E. Batiste, Alex. Guilmant, Frederic Lux, Gustav Merkel, and others less known to fame. We select from the contents of the present parts (Nos. 30 and 31) for special allusion Dr. Spark's own clever variations upon the hymn tune 'Jerusalem the Golden;' Mr. Hamilton Clarke's quaint and characteristic Minuet; Mr. Silas's Minuetto, 'Per un organe di salone;' and Mr. Frederic Archer's clever and spirited Fugue in D minor; and we may add that, though not conspicuous by their number, the contributions of the editor form an interesting feature in the series."

The current Part (32) for October, 1876, completes the Fourth Volume, Covers for Binding which can now be had of the Publishers, price 2s. each.

The Title and Index for Vol. IV. will be issued with Part 33.

The Work will be continued with increased zeal on the part of the Editor, who will endeavour to secure good, attractive, and thoroughly useful compositions from the best writers. Intending new Subscribers will oblige by sending their names as early as possible to the Editor or the Publishers.

PART 33, commencing Vol. 5 (January 1, 1877), will contain:

1. MARCH (C minor) ... ... Geo. B. Allen.
2. ELEGY—Andante (A minor and major) ... ... Charles Goodban.

4. PRELUDIO E FUGA (G major) Augusto Moricani, Organist at the Vatican, Rome.

THE JACKDAW OF RHEIMS.

Words from the "Ingoldsby Legends." Music by George Fox. Performed for the first time on Thursday evening, June 29, at St. George's Hall, with enormous success. Price 2s. 6d. net. Harmonium Accompaniment, 1s. The Band Parts may be hired on very reasonable terms.

"Ingoldsby's humorous poem has been 'set to music' in appropriate style by Mr. Fox, and in this new form will obtain additional admirers. The music is dramatic, tuneful, and spirited, showing not only a fine appreciation of the wit of the story, but also a capability of giving musical expression to it. The solos and choruses are characteristic and good; and the cantata will be found useful both in the concert-room and private parties in affording pleasing entertainment."—News of the World.

"'The Jackdaw of Rheims,' a cantata, music composed by George Fox. Choral societies, who begin now to complain that they 'have used up everything,' will find an agreeable novelty in this spirited little work by Mr. Fox. The words are, of course, those well-known verses in the 'Ingoldsby Legends,' which have been recited ad nauseam at penny readings and 'conversazioni.' There are frequent choruses of a lively character, interspersed by solos, chiefly for a bass or baritone voice. Mr. Fox has fully entered into the humour of the poem, and here and there are little musical touches calculated to 'bring down the house'—as, for instance, the irresistible imitation of one of the Gregorian tones upon the words, 'At matins and vespers he never was out.' We cannot pass over the 'Dead March' of the poor jackdaw without a word of special commendation. Notwithstanding the 'lightness' of this composition it gives a strong indication of Mr. Fox's ability to write in a higher strain."—Musical Standard.

"Mr. Fox has made a decided success in a task of no slight difficulty, and his musical setting of the 'Jackdaw of Rheims' is marked by strong originality, great resources of expression, and a nice discrimination between comedy and vulgarity."—Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News.

"There is much liveliness of treatment and comic spirit throughout the work."—Illustrated London News.

"'The Jackdaw of Rheims,' set to very charming music by Mr. George Fox."—Figaro.

THE WAGNER FESTIVAL AT BAYREUTH

HAVING, in a former article, discussed the poem of "Der Ring des Nibelungen," I now approach its music, not, however, for the purpose of detailed criticism. To go point by point through Wagner's score—a monument of industry and perseverance—would demand qualities second only to those which made its creation possible. Furthermore, such labour is needless. Great as may be the individual claims of "Der Ring des Nibelungen," musical men are not so much concerned about it, per se, as about the new and startling principles embodied. Wagner's drama might disappear to-morrow, but the theories upon which it is based would remain for acceptance or rejection just as though nothing had happened. Consequently, I have to deal, before all, with principle and theory; but this cannot be done apart from a discussion of the music to the drama, since the latter presents itself as an authoritative exposition of the former—so authoritative that the fate of the one may be considered as carrying with it the fate of the other. Let me, then, take both Wagner's theory of dramatic music and his "Ring des Nibelungen"—to regard this in the light reflected from that, and vice versâ.

The theory may be stated briefly, though, if Wagner's voluminous argument be a necessity, the reasons upon which it is based would take long to exhibit. I shall avoid the reasons, not merely because there is no space for them here, but because I now aim at criticism from a practical standpoint, and to take my reader into the wilderness of Wagnerian verbiage would be to harass his mind and tax his patience unnecessarily. Here, then, without further preface, or setting forth of Why and Wherefore, is the root of Wagner's musical system as applied to drama—the Word must dictate the Tone. From this brief thesis springs the whole art-fabric about which the world is talking. The Word must dictate the Tone—that is to say, the Word must be brooded over by the composer, whose instinct will divine its musical equivalent, to which his skill will give expression. Beyond the range of the Word the composer may not go, and he must follow it whithersoever it lead. Nay, he must bring his eye so closely down to it that anything besides, even a contiguous word, is unseen. It is not for him to move to a distance, painter-fashion, that a number of objects may blend and furnish materials for an artistic design. This would be inimical to the absolute supremacy of the Word, which demands individual attention, and reduces the unfortunate composer to the position of the man in arithmetic books who undertook to pick up so many eggs, placed some yards apart, in so many minutes, starting on a separate journey for each. The athlete in question never had more than one egg on his mind and in his hand at a given time, and, like him, the Wagnerian composer moves from word to word, putting his ear to each and jotting down its note. About the influence of this strange procedure upon musical form I shall have somewhat to say by-and-bye, but it will be convenient now to remark its working in a less mechanical and more important direction. A reader may here interpose and say, "Can there be any result more important than the break up of form, upon which music, not less than any other art, depends for all its intellectual and much of its sensuous charm?" In reply, let me state that there are pages upon pages in "Der Ring des Nibelungen" where the music, taken in conjunction with its dramatic surroundings, satisfies every requirement, formless though it be—as form is commonly understood. Listening to it, the unbiassed critic finds himself on the verge of a belief that Wagner has hit upon a system which, however strange, belongs to the Eternal Verities. But the action of his fundamental theory in the direction at which I have hinted is attended by no such results, simply because a drama, properly so called, cannot be constructed without obliging the Wagnerian composer to shut his eyes to the sole objects of art—mental elevation and sensuous pleasure. A drama, while a work of art, is an exhibition of human nature, and would not be true unless it set forth vice as well as virtue, obliquity as well as straightforwardness, that which is mean and small as well as that which is noble and great. In "Der Ring des Nibelungen" Wagner recognises the fact as completely as can be desired. We have seen that his drama abounds in trickery and low device; that even his gods are gamblers; and that hardly a character is free from chicanery. It is to the discredit of the master that he shows us this apart from any high moral purpose; but, generally speaking, the dramatist uses that which is ugly to enforce the desirableness of beauty, and makes virtue more attractive by contrast with vice. But between music and the drama, so regarded, there is not the smallest analogy. The "divine art," abstract in its very essence from everything in the material and moral world, has no necessary connection whatever with anything materially and morally objectionable. He, therefore, who makes the connection does so on his own responsibility, and is solely accountable for the result. Looking at Wagner's theory of the evolution of the Tone from the Word, and not less on his practice as exemplified by "Der Ring des Nibelungen," in the light of this unquestionable truth we see at once the fallacy of both, and understand how both fail on a vital point. Composers, from the earliest years of the lyric drama until now, have had to deal with baseness of character and meanness of sentiment; but they have treated these things under the influence of an idea that their business was not to drag art down to the level of its subject, but always to maintain its dignity and worth. Wagner, on the other hand, sees no dignity and worth in music as such, but hauls it anywhere and everywhere, over flower-decked meadows or through bogs and swamps, tied to the chariot wheels of the Word. Aware of this fact, and familiar with the story of "Der Ring des Nibelungen," the reader can form a tolerably accurate idea of much of the music. Sweet waters do not run from a foul spring, neither do thistles produce figs. Similarly, the scenes in Wagner's drama, where that which is physically and morally repulsive dominates, cannot, according to the theory he sternly practises, be attended by other than repulsive music. Even at this distance of time a kind of shudder passes over me as I recall the wide dreary deserts of barren sound through which at Bayreuth Wagner smilingly conducted us, as though they were strips of the Promised Land, flowing with milk and honey. His grotesque imps, scheming gods, and stupid giants were continually evolving their musical equivalents, and all their lies and dodges were reflected in false and tricky strains. It would be easy to give a hundred examples of this fact—to cite passage after passage, in interminable procession, which, from a musical point of view, has nothing to recommend it. I did so at Bayreuth, in the hearing of one among Wagner's most ardent supporters, and was calmly assured that a musical result was not intended. If so, musicians may well demand, with no little indignation, why the apparatus and resources of music are used for the low and unworthy object of mere noise—why the purest and most beautiful of arts is employed in so degrading a connection, married to the mean and low, and prostituted to the creation of repulsiveness.

I need not stop to show how the notion of evolving the Tone from the Word is destructive of form, which, in its very nature, presupposes the independence of music as regards structural lines. Where the business of the composer is limited to catching each idea as it falls from the mouth of the poet, and clothing it in an appropriate musical dress, he can entertain no notion of symmetry, fitness of parts, beginning, middle, and end; the grouping and general arrangement of that which he produces being dictated by another. We see this constantly exemplified in "Der Ring des Nibelungen," though there are occasions when Wagner so handles his dramatic material as to make the resources of form available. The music streams on down the course of the poetry, turning and twisting in infinite convolution; now calm, now stormy; now flowing over smooth sand, now whirling in eddies among rocks; now expanding into a broad reach, now rushing through a gloomy ravine; now clear as crystal, and now (more often) opaque as a Black Country canal. Nowhere do we find the lines which commonly break up dramatic music into symmetrical forms, as a microscope breaks up a snowflake into a multitude of perfect and independent crystals. Like the brook which I have used in figure, the music is continuous, varied, not by reasons of art, but only by the dramatic circumstances which control it. It has already been indicated that this system is not necessarily an evil. There are scenes in "Der Ring des Nibelungen" where the formlessness of the music never occurs to its hearer—where the poetry of the situation inspires so much beauty that mind and sense are "possessed" to the exclusion of consciousness that anything is wanting. Such is that of the interview of Siegmund and Sieglinde, and of Brünnhilde and Siegmund, in "Die Walküre;" of the forest episode in "Siegfried," and the awaking of Brünnhilde by her hero. In these instances, as well as in others which might be named, Wagner's system is shown under conditions that make it compatible at once with dramatic truth and musical charm. But how does the result arise? From any excellence in the system itself? By no means; rather is it the consequence of things lying outside the system—the consequence of situation and poetic thought, the music springing from which is beautiful, without regard to form, like the merry noises of nature on a summer's day. Turning from the scenes where this result is produced, we find others, in which the composer, having no such help, lies at the mercy of a theory, and is bound down by it so that he cannot employ the full resources of his art. Almost of necessity, there are occasions when the operatic composer derives little help from his subject, which has its moments of exaltation and depression, of emotional arsis and thesis, like everything that reflects the waves of life in a human soul. At such times he can sustain the interest by his own artistic means. The poet retires into the background, but the musician comes to the front, and the balance is preserved without change. How many examples could be cited in which a poor dramatic situation is thus redeemed by the composer's art! But Wagner makes this impossible. If the poet retire, his shadow—the composer—goes with him; if the one sink, down goes the other, albeit there lie close at hand the means of keeping afloat. Herein, as the case appears to me, consists a weakness second only to the deadly heresy that the Word must inspire the Tone. In order to secure the advantage of a dramatic truth which is not very obvious, and, by comparison with that sacrificed, is valueless, Wagner bars the composer from all the resources of form even when he is, through no fault of his own, reduced to the last extremity. The matter has only to be so looked at in order to ensure prompt rejection for this feature of Wagner's plan. But if anybody wishes to see its actual working, let him turn to "Der Ring des Nibelungen" and regard painfully the pages wherein the musician, dragged by the poet through quagmires of dreary talk, is bound by the system to be as flat and unprofitable as his tyrant. If that experience do not convince him nothing will, and further argument is useless. But the chances are in favour of a conclusion that the abolition of form in dramatic music, however possible to a certain extent without serious loss, cannot be accepted as a general principle apart from the gravest sacrifices.

Rejecting Wagner's theory of the absolute domination of the poet, we reject all that is fundamental; but some things yet remain, as exemplified in "Der Ring des Nibelungen," for further thought, and among them the so-called "characterisation of themes:" that is to say, the representation of persons, feelings, and situations by motivi, which regularly appear whenever the things represented are placed before the bodily or mental eye. This device, it is hardly needful to point out, is not of Wagner's creation, but one found ready to hand, and brought to the highest pitch of development in his latest work. Judiciously used, it is of immense service, as helping to define and realise character, besides enabling the musician to suggest or strengthen ideas. Take, for example, the Funeral March of Siegfried ("Götterdämmerung"), which recalls nearly every leading incident in the life of the fallen hero, and makes the musician a biographer without taking him outside the bounds of his art. It must frankly be said for Wagner that he illustrates the use of this new power to perfection. The ingenuity with which he interposes, interweaves, and varies his character-motivi is infinite. Every connoisseur must regard with profound respect and admiration this feature in the work, conclusive as it is, not alone of high intelligence but of splendid musical genius. Here, however, we touch but the fringe of that which, in "Der Ring des Nibelungen," shows the greatness of the composer. No one who has followed me thus far will imagine that I entertain a blind prejudice in favour of Wagner. No one, therefore, will question my sincerity when I avow that the master's latest work argues his possession of qualities which rank him by the side of the first musicians. "Der Ring des Nibelungen" teems with evidence of genius. Its form may be fantastic and its principles a perversion of that which is musically true, but the underlying power is magnificent and overwhelming. Let there be no mistake here, because error would imply a want of the commonest perception on the part of him who errs. Wagner is an illustrious victim of his own theory. The Frankenstein of composers, he has vivified a monster which compels him "to do such tricks before high heaven as make the angels weep."

What, otherwise, might not this great and remarkable man have wrought for his art? His capacity is boundless. From him melody streams as from a perennial spring—the "Nibelungen" is full of it—while his imagination never fails, his power of comprehending and expressing dramatic feeling and situation is always true, and, within the limits he allows himself, his employment of musical resources shows the hand of a consummate master. "Der Ring des Nibelungen" will remain for all time a proof of these gifts, and a monument of genius. But it will testify to something more: it will show how even a man capable of being its author may go wrong in the very essentials of his craft; how he may in the pride of his intellect and the splendid daring of conscious might become the Satan of his order, war against the Eternal Principles, and govern only in Pandemonium. Something of Milton's Fallen Spirit surrounds Wagner with a strange mixture of attraction and repulsion. Among the gods of his native heaven he might have been great, and in that which is now "his own place" he lifts himself in Titanic grandeur. But let us not forget that he is powerful chiefly for evil. Let us take care that neither in toad-form nor any other does he sit at the ear of the fair art-world, pouring therein sophistries to work irretrievable ruin.

TALLIS—WALTHAM ABBEY.

BY WILLIAM H. CUMMINGS.

Some fifteen miles north-east of London stands a grand historic monument full of interest to antiquarians, but still more highly and generally prized by many who regard it as the legacy of an English hero and patriot. Waltham Abbey was built and endowed more than 800 years ago by our last Saxon King, Harold, who in dying for his native land bequeathed to posterity a name and a fame which we, descendants of the conquered and the conqueror, proudly remember.

The old Abbey Church in which the body of Harold was laid after the fatal fight of Senlac in 1066, and where some centuries later the corpse of Edward I. rested for a time previous to its final removal to Westminster Abbey, has passed through perilous times and strange vicissitudes, and on the dissolution of the monastery by Henry VIII. it would probably have been wholly destroyed, but for the fact that the nave and the chapel were claimed by the parishioners as their property, and it is to this circumstance we are indebted for the preservation of the noble relic still remaining to us. But a few years since the condition of this fragment of the old Abbey was such as to be regarded almost as a national disgrace; but thanks to the active exertions of the parishioners, headed by the Rev. James Francis, the Vicar, a better state of things was inaugurated, till at length, in 1860, the fabric of the nave, having received a truly conservative restoration, was fittingly re-opened with a full Cathedral Service. The funds in hand did not admit of the restoration of the Lady Chapel, which continued to be used as a school-room, a debasement of some years' standing; and had it not been for the liberality of Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton, this discreditable state of affairs would in all probability have gone on for some time to come; but now, thanks to him, the chapel is thoroughly restored and its beauties are again apparent. Another great and costly undertaking has also just been accomplished by the munificence of Mrs. Edenborough, in memory of her late husband, and certainly it would have been difficult to have erected a more beautiful or more enduring memorial than the new reredos and pulpit. The completion of these and some other important though less ornamental works necessitated the closing of the Abbey for three months, and on Sunday, the 1st ult., the church was re-opened for Divine worship with a series of special choral services. The choir, consisting entirely of the school children and amateur adults, had been most thoroughly and efficiently trained by the organist of the Abbey, Mr. J. Chalk, who deserves the highest credit for the admirable manner in which the whole of the music was rendered. The services and anthems were selected from the compositions of Handel, Sir J. Goss, Sir G. Elvey, Hopkins, and Smart. The chanting of the Psalms of the day, from the pointing of The Cathedral Psalter, might have put to shame many more pretentious choirs. The Preces and Responses were sung according to festival use with organ accompaniment, the minister's part being taken by the Rural Dean, the Rev. W. S. H. Meadows. The noble harmonies of these Preces and Responses excite as much religious fervour and admiration at this day as they did some three centuries since when they were first penned by the father of English Church Music, Thomas Tallis. Of the history of this eminent musician but little is generally known, and doubtless it will be a great surprise to students of musical biography to be told that Thomas Tallis was for some time organist of Waltham Abbey. This fact, unsuspected by Hawkins and Burney, has recently been discovered by Mr. W. Winters, and having myself some few years since held the same honourable appointment, I am proud to be able to claim Tallis as a predecessor.

The date of Tallis's birth is unknown, but has been guessed at 1510 or 1520; the latter is probably more correct, and from the old cheque-book of the Chapel Royal we learn that he was a singing "child" in the King's establishment. It is, however, believed that he had been pressed into the King's service from the choir of St. Paul's Cathedral, his first master having been Thomas Mulliner, and his fellow-students Heywood, Shelbye, Newman, Allwood, Blytheman, and others. The organ and virginal book of Mulliner, still in existence, contains many compositions for the Romish Church by the youthful Tallis.

How long a period elapsed after the breaking of his voice before he became organist of Waltham Abbey we know not, but a document recently brought to light in the Public "Record" Office contains a list of the various officials who received recompenses and pensions on the dissolution of the monastic fraternity of Waltham Abbey, A.D. 1540. And here we find the name of Thomas Tallis entered as receiving 20s. for wages and 20s. for reward. It is remarkable that this entry should have remained so long undiscovered, for reference has constantly been made by musical historians and antiquarians, including Hawkins and Burney, to the valuable MS. volume in the Lansdowne collection (British Museum) known as "The Waltham MS.," the work of John Wylde, precentor of Waltham Abbey, about the year 1400, and containing the only known autograph signature of "Thomas Tallis." The volume doubtless became the property of Tallis on the dissolution of the monastery, A.D. 1540, and we may be thankful to him for having rescued such a precious treasure from destruction. It afterwards passed through the hands of Thomas Morley, who availed himself largely of portions of the MS. in his "Plaine and Easie Introduction to Practicall Musicke," published in 1597. Wylde's book is wholly written on vellum, and contains several learned and interesting treatises on the art of music. The title on the first leaf reads thus: "Hunc librum vocitatum Musicam Guidonis, scripsit Dominus Johannes Wylde, quondam exempti monasterii Sanctæ Crucis de Waltham precentor;" to which is added a curse on any who should steal or deface the book: "Quem quidem librum, aut hunc titulum qui malitiosé abstulerit aut deleverit. Anathema sit." Sir John Hawkins remarks on this: "Notwithstanding which, upon the suppression of the monastery, violent hands were laid on it, and it became the property of Tallis, as appears by his name of his own handwriting in the last leaf, and there is little reason to suspect that he felt the effects of the anathema." We have already shown that Hawkins was unaware of Tallis's official connection with Waltham Abbey, and consequently of the probability that he came by the volume honestly. The various treatises in the precentor's book combine an odd admixture of learning — scientific, religious, heraldic, astronomical, and musical, and sometimes the arguments are sufficiently amusing. One endeavours to prove the resemblance of "Leah and Rachel to the tone and semitone, and that the sons of Jacob were produced in much the same manner as the musical consonances." Another treatise contains the following curious satirical verses upon those clerical chanters who, in performing the Church Service, not only corrupted the Psalms but hurried over them in a disgraceful manner:—

Qui psalmos resecant qui verba rescia volutant
Non magis illi ferent quam si male lingue tacerent
Hi sunt qui psalmos corrumpunt nequiter almos:
Quos sacra scriptura dampnat, reprobant quoque jura;
Janglers cum jappers, nappers, galpers, quoque drawers,
Momlers, forskippers, overenners, sic overhippers,
Famina verborum Tutivillus colligit porum."

"Janglers and jappers" probably meant those who talk fast and jestingly; "nappers and galpers," sleepers and yawners; "drawers," those who sing or read in a drawling voice; "forskippers, overenners, and overhippers," skippers over. "Tutivillus" was a name given in one of the old monkish mysteries to a Lollard who in the play is made to describe himself as the Devil's chorister.

The name and signature of Thomas Tallys occurs twice on the last leaf of Wylde's MS. volume—the first time in the ordinary running hand of the period, and the second time in large Roman letters. There is also appended the following list of books, probably also written by Tallis, and it may refer to other music books given to him on the dissolution of the monastery:—

x. bookes in folio.
iii. fayre sets gilt bookes."

It would seem that in Tallis's time Waltham Abbey possessed three distinct organs—"A greate large payre of organs above, one in the northe quyre, and a lesser payre beneth, and a lytell payre of organes in the Ladye Chapel." The last-mentioned organ was valued at 20s. at the dissolution of the Abbey.

It is well known that King Henry VIII. was a frequent visitor to Waltham Abbey, and being a musician and composer himself, he would know how to value the worth of such a man as Tallis. We may suppose, therefore, that on the dissolution of the monastery in 1540 Tallis was at once drafted into the Chapel Royal as one of the Gentlemen of the Chapel, not as organist. The King died in 1547, but Tallis lived to fulfil his musical duties during the succeeding reigns of Edward VI., Queen Mary, and Elizabeth, the latter giving him, in conjunction with his pupil Byrde, the additional appointment of organist; and it was whilst in attendance on the Court of Elizabeth at Greenwich that he died, full of years and honours, and was buried in the old parish church of Greenwich, just in front of the chancel rails, where a brass memorial with the following inscription was placed, which was seen by Styrpe as late as 1720. Unfortunately a few years afterwards the church was pulled down, and the brass disappeared.

"Enterred here doth ly a worthy wyght,
Who for long tyme in musick bore the bell:
His name to shew, was Thomas Tallys hyght,
In honest vertuous lyff he dyd excell.

He serv'd long tyme in chappel with grete prayse,
Fower sovereygnes reygnes (a thing not often seene);
I meane Kyng Henry and Prynce Edward's dayes, Queen Mary, and Elizabeth oure Quene.

He mary'd was, though children he had none,
And lyv'd in love full thre and thirty yeres
Wyth loyal spowse, whose name yclypt was Jone,
Who here entomb'd him company now beares.

As he dyd lyve, so also dyd he dy,
In myld and quyet sort (O happy man!)
To God ful oft for mercy did he cry,
Wherefore he lyves, let deth do what he can."

The cheque-book of the Chapel Royal contains the brief entry—"Thomas Tallis died the 23rd of November, 1585."

Many of the compositions by Tallis have been published, some by Daye in 1560, others by Tallis and his pupil Byrde in 1575, but his Service was not printed before 1641; and it is believed that many of his works still remain in MS. in the libraries of Her Majesty the Queen (Buckingham Palace), Christ Church, Oxford, the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge, &c. A very fine MS. copy of his celebrated song, scored in 40 parts, is most carefully preserved in the first-named library.

As this journal was foremost in advocating the reduction of the absurdly high pitch which had gradually crept into our concert-rooms and opera-houses, we can scarcely pass in silence the straightforward statement of Mr. Sims Reeves on the subject, contained in a letter addressed to a contemporary during the past month. After saying that he has been accused by the musical critic of that journal of being "the main cause of an agitation that has led only to confusion and discord," he proceeds to state that the organ pitch at Birmingham was reduced to conform with that in use at Drury Lane, and that if at the late Festival an unreasonable pitch was persisted in up to the eleventh hour, and a sudden change then carried out, he was surely not responsible for any disasters which might follow. He also declares unequivocally that he only asks for the pitch of Donzelli, David, Duprez, and Nourrit, and that, being against the system of transposition in Oratorios, he wishes to avoid the necessity of so doing by establishing a rational pitch which shall be universally adhered to. Everybody knows that between the breaking up of an old system and the general adoption of a new one there is always a brief period of transition; but he who has first awakened public attention to the matter must not be held accountable for the temporary difficulties which arise in attempting to carry out the reform; and we are glad, therefore, that Mr. Reeves—who certainly is not addicted to writing letters—has so clearly and temperately placed the public in possession of the truth.

THOSE who read in the advertisement columns of a newspaper that a "celebrated Professor of Music has an opportunity of placing a lady at a finishing school at half the usual terms," must, we should imagine, wonder in the first place why a "celebrated Professor" should find it necessary to advertise at all, and in the second place how he became possessed of the privilege of obtaining such excellent education so cheaply. Let us then, of our own knowledge, inform the uninitiated that the anonymous is usually preserved by the advertiser because his "celebrity" would vanish were he to give his name; that as soon as he receives an answer he writes to any school open to receive such a bribe, and says that he can "introduce a pupil;" that upon the strength of this he is engaged, and that he gives as much time at the establishment as the sum received from the lady's parents or guardians will pay for, of course "introducing" another pupil should it be required. As we are now constantly reading of the necessity of employing only certificated teachers, it is good that these facts should be generally known, for they will not only strengthen the arguments of the advocates of an organised system of granting musical diplomas, but open the eyes of those who commit the education of their young relatives to masters of whom they absolutely know nothing.

We are glad to find that Mr. Sims Reeves during his concert tour has been singing with all his accustomed power, and even more than his accustomed success, for we read in the Manchester and Leeds papers that at these towns (although he kindly accepted one encore) the audience not only stamped, whistled, and shouted for a repetition of his other songs, but absolutely insulted and drove from the platform the artists who appeared after him. This is indeed proof positive that the "encore" system has now been pushed forward to such an absurdity that it becomes the duty of all who respect the art to root out this custom at once and for ever. We were much in hopes that Mr. Carl Rosa would endeavour to carry out a reform in this matter, which has already been initiated by certain conductors in the concert-room; but unfortunately he convinced us to the contrary on the production of "Zampa;" for, after bowing in acknowledgment of the prolonged applause at the conclusion of the Overture (a practice which, by the way, we should like to see abolished), he resumed his seat, turned back the leaves of his score, and the entire piece was played over again, a triumph indeed for the clamorous individuals who are thus legally allowed to interrupt the performance of a work for their own gratification, but a terrible infliction for those who desired to hear the Opera as the composer wrote it. There can be no question that if the conductor had resisted the demand and had the curtain raised at once, the unseemly noise would have ceased; and if he believe with us both in the disease and the remedy, he will not only boldly try this experiment on a future occasion, but will have a line prominently inserted in his bills that "no encores will on any account be permitted." One season would be quite sufficient to crush out an abuse which has been solely nurtured by executants; and we are certain that Mr. Rosa's efforts in the cause would be warmly seconded by the musical press, and by the many opera-goers who have so long been compelled to remain passive victims of the custom.

Knowing, as we do, that in all public ceremonials in which Kings, Queens, Princes, or Dukes take a part music is called in to aid the attraction of royalty, there can be no reason why royalty should not be occasionally called in to aid the attraction of music. This was done at the Norwich Musical Festival of 1866, when the Prince and Princess of Wales were present, and at the Birmingham Festival of 1873, when the Duke of Edinburgh appeared as a regular attendant at the performances in the Town Hall. The attempt to enlist such distinguished visitors in the cause of charity by an appeal to their love of art may, as we have said, be fully justified by the result; but we must protest against the assertion, which has gone the round of the press, that in making up the accounts of the last Birmingham Festival there was a "deficiency," as compared with the meeting of 1873, of £500, and that this was partly owing to the want of interest in the undertaking, and partly perhaps to the "depression of trade." The fact is that, as royalty was not present, those persons who purchased tickets were actuated to do so solely by the desire to hear the music; and, compared with former Festivals where loyalty was unappealed to, therefore, we emphatically state that the pecuniary returns not only showed no "deficiency," but that they were more than usually satisfactory. Whilst on this subject, too, we may say that at the late Hereford Festival the amount realised for the charity was £1,422 6s. 6d., and that the sum received for the sale of tickets was so large that the £5 advanced by each steward was returned. These truths should be taken to heart by those interested in the spread of Musical Festivals.

DR. RIMBAULT.

Edward Francis Rimbault, LL.D., was born in Soho on the 13th of June 1816, and died after a lingering and painful illness at St. Mark's-crescent, Regent's-park, on the 26th of September last. His mortal remains were deposited on the 30th of the same month in Highgate Cemetery. His life, though not of extreme length, was one of constant activity and industry, and owing to the circumstance of his father, Stephen Francis Rimbault, having held the appointment of organist of the church of St. Giles-in-the-Fields, the subject of our memoir was in very early childhood inducted into the mysteries of art and artist life. One of his father's intimate friends was old Sam Wesley, who by his musical instruction doubtless did much to fix and confirm the young student's taste for solid and enduring music. The lad was also fortunate in receiving kindly advice and instruction from Dr. Crotch, whose love for and devotion to children amounted to a passion. Living in so intellectual an atmosphere, we cannot wonder that young Rimbault zealously pursued those researches into musical and antiquarian lore which afterwards bore fruit so abundantly. At the age of sixteen he was appointed organist of the Swiss Church, Soho, and, when in his 22nd year, he delivered a series of lectures on the history of music in England, which must have called attention to the nature and extent of his researches, for we find that two years afterwards he became secretary of the Percy Society. This Society existed eleven years, and became famous for its publication of early English poetry and ballads. In 1840 he also accepted the office of secretary to the Musical Antiquarian Society, which, shame to tell, became defunct after a too short career of seven years, having conferred inestimable benefit on all students by its publication of rare musical compositions. In addition to his labours as secretary, he edited fourteen works for these Societies, and fulfilled kindred duties as editor in several instances for the Handel Society, the Camden Society, and the Motet Society. His contributions to biographical and bibliographical literature it would be superfluous to enumerate here; a list of the works he edited will be found in Fétis's "Biographie Universelle des Musiciens." In his own special field Dr. Rimbault was quite unequalled, and it would be difficult, if not impossible, to indicate his probable successor: what we have lost by his death, those only who knew him intimately can estimate. Ever acquiring fresh stores of knowledge, he had in various stages of preparation many intended contributions to literature. Of his kindness in helping others, and of his readiness to receive information, even when it tended to overturn some pre-conceived notion or pet theory of his own, the writer can from personal knowledge testify. It remains only to be said that such labours as those of Dr. Rimbault, valuable though they are to the world at large, do not bring much other reward than the consciousness of well-doing; and we may venture to hope that some influential persons will bring his case under the notice of the Prime Minister, who has the power of recognizing the value of such generous self-devotion to the interests of literature and art by placing the name of the widow on the Civil Pension List.

GEORGE COOPER.

The list of musicians taken from among us by death, which has, alas! reached an undue length during the last twelve months, must yet be further enlarged by the addition of the well-known name of George Cooper, who sank peacefully to his rest about five o'clock in the afternoon of Monday, the 2nd ult., at the age of fifty-six years—a man of sterling ability and thorough uprightness. As is the case with all those who are really worth knowing, his character required long acquaintance before its merits could be fully appreciated. His opinions on all subjects connected with his art he always spoke out straightforwardly and with no mincing apologies. Those for whom he had regard knew that they possessed in him a friend on whom they could lean when they needed support; those to whom he had no cause for attachment could easily read the fact for themselves. No wonder that such staunch qualities were sometimes mistaken for coldness or abruptness, in these days of transparent politeness. But these self-same qualities must gain for any man such respect as to make his opinions a real power. Such was his case. For many years his influence among musicians was very great—his opinion on all important subjects was sedulously sought and rightly valued when obtained. Yet the chief work of his life chanced not to lie in any of those spheres which earn an easy entrance into the gilded calendar of popular notoriety, but in the unostentatious but invaluable labour of teaching the use of the instrument of which he was such a complete master—the organ. In this province of work he combined an experienced skill and quiet patience rarely to be found, and it certainly is not an exaggeration to say that no living man can fill his place. To his pupils he imparted not only his own admirable style of playing, but, what was even of more importance, his own view of the aim and end of organ-playing. As the man, so was his style of performance; nothing would he tolerate which savoured of showiness, much less of vulgarity; and when arranging orchestral works for the organ he always most skilfully managed to bring out the good points of the instrument as being noble and beautiful of its kind, not its weak points as being at the best but a bad imitation of a full band.

But although we have to deplore his comparatively untimely death, not one of us who fully apprehends the real object of existence can contemplate the life of our lost brother without a passing wish that our last end may be like his; for surely, whether it be in the realm of art, philosophy, or politics, no greater power is permitted to man than to make his own mind a lasting influence on the minds of his fellow men. And happy indeed is he who can look back on his own career with a feeling of assurance that he has never wielded this influence but honestly and for a right purpose. Nor can such influence, however unobserved, be lost; it is a mental force which, like all other forces, cannot by nature's own law be wasted; it will inevitably permeate and bear along the larger streams into which it has so noiselessly flowed. So know, and so feel, all who came into close contact with George Cooper; and the writer of these few memorial words, an old and much-indebted pupil, thus gladly, yet indeed sorrowfully, lays them as a wreath on the tomb of his departed friend.

THE BRISTOL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

The capital of the West Country has held its second Triennial Musical Festival, not without success. A lot of good music was more or less well performed, and the statistics, both of attendance and money returns, compare favourably with the gathering of 1873. I lay unusual stress upon this latter result, because it shows that seed has been sown where neither the birds of the air could devour nor thorns spring up to choke. Bristol, indeed, promises to be a fat soil for years to come, in proof whereof let me quote certain authentic figures. In 1873, when the town entered upon its career of festival holding, the number of persons who attended the seven performances was 11,648; the "Creation" drawing 1,653; "Elijah," 1,922; "St. John the Baptist," 1,180; and the "Messiah," 1,921; while the three evening concerts were patronised by 1,484, 1,561, and 1,927 respectively, the last, at which the "Stabat Mater" and a miscellaneous selection were given, carrying off the honours. In 1876 the aggregate attendance rose to 12,785, an increase of 1,137, distributed as follows: "Elijah," 1,857; "Israel," 1,685; "Fall of Babylon," 1,828; "Messiah," 1,830; first evening concert (Verdi's Requiem), 1,856; second (miscellaneous), 1,833; third ("Lobgesang"), 1,896. Nothing is more remarkable about these figures than the smallness of the difference between the highest and lowest numbers—1,896 and 1,685. Surer proof that the Bristolians were bent upon supporting the Festival without showing an undue preference for particular works could hardly be given. It is worthy of note, moreover, as regards the evening programmes, that in both years the largest audience was drawn, not by a varied selection of things good, bad, and indifferent, but by works like the "Stabat" and "Lobgesang." From this the managers will, no doubt, take a hint for future guidance. It supplies ample evidence that the public are not, in an artistic sense, so simple as is generally believed, but that they know a good thing when they see it, and are glad to get it. The advance of 1876 upon 1873, from a money point of view, is of course proportionate to the increase of patronage. At the first Festival the amount received was £5,783 19s., at the second, £6,472 17s.—a gain of £688 16s. Taking this in connection with a probable diminution of outlay arising from the greater experience of the managers, and it is reasonable to assume an encouraging balance on the right side. Not, however, that arrangements were neglected in view of a deficit. A permanent body of 300 gentlemen exists in Bristol, each member guaranteeing £25, and the whole, consequently, supplying the Festival with an available capital of £7,500. Backed up so well, and not likely to find its career endangered even by a considerable sacrifice on behalf of art, the enterprise may have a most important future, towards which the success just achieved has, beyond question, given an impetus. In one other respect, the second Bristol gathering did not come up to expectation. I refer to the collections at the doors for charitable purposes. The amount gathered on each day was so ludicrously small that the managers wisely said nothing about it, for fear, perhaps, of raising a chorus of laughter. It is clear now that time must be given for an unaccustomed public to associate concert-going and alms-giving, as those practices are allied at Birmingham and the cities of the Three Choirs. By all means let the Bristolians have time. They are wealthy enough to do great things when once the fact has dawned upon them that paying a guinea for an expensive musical feast is not likely to cure and comfort many of our sick brothers and sisters in the neighbouring hospitals.

With regard to the programmes and performances, I shall not be expected to go through them in detail, and thus act the part of a distant and very needless echo of daily journals. A brief sketch of both by way of a text on which to hang some general remarks will answer every useful purpose. Looking down the programme, one is struck by the prevailing familiarity of its selections. The "Messiah," "Elijah," "Lobgesang," "Israel," "Mount of Olives," the "Pastoral" and "Jupiter" symphonies, the overtures to "Oberon," "Tannhauser," and "Jessonda"—all these are so commonly given on festival occasions that an observer unacquainted with facts might reasonably assume the non-existence of anything else of equal rank. To censure the managers for rolling the wheels of their Festival in such well-worn ruts is, of course, easy and, one way regarded, a matter of duty, because, while great and familiar works are not to be neglected, there is a higher need for extending the limits of public knowledge, and doing justice to the many creations of genius which hitherto have waited for justice in vain. But, on the other hand, managers may not make Quixotes of themselves and go a-tilting at the windmill of public tastes and preferences. They must lead their public, it is true, but gently, remembering the proverbial philosophy which points out that though one man can take a horse to water, twenty cannot make him drink. In this, as in most other matters, a middle course is possible, and at another Festival, perhaps, we shall see the Bristol managers profit by the experience of that just passed, when Verdi's little-known "Requiem" attracted only one person less than "Elijah," and twenty-six more than the "Messiah." Against such features in the programme as were not familiar no objection can be made. Verdi's latest work was certainly entitled to a hearing, if only on account of its illustrious origin, while Spohr's "Fall of Babylon," one of the greatest sacred productions of a master whose name must ever command respect, speaks for itself in a manner not to be denied.

The make-up of the miscellaneous selections has been sharply criticised, and not without good reason, if such things are to serve in any degree the high purpose which all festival doings should have in view. One of the worst legacies bequeathed to us by our musical fathers consists in the notion that a hodge-podge of songs, ballads, overtures, symphonies, &c., has a value great enough to serve on a purely artistic occasion. It has nothing of the kind, and, looked at from any other point of view than that of a means pour passer le temps, possesses no value whatever. As yet the Bristol managers are not awake to this fact. They go upon the bad old plan of permitting artists to insert a lot of show and royalty pieces, very good in their place perhaps, but simply harmful when dovetailed with works of classic rank. That the Festival public are prepared for a better arrangement all my observation tends to show, and I am not without hope that on the next occasion at Bristol we shall find the miscellaneous programmes drawn up in accordance with some guiding artistic principle.

The executive resources of the Festival were adequate in all respects. Mr. Charles Hallé is a conductor who brings to his work an artistic taste, and who, moreover, is at the head of an orchestra constantly playing under his bâton. Band and chef were, therefore, beyond cavil at Bristol. The Festival choir, trained with zeal, care, and skill by Mr. Alfred Stone, was equally up to the required measure of excellence. Indeed, the western city has a right to be proud of a body of voices so pure in quality and so capable of "going anywhere and doing anything" as that over which Mr. Stone presides. If the choir lack the great power of its rivals farther north, it more than atones for this deficiency by a refinement and sweetness such as are barely equalled, certainly not surpassed, elsewhere. The principal vocalists were Mesdames Titiens, Albani, Wynne, Patey, and Trebelli; Messrs. Cummings, Lloyd, Maybrick, and Behrens—a fairly strong body; and with these the festival resources were competent to the highest things. Unhappily, the same arrangements for general rehearsal prevail at Bristol as at Birmingham; that is to say, however competent band, chorus, and principals may be in their individual capacity, no means of securing collective excellence are allowed, the more unfamiliar things being scrambled through as far as time permits, all others having to take their chance. Such a system as this knows no possible defence. It is absurd on the face of it—a thing pour rire, and one which patriotic as well as artistic Englishmen never mention in presence of the foreigner. Till it is abolished let us be well assured the festival doings will always be open to the severe criticism which points out blemishes arising from wilful persistence in wrong-doing. At present it is of no use to beg indulgence for the shortcomings that abound. Indulgence is not deserved while our arrangements leave the door open for a hundred risks, many of which so constantly appear that they ought to be styled certainties. Let us try at reforming this matter. The thing has got to be done somehow, and we may as well set about it first as last.

Had the Festival programme contained nothing but "Elijahs" and "Messiahs," my remarks would end here; but a word is due to its quasi-novelties. The "Requiem" of Verdi need not, however, detain me long. Only a short interval separates us from the date of its first performance at the Royal Albert Hall, when, conducted by the composer in person, and given under every possible advantage, it made a deep impression, and was exhaustively discussed. Enough now that the Mass, albeit written in a style foreign to the taste which regulates the sacred music of England, achieved a marked success. Whether it will take a place beside the "Stabat Mater" of Rossini, and thus become the second example of Italian Church composition accepted amongst us, time alone can shew; but that it is worthy of such an honour not a few amateurs unfeignedly believe. The "Fall of Babylon" commands greater attention, as a work written for England by a composer whose artistic relations with our country were unusually close. It must at once be admitted that Spohr's Oratorio has not met with a large amount of good fortune. Rarely is a chance of hearing it presented. The Exeter Hall authorities have lost sight of the work, and if it be sometimes given in Norwich, other places are careful never to show a knowledge of its existence. To this extent it suffers in common with all the master's sacred effusions (the "Last Judgment" excepted), and by consequence of the reaction which set in against Spohr when the star of Mendelssohn rose above the horizon. The genius of the younger composer, trained in the school of Bach, and developed so that it combined modern emotionalism with the power and grandeur of the contrapuntal masters, accorded more with English tastes, and was allowed, unhappily, to supersede not a little worthy of a better fate. Before it the light of Spohr grew faint, and although that work survives wherein he gives expression to the solemnity of the "last things," "Calvary" and "The Fall of Babylon" are rarely heard and little known. In this matter there has undoubtedly been a failure of justice. Neither of the oratorios just named are unworthy of their composer, which is equivalent to saying that they deserve a good deal of the favour lavished elsewhere. In the case of the "Fall of Babylon" this is emphatically true, for reasons not difficult to set forth. I know well enough that the subject of the oratorio is dramatic, and that Spohr had but a small share of dramatic genius, the lyrical element suffusing nearly everything he did. But I also know that the author of the libretto, Professor Taylor, appears to have done his work in full view of the fact. The "Fall of Babylon" is dramatic only in a subordinate sense, nearly all the first part consisting of lyrical or reflective passages such as Spohr delighted to obtain as a subject for his ornate and intense expression. In the second part, which deals with the Feast of Belshazzar and the events closely following, Taylor's book becomes more strictly a drama; but even here it is curious to observe how, after the march and chorus "Shout aloud" the lyrical character once more prevails, and Spohr deals with nothing but words of gratitude and praise. Undoubtedly this is a blot upon the libretto per se, but, having regard to the genius of the composer, it is an advantage, measurable when we compare Spohr's success in the lyrical part of his work with that obtained elsewhere. If the master attempts to be dramatic he fails, and that Taylor's book exacted so little which he was unable to give is a merit rather than a defect. To judge the "Fall of Babylon" properly, therefore, it should be regarded less as a sacred story than as the expression of certain sacred, domestic, and patriotic feelings, called forth by a great national crisis, which, like the keystone of an arch, supports the whole. Thus looked upon, it matters comparatively little that Spohr's handling of dramatic incident and situation compares unfavourably with the works of other great masters of oratorio. One may, of course, wish that he had given to the various characters and scenes a more decided and individual physiognomy, but it would be wrong because he has not done this to condemn an artistic creation wherein characters and scenes are subordinate. The "Fall of Babylon" must be estimated by its didactic and lyric numbers, and in these there can hardly be a doubt the master appears at his best. Take, for example, the tenor air "Remember, Lord," the bass song and chorus "Mighty God, Thine awful mandate," the berçeuse, "Dear child of bondage," the duet "Judah, still the chosen nation," and the air "No longer shall Judah's children wander." All these are gems which excite the highest admiration, because full of deep sentiment and intense musical beauty. The wonder with regard to them is, in point of fact, that they have not become general favourites distinct from their surroundings, so marked are they by those qualities which the popular mind most easily appreciates. The impression made at Bristol could hardly have been greater, and it may be assumed that hundreds of west-country amateurs are now making themselves familiar with these charming examples of Spohr's lyric genius. Although some of the choruses in the "Fall of Babylon" are distinguished by requisite breadth and grandeur—witness "God of our fathers" and "Lord, Thine arm hath been uplifted"—it must be admitted that others exhibit in too forcible a style the composer's mannerisms: yet everywhere a musician finds plenty to admire. Spohr may have been destitute of broad artistic sympathies, but he was in regard to his own works an artist pur sang, and nothing to which he put his hand shows other than the signs of exalted musicianship. If for this reason alone his oratorios deserve more justice than they obtain—the justice which certainly awaits them as a result of the law whereby, in matters of taste as in all other, that which has been will be again. Bristol did well to give the "Fall of Babylon" a hearing, and to secure for the work a performance adequate on the whole to its merits. Let us hope that now the Oratorio will no more return to the obscurity in which it has so long dwelt. There is room for it, and all things of its degree, and there is need that vacant places should be filled, not by the pretentious, vapid, and inartistic creations of self-styled masters, but by the finished productions of those whose genius lies outside dispute.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

In our last number we called attention to the prospectus of the Saturday Concerts of the present season at the Crystal Palace, the first of which took place on the 30th of September. Those which have been given up to the present time have fully maintained the reputation of the institution, both as regards the excellence and catholicity of the selections and the uniform finish of the performances. It is indeed hardly too much to say that during the twenty preceding seasons of these concerts no finer renderings have been given of the works of the great composers than some of those to which we have had the pleasure of listening during the past few weeks. It will be impossible in the space at our command to enter into details of all the performances; a few remarks as to the more salient points are all that can be given.

The Crystal Palace has always been distinguished for the attention paid to the works of English composers. It was therefore only appropriate that the first concert of the present season should open with an Overture by the late Sterndale Bennett, the one selected being that to "The Merry Wives of Windsor," which had not before been heard at Sydenham. The Overture we are inclined to consider one of Bennett's best works, full of pleasing ideas, and marked by that finish of detail which was one of his characteristics as a composer. Two other novelties were given at this concert—the one a solid and well-written, though rather heavy, Concerto by Hans von Bronsart, admirably played by Mr. Fritz Hartvigson; the other, a selection from a Suite by the French composer Ernest Guiraud, assuredly neither solid nor heavy, but on the contrary very light and piquant, though with no great depth of invention. On the same afternoon a superb performance of Beethoven's Symphony in A was given. The vocalists at this concert were Madame and Signor Campobello.

The second concert included Haydn's delightful "Military" Symphony, and Weber's Concertino for clarionet, in which the fine tone, remarkable execution, and excellent style of Mr. Clinton (the first clarionet in the Company's band) were heard to great advantage. The special feature of the afternoon, however, was a large selection from the works of Wagner, including the Overture to "Rienzi," the Prelude and "Elsa's Dream" from "Lohengrin," the Funeral March from "Götterdämmerung," and the March composed for the Centennial Festival at Philadelphia. Of these five numbers the first three have often been previously heard in our concert-rooms; we need not therefore dwell upon them now. The Funeral March, following the death of Siegfried, with its truly wonderful instrumentation, was splendidly given under Mr. Manns's direction, and created a profound impression, even apart from the stage. The Centennial March, on the other hand, is alike unworthy of the occasion for which it was written and of the reputation of its composer. The vocalists at this concert were Miss Sophie Löwe and Mr. W. Shakespeare.

The concert on the 14th ult. commenced with Mendelssohn's "Hebrides" Overture, and concluded with a very sparkling and pleasing Overture by Mons. Gevaert (the principal of the Conservatoire at Brussels) to his Opera "Le Billet de Marguerite." Schumann's Symphony in B flat was played as it is played nowhere but at the Crystal Palace. Herr Wilhelmj was the instrumentalist at this concert. He was heard in a very dry Concerto for Violin by F. Hégar, and in his own transcription of Walther's song in Wagner's "Meistersinger." Some very excellent vocal music was also contributed by Miss Catherine Penna and Miss Enriquez.

At the fourth concert, the Crystal Palace Choir appeared for the first time this season; and, so far as can be judged from a single hearing, there seems to be a marked improvement in their performance. The chief feature of the concert was Gade's charming Cantata "The Erl-King's Daughter," a work, by the way, which may be recommended to the attention of Choral Societies, as being full of beautiful music, and neither too long (it occupies rather less than an hour) nor too difficult. The solo parts were sung by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Bolingbroke, and Mr. Maybrick. An Adagio, for strings, from an unpublished and very early symphony of Haydn's, was a novelty of special interest. The movement is given in the appendix to the first part of Pohl's "Life of Haydn," and though decidedly old-fashioned in style, it was worth reviving, not merely from a historical point of view, but for its own sake. A second novelty was a "Marche Héroïque," by Camille Saint-Saens, a brilliant composition, but one in which the workmanship is more interesting than the ideas. The Overture to "Fidelio," Mendelssohn's "Reformation" Symphony, and two songs completed the afternoon's programme.

For the fifth concert, which took place after our going to press (on the 29th ult.), the chief works announced were Raff's "Lenore" Symphony, Schubert's Overture to "Alfonso and Estrella," Sullivan's "Ouvertura di Ballo," and Beethoven's Violin Concerto, to be played by M. Wieniawski.

CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

It is very true that Wagner's Opera "Der Fliegende Holländer" must not be accepted as more than a specimen of the genius of its composer in the bud; but a half-

"The Angel Gabriel was sent from God."

The General Prizes of £5 and £3 will be adjudicated by Sir Julius Benedict; and a Prize for Cathedral Boys will be adjudged by Sir John Goss, Mus. D.

We are glad to find that Liverpool has recently (thanks to the praiseworthy energy of a local professor, Mr. W. H. Jude) organised a Sacred Harmonic Society, the aim of which is stated to be "to afford ladies and gentlemen an opportunity of studying both practically and theoretically the works of the great Masters; and more particularly the revival of the immortal productions of the illustrious Englishman, Henry Purcell." The Society already numbers some eighty members, and has been encouraged with the patronage of many eminent musical professors. It is governed by a committee of local gentlemen, and has been honoured with the presidency of an influential connoisseur, Mr. W. Lowes Rushton, who has manifested a personal and active interest in the work. Mr. W. H. Jude, the conductor, has made cathedral music his special study for many years past; and, with his well-known abilities as an organist and composer, he is in every respect well qualified for the directorship of what promises and assuredly deserves to become a most important organisation.

On Sunday, the 8th ult., Harvest Festival Services were held in the Church of St. John the Evangelist, Waterloo-road. At the morning service Barnby's anthem, "O Lord, how manifold are Thy works," was admirably sung by a full and well-balanced choir. The sermon was preached by the Vicar, the Rev. A. J. Robinson, M.A. The offertory was forwarded to the Mansion House Eastern War Sufferers' Relief Fund. At the evening service the singing throughout was excellent. The Psalms (lxxxi., civ.) were chanted to two double chants, composed expressly for the occasion by Mr. Charles Castell, the organist, as was also the anthem, "The Earth is the Lord's," the solo being well rendered by Master R. H. R. Watling.

We hear that Verdi's Requiem Mass will shortly be performed on a grand scale by Mr. Kuhe, at Brighton.

The Harvest Festival at St. Stephen's, South Kensington, caused large congregations to assemble on Sunday, the 15th ult. The church was beautifully decorated with corn, fruit, flowers, &c., the font and pulpit being worthy of special praise. The early celebration was at 8.30 A.M., the morning service and second celebration (choral) at 11 A.M., when Mozart's "I will give thanks" and Tours's Service in F were most effectively sung. The children's service was largely attended, as was also the first evensong at 4 P.M. At the evening service Mendelssohn's sacred Cantata, "Praise Jehovah," (Lauda Sion), was sung, accompanied by a full orchestra, consisting of six violins, two violas, two basses, two flutes, two oboes, two clarionets, two trumpets, three trombones, and kettle drums, in addition to the organ. The work was excellently rendered under the direction of Mr. Albert Lowe, who conducted from the lectern, the organ being taken by Mr. W. T. Essex. The sermon in the morning was preached by the vicar, and that in the evening by the Rev. G. Palmer, of St. Mary's, Newington. The services were repeated on Sunday, the 22nd ult.

Mr. G. C. Martin, Mus. Bac., Oxon., has been appointed Sub-Organist of S. Paul's Cathedral, in the place of the late Mr. George Cooper. Mr. Martin was formerly organist to his Grace the Duke of Buccleuch, at Dalkeith, and also of S. Peter's Church, Edinburgh, where he gained considerable reputation both as an organist and choir-master. For the last two years he has occupied the position of master of the choristers of S. Paul's Cathedral, an office which he will hold in conjunction with that of Sub-Organist.

Mr. F. J. Read, a pupil of Dr. Sloman, of Reading, passed his final examination at Oxford for the degree of Mus. Bac. on Wednesday, the 25th ult.

On Tuesday, the 3rd ult., a Concert was given in the Lecture Hall, Camden Park-road, by the Choir of S. Luke's Church, New Kentish Town, in aid of the Choir Fund. The first part of the programme was sacred, and included, among other items, Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer," the solo in which was given with much expression by Master Lawrence. Gounod's "There is a green hill far away" was sung by Master McCall so well as to elicit an encore, and Zingarelli's "Laudate" was on the whole fairly rendered. In the second part several part-songs were given with much effect by the choir. Mr. A. Penny presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. W. T. Box conducted. The hall was crowded in every part, and the fund materially benefited.

At the harvest thanksgiving, on the 1st ult., at St. Mary's, Vincent-square, Westminster, the services comprised the following music, which was well rendered by the efficient choir: Matins — Benedicite, Best; Jubilate, Smart in F; Anthem, "I will magnify Thee," Goss; Offertory Sentences, "Not every one" and "Lay not up for yourselves," Sauerbrey. Evensong — Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, Calkin in B flat; Anthem, "O Lord our Governour," Gadsby. The church was tastefully decorated, and the services were largely attended.

We regret to announce the death (at Kingstown, the packet station for the Anglo-Irish mails) of Mr. Reginald Walker, youngest son of Mr. J. H. Walker, many years Professor of Music at Rugby School. He was exceedingly talented, both as an organist and composer—one of his compositions has appeared in the Musical Times—and at the time of his decease was only in his thirty-seventh year.

On the 15th ult., the Harvest Festival was celebrated at the Church of All Saints', Kensington Park. This Church is well known for its sound musical services and for its large and effective choir, under the direction of Mr. E. H. Birch, the organist, and the manner in which the selection of music was rendered upon that occasion was well calculated to sustain the reputation already made. The Service used throughout the day was Garrett in D; the Anthems, "The Lord hath done great things" (H. Smart), "Fear not, O land" (Sir John Goss), and "Praised be the Lord" (Dr. Steggall).

The Hereford Times of the 14th ult. has the following announcement: "We understand that a proposition has been mooted amongst the stewards to present to Mr. Townshend Smith a testimonial in recognition of his valuable services. We trust that the response to the proposition will be unanimous, and that the recognition will take a form as substantial as the results of the protracted and indefatigable exertions of the Hon. Sec., who we are sure will value the feeling which prompts this step far more than the testimonial itself."

An Evening Concert was given in the Boys' School Room, All Saints', Spicer-street, Mile End New Town, on Monday, the 23rd ult., in aid of the Victoria Park Hospital for Diseases of the Chest. The soloists were Miss A. Batyie, Miss E. Harrison, Miss O. S. Wilkinson, and Miss M. Pratt, Messrs. Harrison, Harradine, and Whybrow, and two trios were sung by Messrs. Marsh, Woolgar, and Robinson; Mr. W. C. Vignes gave a reading and Miss M. Wilkinson a recitation. The Concert was under the direction and conductorship of Mr. J. Lowick Harrison, who also presided at the pianoforte.

The fifty-sixth monthly Concert of the Grosvenor Choral Society was given, before a numerous audience, at the Grosvenor Hall, Buckingham Palace-road, on Friday, the 20th ult., when Leslie's Cantata "Holyrood" was performed, with Mrs. Alfred Dye, Miss Lizzie Turner, Mr. A. Lawrence Fryer, and Mr. Henry Baker as soloists, and Mr. J. H. Maunder as accompanist. Miss Turner was encored in the ballad "There once was a maiden," and Mr. Baker sang with excellent effect the part allotted to "John Knox." The second part consisted of solos and part-songs, including Macfarren's "Windlass Song" (male voices); Taubert's "In a distant land," sung by Miss Annie Geary; and a new song, "Jamais plus!" by J. G. Callcott, sung by Mr. A. Lawrence Fryer, all of which were enthusiastically encored. Mr. J. G. Callcott conducted.

We regret to find that petitions for the winding up of the Alexandra Palace Company have been presented, and that, although the matter is temporarily delayed, we may reasonably expect the speedy closing of this agreeable place of resort. Musically speaking, it will be a great loss to those who live in the immediate neighbourhood, for the performances in the concert-room, under the able direction of Mr. Weist Hill, have been steadily increasing in interest; and we cannot forget the revival of two of Handel's much-neglected Oratorios, the general execution of which reflected the highest credit upon all concerned.

At the final meeting of the stewards of the Hereford Festival, it was unanimously resolved: "That the thanks of the stewards be given to the conductor and Hon. Sec. for his indefatigable exertions in making arrangements for the Festival, and bringing it to its unprecedentedly successful issue." The stewards were also to be invited to meet again at the next Hereford Festival in 1879, and the committee of management was reappointed. We have since been informed that the Dean of Hereford and all the Canons have accepted the office of stewards for 1879.

REVIEWS.

Novello, Ewer and Co.

Sonatas for the Pianoforte. Composed by W. A. Mozart. Edited and fingered by Agnes Zimmermann.

All persons actively engaged in musical tuition will agree with us that but little is known, even amongst cultivated amateurs, of Mozart's Sonatas. True it is that some three or four of those most popular in character have taken a stand in public estimation, and are now and then to be found embedded in a heap of showy pieces forming the contents of a "Canterbury" in a fashionable drawing-room; but the very fact of these being selected to represent Mozart's genius in this class of composition prevents many from searching more deeply into the mine of wealth which Miss Zimmermann has brought together in the attractive volume before us. And yet, not only for purity of melody and masterly construction, but as studies for touch, phrasing, and the cultivation of every shade of expression, these works remain unrivalled, many indeed of the Sonatas but rarely played containing beauties which cannot but surprise those who hear them for the first time. The editress, like a true artist, approaches her task with reverence; and in her Preface, therefore, gives her reasons for altering or inserting anything which might offend those who rigidly demand the text of Mozart. The little she has done in this way, however, needs but small apology, for the slurs (some of which are added and others lengthened) accurately define, as she says, "the phrasing and the musical sense of the different passages:" these will doubtless be felt as a valuable guide to those who study without a master, and cannot but help even the professor, who has often to supply by explanation to his pupil what should be in all cases clearly shown upon the paper. The one change of notation in a portion of the Trio of the Sonata No 11 is perfectly justifiable; for as everybody sustains the melody in these passages, it is as well to write them as they are to be played. The vexed question of the appoggiatura and acciaccatura has been settled by drawing a line through the latter wherever it occurs, and allowing the former to receive its full value as an emphasised note, retaining in both cases the original notation. This is perhaps as it should be; but, after all, the importance of preserving the old appoggiatura is more a matter for the eye than the ear, especially as we know that Mozart himself did not adhere to any positive system, in proof of which we may instance the celebrated Sonata in A minor, No 8, in which the opening subject, at the commencement of bar 2, has A as an appoggiatura before G♯, and on its repetition, in bar 10, the same note appears as an ordinary quaver linked to the following one. Where an experienced musician like Miss Zimmermann, however, carefully separates the appoggiatura from the acciaccatura, all doubt upon the subject is set at rest, and the notation becomes of little consequence to the player. We are glad to find that in this edition every care has been taken to ensure correct and intelligent phrasing by attention to the minutest marks of punctuation, and by plain directions in the Preface as to the manner of producing the required accents by the touch. In Mozart's time, however, it is well known that much was left to the taste of the performer, in confirmation of which we could cite the bars marked "a piacere," in the last movement of the Sonata in C minor, No 14, where, at every one of the pauses, we have the authority of a late enthusiastic exponent of Mozart's music for saying, it was the custom (we presume imitated from the method initiated by the composer himself) to introduce some short ornamental passages, of which we find no indication in the notation. In proof of the necessity of selecting a first-class executant to edit a work of this importance, it may be well to call attention to the fingering, which we need scarcely say will be found invaluable to amateurs. A great change has taken place in the system of fingering lately; and Miss Zimmermann is, we see, not conservative enough to adhere to an old method when a passage can be more freely executed or more accurately phrased by a new one. In conclusion, we have only to say that the music is clearly printed, and that the date of the composition of each Sonata, wherever it could be ascertained, is stated. The purity of the text has been certified by reference to the best English and foreign editions; and in every respect the volume is a worthy companion to that recently issued by the same firm and under the same editorship, containing the whole of the Sonatas of Beethoven.

Musical Myths and Facts. By Carl Engel. Vol. 2.

In our last number we noticed in some detail the first volume of the present work. The second, which now lies before us, is fully as interesting and instructive as its predecessor. Mr. Engel is not only a great reader, but he has read many books not generally accessible, as may be seen both from the article on "Curiosities in Musical Literature," mentioned last month, and from many parts of the present volume. It will be needless to do more than give a brief account of the principal articles which make up the contents of this second and concluding part of the work.

First in order we find a paper entitled "Mattheson on Handel," which from a historical point of view is of considerable value. Many of our readers will be aware that in 1760, the year following Handel's death, a memoir of the great composer was published by the Rev. John Mainwaring. It may not, however, be so generally known that the work was shortly afterwards translated into German by Handel's old friend Mattheson, then an old man of eighty years of age, with the addition of copious annotations partly supplementing and partly correcting the statements of the original work. The whole of Mattheson's notes, together with quotations of the passages of Mainwaring to which they refer, are given by Mr. Engel, and though much of what Mattheson says will be familiar to students, his commentary is well worth preserving, the more as his book is now extremely scarce.

The article on "Diabolic Music," which follows, is one of those curious collections of quaint anecdotes and legends in which Mr. Engel seems especially to delight, and of which examples have already been noticed in our last article. The succeeding papers on "Royal Musicians" and "Composers and Practical Men" are chiefly historical; but, as usual, the author, instead of giving merely a dry record of facts, has brought together a number of interesting details, many of which are entirely new to us, and are derived from sources not readily accessible. The article on "Music and Medicine" is largely ethnological, and gives an account of superstitions with which music is connected of various savage or but half-civilized nations. This is followed by a list of the principal works on the medical employment of music, with a more detailed notice of such of them as are not easily attainable.

"Popular Stories with Musical Traditions" is one of the most amusing articles in the volume. The stories are nearly twenty in number, some of them, such as "The Jew in the Thicket," "The Pope's Wife," and "The Two Hunchbacks," droll and even grotesque, while others, for example, "The Monk of Afflighem" and "The Plague in Goldberg," are very beautiful. The following paper on "Dramatic Music of Uncivilized Races" is another example of Mr. Engel's patient and laborious research. He has collected from various books of travels accounts of dramatic entertainments, more or less rude, of the Australian aborigines, the North American Indians, the Polynesian Islanders, African Negroes and others, all of which present us with the drama in its most rudimentary form; then, noticing it in a somewhat more advanced stage, we have descriptions of the drama, always combined with music, in Java, Siam, Cochin China, Burmah, India, China, and Japan.

"A short Survey of the History of Music" consists of a chronological table, extending over 49 pages, of the chief events in connection with musical history. This, as we learn from the author's introductory remarks, is chiefly founded on a similar compilation by the late Charles Czerny. It will be found of great value, and though we have not had the time to verify every date and name, we have found it reliable so far as we have tested it. This, however, is no more than we expected from the general quality of Mr. Engel's work. A feature which materially adds to the utility of the table is that a parallel column is given, in which are recorded the chief contemporaneous events of general history, as well as of literature, science, and art.

The last article in the volume is on "The Musical Scales in use at the present day." Of these no less than eleven are given. Of course no such large number is to be found in general in our own modern music; but various forms of the scale in use among foreign nations are included.

We take leave of Mr. Engel's work with our best thanks to him for an important and most interesting contribution to musical literature.

Tunes New and Old; compiled by John Dobson, and for the most part revised or re-arranged by H. J. Gauntlett, Mus. Doc.; J. F. Bridge, Mus. Doc., Oxon.; and Samuel Reay, Mus. Bac., Oxon. Tenth thousand. Enlarged.

This volume is designed to supply tunes for all the metres to be found in the Wesleyan Hymn Book. Not being acquainted with that work, we are not in a position to say whether the number and variety of its peculiar metres is such as to necessitate the preparation of a new tune-book, and whether among the countless number of such books already in existence one might not have been found which would meet all the requirements of the Wesleyans. That the volume under notice has proved suitable for the purpose for which it was compiled is sufficiently evident from the fact of the present copy bearing on the title page the words "Tenth Thousand." The success of the work may therefore be taken for granted; and our duty is not to discuss the question of its necessity, but to make a few remarks upon its contents.

Of all religious denominations, the Wesleyans have probably been, in time past, the most distinguished for the lively character of their sacred music. Many of us are old enough to remember the time when such books as Rippon's and Walker's selections of psalm-tunes were those most in vogue; and even now it is probable that in out-of-the-way places many genuine specimens of the old-fashioned tunes, with fugues, repeats, divisions, and what not, may still hold their ground. Yet no more striking proof of the improvement in general musical taste, at least as regards psalmody, could be found than that which is furnished by the present volume. Here we find the psalm-tune, so to speak, sitting clothed and in its right mind. As we turn over the pages of the book, they present a sober appearance that reminds us of "Hymns Ancient and Modern."

The entire work contains 297 psalm-tunes, 54 chants, and 6 responses and doxologies. These are selected from the most various sources; and we are glad to see that a very considerable number of old German chorals has been included. For the general excellence of the arrangements the names of Dr. Gauntlett, Dr. Bridge, and Mr. Reay will be a sufficient guarantee. Only in one or two instances do we think an improvement would have been possible. For example, the tune "Darmstadt," No. 148, is the choral "Nun danket alle Gott" adapted to a different metre from the original. This is, we think, to be regretted, as the English version of the original hymn "Let all men praise the Lord" is so frequently sung and so generally known. Possibly, however, the explanation may be that the hymn is not in the Wesleyan collection. If so, it ought to be. Again, the tune "Dettingen," No. 232, is a sadly-mangled and distorted version of the very beautiful choral "Wie schön leuchtet der Morgenstern." Here not only is a considerable part of the original omitted altogether, but two lines are introduced, one of which is not in the German choral at all, and the other is not only put in its wrong place, but altered almost beyond recognition. Such a mutilation of a fine melody ought not to have been allowed, and our surprise is increased by finding in the index Dr. Bridge's name given as the arranger. In this case, too, it was the more unnecessary, as the particular metre to which the tune is adapted (87,87,887) is a very common one in German chorals. To name but three, any one of which would have suited without alteration—"Es ist das Heil uns kommen her," "Aus tiefer Noth schrei' ich zu Dir," and "Nun freut euch, lieben Christen, gmein," three of the most beautiful of the German chorals, are all in this metre. The instances we have named are, however, exceptional; and as a whole we can speak very highly both of the selection and arrangement.

The whole work provides tunes for sixty-six different metres, an unusually large proportion—196 out of 297—being for peculiar metres. We do not know whether the Wesleyan Hymn Book abounds in such, but otherwise it is difficult to see why no less than four tunes each should be given for such unusual metres as 555,11 and 559,559. This is, however, a matter on which the editor is the best judge; we simply mention the point as one which has struck us as remarkable in going carefully through the book.

To sum up our opinion of the volume in general terms, we should say that it is one which is decidedly superior to many collections which have come under our notice, and which shows that its editor has a just appreciation of the requirements of the present day in the matter of church music.

Zion; A Cantata for Baritone Solo, Chorus, and Orchestra. Composed by Niels W. Gade. Op. 49.

The Crusaders; A Cantata for Solo voices, Chorus, and Orchestra. Composed by Niels W. Gade. Op. 50.

In the notice of the Birmingham Festival in our columns last month, both these works (which our readers will remember were produced on that occasion) were so ably analysed by the writer as to relieve us from the necessity of any details now. We have nothing to add or to alter of what was then said; it will therefore be sufficient to take this opportunity of calling attention to the fact that both works are published in Novello's octavo edition, and of recommending them to the notice of amateur musical Societies, for which, both from their moderate length and their comparative freedom from difficulty, they will be found admirably suited.

The Organist's Quarterly Journal. Edited by William Spark, Mus. Doc. Parts 30—32.

Dr. Spark has most assuredly had no easy task before him during the eight years which have now elapsed since the first number of The Organist's Quarterly Journal appeared. To procure even a reasonably good continuous supply of original compositions for the organ is certainly no light work; and it is no more than might be expected that the music contained in the thirty-two parts of the Journal already published should be of somewhat unequal merit. It speaks well for the industry of the editor that original contributions by no fewer than eighty-two different writers have appeared in the columns of the work. Of these a large number have been from English pens; and it may fairly be said that on the whole we have held our own against foreign writers. The three numbers now under notice may be taken as fairly representative of the average merit of the journal; we shall therefore briefly enumerate their contents. Part 30 commences with a set of variations by the editor on the psalm-tune "Jerusalem the golden," which are well laid out for the organ, and in their way effective, though to some extent suffering from poverty, or perhaps we should rather say monotony, of harmony. If our readers will compare these variations with those by Mendelssohn on the "Vater unser" in his Sixth Organ Sonata, they will see what we mean. Next comes a short and pleasing Larghetto by Mr. J. E. Richardson, organist of Salisbury Cathedral, which is followed by a not particularly striking Andante by E. A. Sutton. Two excellent Minuets, one by Mr. Hamilton Clarke, the other (Per un Organo di Salone) by M. Silas, complete this number. The form of the Minuet seems to be growing in favour with writers for the organ: we find four examples of it in these three numbers. The first piece in Part 31 is a neat little Andante by H. H. Battley. We then find a very good "Postlude" by Arthur Carnall, which (though not so entitled) is really a March with Trio. A "Prelude and Fugue" in D, by Jacob Bradford, is, in our opinion, very dry, and in places most uncomfortably harmonised. The following "Andante con moto," by E. H. Turpin, is also not free from a suspicion of dryness, though we like it better than the preceding piece. The last piece in this number is a very good Fugue in D minor by Mr. Frederic Archer. Part 32 is on the whole decidedly the best of the three. It contains a Minuet and Trio by Mr. Henry Smart, whose name is of itself sufficient recommendation of his music, a very excellent Fantasia (evidently for concert rather than church use) by Mr. W. S. Hoyte, an unpretending but pleasing Andante by Mr. John Wrigley, and a very pretty, if somewhat Mendelssohnian, Minuet and Trio by Mr. J. Baptiste Calkin.

Organ Music, by eminent composers. Selected from the Musical Standard.

This little book contains a selection of short pieces, mostly of two or three pages each, which raises in our minds the question, What constitutes an eminent composer? This question our readers can determine as well as ourselves; and for their guidance, we give them the list of those whose names appear in this publication. We find one piece each by Schubert, Handel, and Sterndale Bennett, as to whose eminence there can be no two opinions; the other contributors to the work are Charles W. Smith, Edward Griffiths, C. J. Frost, E. T. Driffield, Pierre J. Claessens, John Jackson, Charles H. Nottingham, Boyton Smith, Edward J. Crow, C. Evers, T. Mee Pattison, W. J. Westbrook, F. E. Gladstone, L. Kozeluch, and John Pachelbel. We have nothing to say against this list; but several of the names are certainly new to us as those of "eminent composers."

A Festival Setting of the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, in the key of D major. By Humphrey J. Stark, Mus. Bac., Oxon.

"O taste and see how gracious the Lord is," Anthem for four voices. By Humphrey J. Stark, Mus. Bac., Oxon.

Mr. Stark's Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis are written originally with orchestral accompaniment, but so few indications of the instrumentation are given in the organ arrangement that it is difficult to form any decided judgment as to the full effect of the work. This much, however, can safely be said, that the whole service is well written and full of spirit. The opening, after a short symphony, when the chorus enters in unison, with full harmony in the orchestra, is broad and effective. The modulations on the second and third pages are somewhat abrupt, and will require careful singing on the part of the chorus. A short quartett, "And His mercy is on them that fear Him," leads to a good point at the words "He hath shewed strength." The symphony introducing the "Glory" seems to have been suggested by a passage in the finale of Mendelssohn's first Organ Sonata; but the chorus itself is very good, especially the fugued "As it was in the beginning." The "Nunc Dimittis" is very short, almost disproportionally so; but this will probably be rather a recommendation than otherwise, as regards its performance. It is very good, but requires no detailed notice. The "Glory" is an abridgment of that in the Magnificat.

The Anthem "O taste and see," though not likely to make us forget Sir John Goss's charming setting of the same words, is very pleasing and melodious. Apart from all comparisons, we like it much, and can heartily recommend it. Excepting the very clever enharmonic modulations on the sixth and seventh pages, it will be found by no means difficult to sing.

Augener and Co.

Six celebrated Toccatas, for the Pianoforte; Composed by Muzio Clementi, Francesco Pollini, George Onslow, Carl Czerny, Carl Mayer, and Robert Schumann. Revised and the fingering supplemented by E. Pauer.

Herr Pauer has done good service by bringing these Toccatas to the notice of teachers who desire that their pupils shall cultivate both a good touch and a classical taste. No. 1, by Clementi, will be found extremely useful for the practice of double notes, passages in thirds and sixths for the right hand abounding throughout. As a piece of music it may be said to be somewhat dry, but as a study it is everything that can be desired. Little is known of Pollini; but so great an authority as Liszt has declared that in some of his pianoforte works he has foreshadowed the effects of Thalberg; and we have ourselves seen a composition of his written in three lines, a principle we know to have been adopted by his more popular successor. The Toccata before us is melodious in the extreme, and so carefully written as to give the impression of its having been designed for the first movement of a Sonata. It would be well for students to make themselves acquainted with some of the works of this neglected composer. Onslow's Toccata may also be recommended as a good study for passage-playing in both hands; and Czerny's has all the effect of a well-considered exercise for double notes. There is no particular reason why Carl Mayer's graceful piece should be termed a "Toccata;" but as he has called it so, we are bound to accept his title. Like all the works of this composer, it is extremely melodious, and will be certain to please a mixed audience; but, considered merely as a study, it may be practised with advantage, especially for rapidly-reiterated notes. We have copied the general title-page of these Toccatas, on which a sixth one, by Schumann, is mentioned, but this has not reached us, and may perhaps not yet be published.

Stepping Stones to the Staff Notation. By Francis T. Brooks.

We fail to see any special reason why a new Treatise on the Staff notation should be published, a fact which we think even Mr. Brooks would admit were he to glance at the number of such works which accumulate upon our reviewing shelves during a twelvemonth. We are inclined, too, to doubt whether in the multiplication of "Methods" there is not a danger of students becoming mystified as to the relative merits of the "absolute" and "relative" merits of notations, because in many of these, instead of boldly teaching the one or the other as the truth, we see a tendency to use as much as is convenient of both. In the book before us, for instance, we find the syllables Soh and

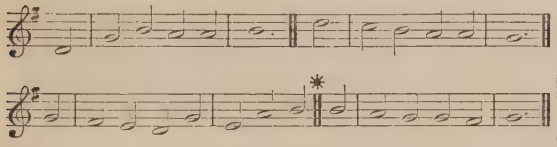
Te representing the fifth and seventh of the scale, without a word of their having been borrowed from the modern disciples of the "relative" school. Again, on page 7 dohs are to be found in all parts of the staff, and the scales always appear without sharps and flats; but afterwards the signatures are given as in the established notation. We cannot but consider this as a confusion of systems, for certainly a pupil should be taught at first either to consider that Doh always appears in the same place, as in the Sol-fa notation; that it varies, although the sharps or flats necessary in the scale are supplied mentally, as in other methods we have seen; or that it always expresses the note C, and that every scale must be separately studied, as in the system so long taught by Mr. Hullah and his followers. To dispose at once of any objections we have to Mr. Brooks's little Manual, we may say that it is in our opinion much easier to remember that keys with sharps rise by fifths and with flats by fourths, than to recollect the sentence "Greedy drones are ever bees' foes," the first letter of each word giving us the key-note for the sharp keys, and to read it backwards for the flat keys. In the "Musical Dictionary" we can scarcely believe that the example given of an appoggiatura is what was intended by the author: it appears as a crotchet (which may be an error), but in any case it is much more like an acciaccatura than an appoggiatura. What, too, can be meant by the acciaccatura being "a semitone below the principal note?" Surely it is as often a whole tone above it? The explanations of Time, Accent, and other elementary points may be commended; but the selection of little pieces for beginners will be found the most important feature in the book; most of these, both in the words and music, are well considered, and will no doubt prove highly useful in class teaching.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

DOUBLE BARS IN HYMN TUNES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—I shall be greatly obliged if you will, in your next "Answers to Correspondents," give your valuable corroboration of what I believe to be the correct rendering of hymn tunes. Take, for instance, the following S.M.:—



I play at a church where they have always made a pause at every double bar—that is to say, at bar marked * they have always sung the previous B as long as the dotted notes at the other double bars. Now, I've been endeavouring, in this and other cases, to teach the choir to keep the strict time as written. I have, of course, many opponents, and your powerful opinion will greatly assist me in reforming what I think to be bad, as in many cases in C.M. and S.M. hymns the words do not admit of a pause between the third and fourth lines.

EXAMPLE:—

"Dear name the rock on which I build,
My shield and hiding-place;
My never-failing treasury filled
With boundless stores of grace."

I am, Sir, yours obediently,
Brighton. ORGANO.

[We quite agree with our correspondent that in the tune he has quoted no pause should be made at the end of the third line. We should, however, rest our opinion on musical reasons. If a pause is made, the regular four-bar rhythm of the music is disturbed.—ED. Musical Times.]

THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—The remarks in your current issue respecting my advertisement of the Steinway Pianofortes are founded on a misapprehension, arising, no doubt, from the fact that the writer had an imperfect copy of it before him. The advertisement in question was not only written, but was also signed by me; and as I have not the honour to be an American, it is obvious that, whatever may be its merit or demerit, it cannot appropriately be cited as an example of "American laudation of their own wares."

With respect to the momentous question as to whether Messrs. Moore and Burgess, and the other gentlemen who write the "new and lovely songs," should or should not send them "for review," I am not qualified to offer an opinion, but, as regards the Steinway Pianofortes, if your correspondent believes that he can add anything to the dicta of Professor Helmholtz, and the other scientific and musical authorities to whose opinions on the subject I referred in the same advertisement, I shall be very happy to afford him every facility for so doing by allowing him to examine the instruments.

I am, Sir, yours obediently,
W. M. T. MAXWELL, LL.B.

28, Baker St., Portman Sq., London, W.,
September, 1876.

[As Mr. Maxwell informs us that the advertisement we quoted was "not only written," but "signed," by him, he has effectually secured the copyright of it; and we hasten, therefore, to correct our assertion that it is a specimen of "American laudation of their own wares."—ED. Musical Times.]

THE COMMUNION OFFICE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—It appears desirable that composers should make a complete book for this office while they are about it, and provide a Benedictus and Agnus, and also add to the Sanctus "Hosanna in the highest," to be used where or when required. Some music for this office is tolerably complete, for instance, Missa de Angelis, Missa Regia, Missa in duplicibus, Cobb, Agutter, Woodward in A and E flat, Hoyte, Fleetwood Sheppard, Redhead, W. H. Monk, and others, but similar works by Dr. Stainer, Barnby, Armes, Dykes, Hayne, &c., are deficient in this particular, and therefore either cannot be adopted, or the Benedictus and Agnus from other books used instead. Allow me to suggest the advisability of the various composers publishing Benedictus, Agnus, and also Pater Noster if they please, to agree in style and manner with their existing works—it will prove a great boon to many choirmasters, and save them much difficulty and trouble.—I am, Sir, yours, &c.,

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

Ashford, Kent.—A Concert was given in the Corn Exchange on Friday evening, 29th September, which was attended by a large and fashionable company. Signor Randegger conducted, and accompanied the vocal music. The programme was sustained by Miss Robertson (soprano), Miss F. Robertson (mezzo-soprano), Mr. Sauvage (tenor), Mr. Gordon Gooch (bass), and Mons. Albert (violoncello). Miss Robertson was enthusiastically received in each of her selections, and Miss F. Robertson was also very successful, especially in the ever popular "Berceuse" of Gounod, to which M. Albert played the violoncello obbligato. Mr. James Sauvage made a most favourable impression by his rendering of several ballads, and Mr. Gordon Gooch gained immense applause. The concerted music was exquisitely rendered. A great feature of the evening was the violoncello playing of Mons. Albert.

Birmingham.—An interesting and highly-successful complimentary Concert was given in the Town Hall on the 9th ult. to Mr. T. G. Locker, the well-known local teacher of class-singing, by a number of his present and former pupils and friends, in acknowledgment of his excellent personal qualities, and of the valuable services rendered by him to the cause of musical art. The principal artists were Miss Emma Beasley, Mr. J. H. Pearson, Mr. W. Pountney, and Mr. J. L. Wadmore (vocalists), Mr. T. M. Abbott (violinist), Mr. J. Stimpson (organist), and Mr. Spivey (pianist). Mr. Locker conducted. The first part of the concert was devoted entirely to sacred music, and the second, which was secular, included Mr. Anderton's Cantata, The Wreck of the Hesperus. The choruses were well sung by a choir numbering 200 voices.

Blackpool.—An Organ Recital and Sacred Concert was given in the Congregational Church, Victoria-street, on the 25th September. W. H. Jude, Esq., conductor of the Liverpool Sacred Harmonic Society, presided at the organ, recently erected in the church, and the vocalists were Miss Holt, of Rawtenstall, winner of the first prize at the Manchester competition, 1875; Thomas Stanton, Esq., of Blackpool, and William Lister, Esq., of Blackpool. The programme was well selected and admirably performed.

Brisbane.—The Musical Society gave a Concert at the School of Arts on the 10th July. The work chosen was Haydn's Seasons, which was effectively rendered, the band and chorus being especially good. On the 10th of July Mrs. Wilkie gave her farewell Concert, assisted by members of the Musical Union. A selection from the Seasons formed the second part of the programme. Mrs. Wilkie received enthusiastic applause for her singing "There was a Squire," which was encored. The choruses were admirably sung throughout, and the band, though suffering from diminished numbers, was fairly efficient. The second part consisted entirely of the Merrie Men of Sherwood. Mr. R. T. Jefferies, as conductor, and Madame Mallalieu, as pianist, gave, as usual, perfect satisfaction.

Buxton.—We hear that Mr. Julian Adams is actively engaged in organising a Grand Instrumental Concert on the evening of Saturday the 4th inst., that being the termination of his three years' engagement with the Company. So satisfied, however, have the Directors been with the manner in which he has worked for and with them, that they have re-engaged him for another term of three years.

Dunham Massey, Cheshire.—The annual special Harvest Thanksgiving Services were held at St. Mark's Church on the 8th ult., the church being most tastefully adorned with corn, fruit, flowers, &c. There was full choral evening services. The Psalms for the day were chanted to Robinson in E flat, and Barnby in E flat; the Magnificat to Dr. Wainwright in A; the Nunc dimittis to Dr. Blow in E minor. The anthem selected for the occasion was by Sir G. J. Elvey, "O give thanks," which was rendered in a highly satisfactory manner. The hymns, "Praise, O praise our heavenly king" and "Lord of the harvest," were from "The Hymnal," and in addition to these were sung "Come, ye thankful people, come" and the ever popular German Harvest hymn, "Wir Pflugen den Felder" ("We plough the fields"). Tallis's responses with the Ely confession were given with good effect. The congregation joined in the chants and hymns, and the singing of the choir reflected much credit on the choirmaster and organist, Mr. C. T. Bowland, who ably presided at the organ.

Honley, near Huddersfield.—Sunday, the 1st ult., was observed at St. Mary's Church as a day of special thanksgiving for the harvest. The services were in every way appropriate to the occasion, and the choir was considerably augmented. The anthem was "I will give thanks," J. Barnby. The proper Psalm was the 107th, sung to two single chants (Woodward in B flat and Aylward in B flat). The Magnificat was sung to an arrangement of the first Parisian Tone, the Nunc dimittis to Hine in G. The hymn tunes were 223 and 224, in "Hymns Ancient and Modern." The accompaniments were played by Mr. J. C. Beaumont, his voluntaries being "Andante in D" (Smart), "Andante from Mozart's Ninth Symphony," and "War March" from Athalie, all of which were performed in a masterly manner. Collections were made on behalf of the Church Pastoral Aid Society.

Isleworth, Middlesex.—A Harvest Thanksgiving Service took place on the 1st ult. at Spring Grove Church, which was noteworthy for the excellence of the musical arrangements. Several members of the choirs of St. Paul's Cathedral and of the Chapel Royal, St. James's, contributed their services, and the following selection of music was performed: "He counteth all your sorrows" (Hymn of Praise), admirably sung by Mr. Kenningham, of St. Paul's Cathedral; "God is a Spirit" and "Come, O Israel," both from the Woman of Samaria; and Sir John Goss's anthem "Praise the Lord, O my soul." The Vicar of the Parish, the Rev. E. V. Hall, presided at the organ, and played, as a concluding Voluntary, the March from Sir F. Ouseley's Oratorio St. Polycarp.

Laurencekirk.—The Musical Association gave its first Concert for the season in the St. Laurence Hall, on Friday the 13th ult. The first part was sacred, and comprised selections from Handel, Haydn, Mendelssohn, and Sullivan, the chorus numbering about 50 voices, singing with fine effect Sullivan's "Say, watchman, what of the night?" Handel's "O Father" (Judas Maccabeus), and the "Hallelujah" Chorus from the Messiah. The second part was secular, and consisted of songs, part-songs, and choruses by well-known composers, all of which were well executed by the various performers, members of the Society. The accompaniments were played by Mr. W. H. Richmond, organist of the Cathedral, Dundee, who also contributed to the first part the Overture to Handel's Occasional Oratorio, and to the second, Archer's "Sans souci." Mr. Davidson, of Stonehaven, acted as conductor.

Leeds.—The Festival Committee have frequently drawn the attention of the Corporate Property Committee to the serious defects of the Town Hall orchestra, and the following are the plans now under consideration for a reconstruction of the orchestra before the Triennial Festival of 1877. The front to be lowered from seven feet to five feet, and the space on either side, from the hall side doors to the present orchestra, filled up with the new structure. The stages usually occupied by the violoncello and double bass players to be widened; and the ascent to the top of the orchestra to be several inches less steep on every stage or stair than now. The wide side steps leading from the hall to the orchestra to be done away with, and the entrance to the orchestra for the principal performers to be by a flight of steps leading from the Great George-street door directly on to the platform of the orchestra. These alterations will give extra accommodation to 150 performers; and the cost is estimated not to exceed £350.——The first of the series of Saturday Evening Concerts at the Town Hall, on the 14th ult., was well attended and highly successful. In addition to the Madrigal and Motett Society, Madame Liebhart, Mdlle. Bertha Brousil (violin), and Miss Emmeline Kennedy appeared, and elicited well-deserved applause, Mdlle. Brousil's performance, especially, producing a marked impression upon the audience. Dr. Spark conducted, and Mr. John Shaw was assistant accompanist at the pianoforte.

Lindley, Huddersfield.—A "Presentation Concert" was given by the Lindley Choral Society, on the 5th ult., in the Mechanics' Hall, which was crowded by the musical friends and admirers of Mr. Jonathan Crosland, of Lindley, a well-known local musician. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Crosland, Mrs. Barras (Huddersfield), Mrs. Rhodes, Miss Holroyd, Mr. Woodhouse, and Mr. Earnshaw (Lindley). Selections from Handel's Judas Maccabæus, and some compositions of Mr. Crosland, were well rendered. At the close of the "Hallelujah" chorus, Mr. Wm. Hirst came forward, and, in a few appropriate words, presented Mr. Crosland with an excellent portrait of himself, painted in oil by Mr. V. Hatch, bearing the following inscription: "Presented to Mr. Jonathan Crosland, by the members and friends of the Lindley Choral Society, in recognition of his valuable services as conductor for thirty years. October 5th, 1876." Mr. Crosland briefly returned thanks.

Liverpool.—A most successful opera and ballad concert was given at St. George's Hall on the 5th ult. by the principal members of the Imperial Italian Opera Company. Signor Vizzani, Signor Sterbini, Madame Laville Ferminet, Mdlle. Emma Howson, and Madame Demeric-Lablache were the vocalists, and Madame Grey gave a performance on the harp. The pianists were Mr. W. H. Jude and Mr. Nelson.——At the second subscription Concert of the Philharmonic Society on the 24th ult., Gade's Crusaders was the principal item in the programme. The soloists were Madame Trebelli (who sang the part at the Birmingham Festival), Mr. W. H. Cummings, and Mr. J. R. Alsop. The choruses were well rendered, and the band, under the direction of Sir Julius Benedict, gave full effect to the instrumentation. The success of the Cantata was undoubted. The second part of the Concert included Schumann's Symphony in B flat, Weber's "Ruler of the spirits" Overture, and several solos by the above-named principals.

Loughborough.—Mr. George Adcock's Concert took place at the Town Hall on the 26th September. The principals were Miss Agnes Larkcom, R.A.M., Madame Varley Liebe (solo violin), Mr. Nelson Varley, and Mr. J. H. Twinn (solo harp). The concert was in every respect highly successful.

Plymouth.—On Wednesday, the 25th ult., the Vocal Association commenced its tenth season with a "Handel Night," the programme being entirely devoted to selections from the works of the great master. The first part consisted of solos and choruses from Saul, Theodora, Belshazzar, Deborah, Jephtha, &c., commencing with the overture to Esther, and concluding with the Coronation Anthem. The second part was secular, and comprised selections from Alexander's Feast, L'Allegro, Ode on St. Cecilia's Day, &c. Miss Ellen Horne in "Angels ever bright" and "Oh had I Jubal's lyre," Miss Butterworth in "Cangio d'aspetto" (Admeto) and "Lascia chio pianga" (Rinaldo), Mr. Henry Guy in "Deeper and deeper still" and "Waft her, angels," and Mr. J. L. Wadmore in "Tears such as tender fathers shed" and "Nasce il bosco," gave great satisfaction. The choruses were well rendered, the Coronation Anthem eliciting much applause, and the orchestra was thoroughly efficient. Mr. F. N. Löhr conducted, Mr. J. Pardew was leader, and Mr. A. Faull, organist.

Salisbury.—Mr. T. Herbert Spinney, F.C.O., gave a Pianoforte Recital at Hamilton Hall, on the 9th ult., when he was ably assisted by Miss Jessie Royd, vocalist, Mr. Charles Fletcher, solo violinist, and Mr. John T. Wells, solo flautist. The programme was well selected and admirably rendered; Bishop's "Lo here the gentle lark" (flute obbligato, Mr. Wells) being encored.

Sheffield.—The first of Mr. Peck's Saturday Concerts took place in the smaller Banqueting Room at the Cutlers' Hall on the 7th ult. Madame Thaddeus Wells was the vocalist, and Mr. Henry Nicholson the solo flautist, both contributing very materially to the success of the concert. An important item in the programme was Beethoven's Sonata (Op. 12) for violin and pianoforte, which was performed by Mr. Peck and Mr. J. W. Phillips. Two overtures—"La Dame Blanche" (Boieldieu) and "Le Pré aux Clercs" (Herold)—were effectively played by the orchestra. An Evening Concert, under the same management, was also given at the Cutlers' Hall. Miss Barton was the vocalist. Mr. Whitehead contributed a violoncello solo, and Mr. Phillips joined with Mr. Peck in one of Beethoven's Sonatas. Some good glee-singing was also given.——On Monday, the 16th ult., Miss Clara M. Linley gave a Concert at the Albert Hall. The pianoforte playing of Miss Linley was, doubtless, the chief item of interest, her most important pieces being Sterndale Bennett's "Maid of Orleans" Sonata, and Liszt's "Rhapsodie Hongroise," both of which were encored. Mr. John Peck (violin) rendered valuable assistance, especially in the duet with Miss Linley, "Guillaume Tell," by De Beriot and Osborne, the finale of which was redemanded, and Mr. J. Wainwright was highly successful in his performance on the English concertina. Madame Thaddeus Wells and Mr. Laxton were the vocalists. The band of the 15th regiment, under Mr. Murdoh, played several selections with much effect.

Stafford.—Mr. E. W. Taylor, organist and choirmaster of St. Thomas's Church, gave a most successful Concert in the Shire Hall, on Monday evening, the 2nd ult., when the following eminent artists were engaged: Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Jessie Jones, Madame Patey, Mr. Hollins and Mr. Patey, vocalists, and Herr Theodor Frantzen, solo pianist. An excellent programme was provided, and rendered in a most satisfactory manner.

Southampton.—Mr. J. Ridgway has given two Pianoforte Recitals during the past month at Hartley Hall, at which he played selections from the works of Bach, Beethoven, Mozart, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Dussek, Chopin, Liszt, Sterndale Bennett, &c. The vocalists have been Miss Amy Aylward and Miss Dones, and Miss Ridgway acted as accompanist.

Southend.—A Concert was given at the Public Hall, on the 9th ult., by Miss Goodman, assisted by Miss Annie Butterworth, Mr. Stedman, Mr. Thurley Beale, and Mr. Osborne Williams. Miss Goodman's singing of "O mio Fernando" shewed her to be possessed of capabilities which, united to an excellent voice, should, with study, enable her to take a good position. Miss Annie Butterworth gave an artistic rendering of Smart's "Lady of the Lea." Mr. Stedman and Mr. Thurley Beale sang with their accustomed success, and Mr. Osborne Williams played two pianoforte solos much to the satisfaction of the numerous audience.

Wallingford.—The organ lately erected in St. Leonard's Church was successfully opened on the 26th Sept., on which day the Harvest Festival was also observed. The new instrument, built by Messrs. Ginns Brothers, of Merton, Surrey, has been pronounced highly satisfactory by the most competent judges, and its quality was effectively displayed by Dr. Sloman and Mr. A. Eyre, R.A.M., who presided respectively at the morning and evening services.

Weybridge.—The Harvest Festival Service took place on Thursday evening, the 28th Sept., at St. James's Church, which was beautifully decorated with corn, flowers, ferns and fruit, &c. Evensong commenced at eight o'clock, and the following music was performed: Processional Hymn, "We plough the fields;" Ely Confession and Tallis's Responses, Proper Psalms to Chants by Sir G. Elvey, Magnificat and Nunc dimittis to Wesley in F; Anthem, "O give thanks" (Sir J. Goss); Hymn before Sermon, "Come, ye thankful people;" after Sermon, "The sower went forth sowing;" Recessional, "Hark! hark my soul!" The music was well sung by the surpliced choir, numbering over 40 voices, assisted by about 30 ladies. The Rev. W. Money intoned the service, and the Rector (the Rev. E. Rose) preached an eloquent sermon. After the service Mr. Brooke (the organist and choirmaster) played a selection from the works of Handel, Beethoven, and Bach. The congregation numbered 1,100, and the offertory, for the sufferers in Bulgaria, amounted to over £50.

Wokingham.—The Harvest Thanksgiving was held in S. Paul's Church on Sept. 28th. At the choral service in the evening the choir of S. Paul's was assisted by that of All Saints'. The anthem was "The Lord hath done great things," by H. Smart. The church was, as usual, decorated by the ladies of the parish.

George's School, Brampton, Huntingdon, and Organist and Choirmaster to the Chapel.——Mr. Walter J. Baddeley, to Christ Church, South Hackney.——Mr. Edward Blind, Organist and Choirmaster to the Parish Church and Holy Trinity Church, Cirencester.——Mr. Sydney G. R. THROAT IRRITATION.—The throat and wind-pipe are especially liable to inflammation, causing soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use glycerine in the form of jujubes. Glycerine, in these agreeable confections, being in proximity to the glan is at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, becomes actively healing. Sold only in 6d. and 1s. boxes (by post for 14 stamps), labelled James Epps & Co., Homœopathic Chemists, 48, Threadneedle-street, and 170, Piccadilly.

A COMMUNION SERVICE IN D. Price 3s. net. (Kyrie, Credo, Sursum Corda, Sanctus, Benedictus, Agnus Dei, Tantum Ergo, Gloria in Excelsis.) By HENRY G. REW.

"The first Kyrie is smooth and pleasing, and is cleverly harmonized in three different ways. . . The Creed contains some effective unison passages and a very charming little bit of treble solo to the words 'And was incarnate,' &c. In fact, the whole of the music to the Passion Sentences is expressive and full of feeling . . in which (Sanctus and Gloria), as well as in the Creed, the music is generally effective, and often very expressive. . . These three movements, however (Benedictus, Agnus Dei, and Tantum Ergo), contain some of the best music of the whole Service."—Musical Standard.

"Mr. Rew's work exhibits the skill of the musician who has studied his craft, and the spirit of one who writes in harmony with his subject."—Bath Chronicle.

Crown 8vo., cloth	3	0	Cheap Edition, limp cloth	1	4
„ roan	3	6	„ stiff cloth	1	8

"Dr. Allon has done so much to promote an intelligent use of sacred music in divine worship that we gladly call attention to his last and, as we think, most wise effort in the same direction. Having issued in the 'Congregational Psalmist' a valuable series of hymn tunes, chants, kyries, &c., he has now published in a little pocket volume a collection of anthems intended for the use of the congregation, and not simply for the choir. The pieces, as a rule, require, in singing, a degree of musical culture somewhat greater than that required by chorales and chants, but they are on the whole within the reach of persons possessing a practical acquaintance with the art of sight-singing."—Choir.

SONG FOR BASS OR CONTRALTO.
COMPOSED BY
S. C. COOKE.

"This song, which is adapted for a baritone voice, is a setting of Dr. W. C. Bennett's touching words. The change to minor (in verse 2) gives, with good effect, the touch of pathos the words require. . . . . The song is of just the right length to leave the listener unwearied—an art of song-writing too often neglected. . . . . We can recommend this composition as likely to take with most people."—Musical Times.
London: Weekes & Co., Hanover-street, Regent-street (W.)

POPULAR MARCHES,
AND OTHER MUSIC.

THE great popularity of "The Organist's March" has led to the publication of a Series of Marches for special occasions, and which are universally admitted to supply a want long felt by country Organists with small organs or harmoniums. The Series comprise the following:—

DR. FOWLE'S "ORGANIST'S MARCH." 1s. 6d.; post free, 9d. The great popularity of this March has provoked jealousy, and an attempt to write it down, which resulted in an apology and a withdrawal of untruthful expressions. (Dr. Fowle's Voluntaries, Vol. i., fifth edition, reduced from 5s. to 2s. 3d.)

DR. FOWLE'S "ADVENT MARCH," for the four Sundays in Advent. 1s. 6d.; post free, 9d. "A very effective march, introducing as a coda the Advent Hymn, which is very well set."—Public Opinion. (Dr. Fowle's Advent Anthem, "Rejoice in the Lord," 4d.)

DR. FOWLE'S "CHRISTMAS-DAY MARCH." 1s. 6d.; post free, 9d.—An Organist writes: "The thanks of thousands of organ and harmonium players are due to you for this composition. It is difficult with small organs or harmoniums to know what to play on the great festival, and you have supplied a want long felt. It is full and melodious, and the coda of sweet bells is so arranged as to prevent any secularity of style." (Dr. Fowle's Anthem, "Arise, shine," now in a twelfth edition, class copy, 2½d.; folio copy, 6½d. "Behold, I bring you good tidings," 1½d. "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel," 2½d.) Christmas Column in November Musical Times.

DR. FOWLE'S "CHOIR MARCH." A Companion to the "Organist's March." 1s. 6d.; post free, 9d.—"A brilliant but not difficult march, and well suited for the pianoforte as well as for the organ or harmonium."—Public Opinion. (Dr. Fowle's Anthems, Vol. i., fourth edition, reduced from 10s. 6d. to 3s. 6d.)

DR. FOWLE'S "HARMONIUM MARCH." 1s. 6d.; post free, 9d.; with the stops proper to be used. Harmonium players have found this march very acceptable; "it being refreshing," writes one, "to have something new and sterling, in the place of so much rubbish as one meets with." (Dr. Fowle's Voluntaries, Vol. ii., reduced from 3s. 6d. to 1s. 2d.)

DR. FOWLE'S "VILLAGE BRIDAL MARCH." 1s. 6d.; post free, 9d. This march was purposely composed for small organs or harmoniums, on which Mendelssohn's March is not effective, and as such has become popular. (Dr. Fowle's Wedding Anthem, price 2d.)

DR. FOWLE'S "FUNERAL MARCH." 1s. 6d.; post free, 9d.; with Pedal Obbligato.—"This composition reflects the highest credit upon the gentleman who has produced it."—Reading Mercury. "It would instrument well for a wind band, and goes well for the organ."—Musical World. (Dr. Fowle's Funeral Anthems, one at 6d. and the other at 3d.)

DR. FOWLE'S "EASTER-DAY MARCH." 1s. 6d.; post free, 9d. With an effective arrangement of the well-known Easter Hymn as a coda.—"Dr. Fowle has written a very effective Easter-day march."—The Rock. (Dr. Fowle's Easter Anthems are six in number, at 3d. and 2d. each.)

DR. FOWLE'S "THREE-FESTIVAL MARCH." 1s. 6d.; post free, 9d. For the feast of Ascension, Whitsuntide, and Trinity. Easy, full, and melodious, for organ or harmonium. (Dr. Fowle's Christmas Cantata, fifth edition, 7d., post free, 31 pages. A stock piece for provincial musical gatherings.)

DR. FOWLE'S "WELCOME HOME MARCH." 1s. 6d.; post free, 9d. For the welcoming home of any popular individual, winding up with "See the conquering hero comes." Suitable also for harvest festivals or concerts. Very cheerful with peal of bells. (Dr. Fowle's Anthems, Vol. ii., reduced from 10s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. Festival Anthems for Village Choirs, which are become standard compositions.)

DR. FOWLE'S "HARVEST MARCH," and one other, will complete the Series of 12 Marches, at the same price.

DR. LLOYD FOWLE (on whose behalf nearly 2,000 Persons have petitioned the Premier for a Civil Service Pension) may be consulted on all musical matters, such as the revision, printing, and publishing of manuscripts, selection of instruments, and all music for country choirs, which he has made his special study for twenty years. Address (for high testimonials) as below.

A COLLECTION OF ORGAN PIECES,
COMPOSED BY CHARLES JOSEPH FROST.
Price 1s. per Number, or, complete, in limp cloth, 21s.

No. 1	Prelude in F major Postlude, C major	No. 15	Postlude, D minor Prelude, E flat major
2-4	Fantasia, A flat major Postlude, G minor Prelude, A major	16-17	Offertoire, D major Trio, B flat major
5	Offertoire, G major	18-19	Fantasia, C minor Prelude, C major
6	March, B flat major	20	Andantino, F major
7	Allegro maestoso, E flat major Prelude, G major	21-22	Prelude, A minor Motivo, E major Prelude A major
8-13	Postlude, G minor Sonata, A	23-24	Prelude and Fugue, E minor
14	Impromptu, E flat major Prelude, E major

"There is at present a strong and healthy demand for music especially written for the 'king of instruments,' and Mr. Frost has on his part wisely responded to it in the above collection. We have had enough of arrangements and to spare; what we want is music throughout, and elaborated with a distinct view to the requirements and nuances of organ playing. The book before us contains twenty-four pieces of various forms, comprising preludes, postludes, offertoires, fantasias, a march, a sonata, and a fugue. In each of these Mr. Frost shows an intimate acquaintance with the instrument for which he writes, securing breadth and fulness of effect without overcrowding his chords, and having a due regard to the practicable in the left-hand and pedal staves. Mr. Frost's style throughout is thoroughly sound and solid; there are no choppy, quasi-pianoforte accompaniments to be found in the work. We cordially wish the collection the circulation it deserves."—Musical Standard.

"We have here a well-printed oblong folio volume (120 pages), containing a series of Organ Pieces, the whole of which are by an English composer, and, with the exception of a single piece, are now published for the first time. To those who are searching for original music, really written and not 'transcribed' or 'arranged' for the organ, this work will be a welcome novelty. Among the best specimens of Mr. Frost's writing may be mentioned an Allegretto in A major, page 20; it is smooth, graceful, and melodious from beginning to end, and is certainly one of the gems of the book. Two Preludes (pages 1 and 101) are worthy of all praise, and a very spirited Postlude in G minor (page 41) will form an effective out voluntary. Besides these, there is much clever music appealing to the sympathy of more highly-educated musicians, as, for instance, the long Sonata in A, and the concluding Fugue in E minor."—Literary Churchman.

A HAYDN MEMORIAL.

(From the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik.)

Among the impressions received in the days of our youth, who does not remember with pleasure—provided a sense of reverence for our great tone-poets to have been early instilled into the mind—the keen enjoyment derived from the first acquaintance with the life of a Haydn, a Mozart, or a Beethoven? In this respect we were then much indebted to the Holle edition of these three classics, which included a biographical sketch of each of the three masters by way of appendix to their respective compositions. However much the outward appearance of these publications, both in style of print and quality of paper, might have left to be desired, the contents were eagerly devoured by us, and pleased us all the more if amply interspersed with little anecdotes, minor incidences, etc. Although far from being models of biography, according to our modern notions, these sketches were, nevertheless, valuable to us at that time, inasmuch as they undertook, with pleasing eloquence, to direct our attention to these three "stars of the first magnitude in the musical heaven"—a phrase which, much worn as it now appears, was wont to fill our youthful minds with awe.

Years of riper development brought with them the exercise, on our part, of a clearer and more critical judgment. If, in the light of this, those first biographies began to look somewhat primitive and out of date, still less could we be satisfied with the so-called Artist-Biographies of a Heribert Rau which had been, injudiciously enough, recommended to us by a friend as likely to gratify our thirst for information on the subject. The literary fireworks with which this author delights to surround his heroes, Mozart and Beethoven, dazzled our eyes but for a short time, to be soon recognised as mere tricks of the romance writer. It was then, at last, we were reminded of better guides on our path—in search of Mozart we found Otto Jahn; in search of Beethoven, Marx. Under such direction, how soon was our enthusiasm kindled; how eager we grew to study their works; what new aspects opened up before our view! Then, for the first time, the truth became revealed to us, that by the side of universal and literary history there is also an art history, and that it requires at least as much to understand a Beethoven or a Mozart as it does to appreciate a Goethe or to fathom the character of a Wallenstein. Mozart and Beethoven having in these literary works found the only representations worthy of their genius, that of Haydn alone was still wanting in order to complete, in biographical literature also, the great trio which, in the enumeration of German Grand-masters of musical art, we instinctively name in one breath. It is therefore with particular gratification that we hail the appearance of a "Joseph Haydn," by C. F. Pohl, of Vienna (published by Sacco's Nachfolger, at Berlin), a work which, in reference to the two others mentioned above, would seem to be entitled to the claim, in Schiller's words—

"Ich sei, gewährt mir die Bitte,
In eurem Bunde der Dritte!"

In his new work C. F. Pohl has not only rendered a great service to the memory of Haydn; he has also commenced to fill up a gap so long keenly felt by all. And unless the succeeding volumes—whose appearance is promised at intervals not too far apart—should fall short of the certainly high-strained expectations which this first instalment has raised, he will have created a work which will do honour to the German name, and be one more lasting example of German thoroughness and patient yet enthusiastic research. To many an idle prattler in art matters, it is true, the name of Haydn may call to mind little more than the "good old Papa," with his bob-tail wig, whose music will at best provoke only a pitiful smile or doubtful shrug of the shoulders. To them, Pohl's task may appear a superfluous one, and it will possibly be a matter of surprise to them that anyone should have been found ready to bestow so much labour and zeal upon the representative of a period in art long since surmounted. Fortunately, however, there is another portion of the public who, if only out of mere gratitude, take the liveliest interest in anything connected with Haydn, and long for an exhaustive picture of his life. For was it not he who, as Herr Pohl aptly remarks, formed the connecting link between our great musical heroes of the last century; who took his first youthful steps into fame just at the time when the career of Sebastian Bach had come to a close; who experienced under his very eyes the first reforms of Gluck, his triumphs and decease, after glorious achievements? Again, was not the entire life of Mozart—with whom he had formed the closest friendship—enacted before him, passing away like a wondrous dream; and was it not still reserved for him to witness the glowing sunrise of a new day in Beethoven, whose precursor in many respects he had himself been? But even supposing all these associations of Haydn's with the musical way-makers of the past century to have never existed—if, indeed, such a man as Haydn had never been, living merely in the imagination of his portrayer—the work now before us would still justly claim our admiration, inasmuch as it affords an example of how to proceed in order to make the personality of a man become a reality to the reader, and of the minute care required in studying countless minor circumstances which may, in some manner, have influenced the life in question. To write a genuine artist-biography is, in truth, a most difficult task, provided the author does not place himself on a level with the compilers of many-volumed "art-novels," wherein the writers' imagination claims full elbow-room, and positive truth is pushed into a corner. Among such authors, however, who, possessing the necessary scientific knowledge of their subject, approach it with earnestness of purpose and in full consciousness of the responsibility of their undertaking, different ways have been adopted by which to reach the desired goal. Some aim chiefly at the realisation of a complete picture of the artist's outward life and experience; and in this respect all our admiration is due to the glittering, fresh-coloured picture of the life of C. M. von Weber, from the pen of his son. Others again lay more stress upon the inner life, following the artist into the mysterious working of his genius, while only the leading features of his outward career are touched upon; and in this form of biography Marx unquestionably manifests his mastery. There can be no doubt, however, that the best and most reliable method—because at the same time the most exhaustive and thoroughgoing—would be that which succeeded in combining the advantages of both modes of procedure; which united to the keen eye of the historian a true artistic feeling, not merely showing us the man in the vicissitudes of his life, nor explaining to us what he was only from his works, but doing the one without leaving the other undone; in short, giving a clear conception of the whole personality. This was the plan adopted by Otto Jahn, in his masterly work on Mozart, and C. F. Pohl proves himself, in his "Haydn," to be his worthy pupil and follower. Jahn himself, at whose instance Herr Pohl had undertaken the task, knew, no doubt, well that the latter would be peculiarly fitted to carry it out. He had already given ample proof of this in his valuable monography, entitled "Mozart and Haydn in London," and, moreover, the writer's residence in Vienna, his official position there of archivist, seemed to point to him as the future biographer of the great master. The model after which Pohl appears to be constructing his work is one highly to be approved of. If his aim is to represent the life and doings of Haydn in such a manner as to enlist for it the sympathies and attention of even a non-musical public; if he is convinced that his place is to deal not with Haydn alone, but with the whole period in which he lived, so far as it affected his artistic development, as well as with the local and personal circumstances in which he moved; he will have all those on his side whose good opinion is worth having, and who will anticipate the best results from the practical execution of so excellent a plan.

In carrying on the "chronicle" of events, forming a contiguous chain of all the more important moments in his hero's life, our author gains, at the proper time and place, a rallying point, from whence he may indulge a view upon much that is interesting in the general history, social and artistic, of Vienna, without straying too far from his primary object. For did not Haydn cling to Vienna like the child to the bosom of its mother? Was there not a constant friendly intercourse between the two, sufficient to justify the conclusion that anything which, in matters of art or public life, affected the ancient Kaiserstadt, would not be passed by unnoticed by the other? He who, in this part of the book, would be inclined to see a mere freak of the librarian, a passion for stirring up the dust of some questionable antiquities, would do wrong to the author, and at the same time overlook the gain thus accruing, not only to musical but to general culture, in the elucidation of facts concerning the social history of the time. It is scarcely necessary to remark, considering the well-known conscientiousness of Pohl and his habits of librarian, that he has made full use of the printed material relating to Haydn, omitting not a single literary source which might in any way further his object; a glance at the text and the numerous accompanying notes will at once dissipate any lingering doubts on this point. The collecting of an abundance of facts is, however, one thing, and the correct interpretation of their value and bearings is another. By the aid of a careful combination and blending of such facts, the biographer is enabled to set right wrongly formed conclusions, to admit a ray of light into much that hitherto had been doubtful or obscure. While admiring, therefore, the scrutiny exercised by Pohl in examining literary landmarks, and testing their validity as evidence, we must fairly be amazed at the zeal manifested by him in the discovery of fresh sources and in their due application. On pages 16 and 17 of the preface, all the ways and means are enumerated by which he has obtained this end, branching out into a general expression of the author's sense of obligation to all those persons, private and official, who had in one way or another rendered assistance to him. We venture to assert that, speaking en gros, no keeper of archives is to be found, in Austria or Germany, to whom minute questions concerning Haydn have not been addressed; no music-cultivating Austrian monastery can be named in whose libraries Pohl has not, directly or indirectly, instituted inquiries after original manuscripts of his hero, not unfrequently crowned by success; no collector of autographs, the fortunate possessor of Haydn treasures, has succeeded in hiding such relics, however jealously guarded, from the searching eye of the determined discoverer. In addition to this, the confidence with which Prince Nicholas Esterhazy, of Galantha, honoured the biographer was, unquestionably, a matter of the greatest advantage to him in the furtherance of his undertaking. Considering the significance of this truly noble family for Haydn and for art in general, it was a matter of paramount necessity to look upon the archives of Eisenstadt as the primary source of many authentic documents. Although these family records had been hitherto closed against all inspection, the descendant of the great Mœcenas of artists has now thrown open the doors to the Haydn biographer, in every way facilitating his inquiry. Herr Pohl has been amply rewarded in his search there by many an agreeable surprise, and resting upon such reliable, precious material, he wrote the present first volume. Favouring the positive element throughout, he yet manages to steer clear of all pedantic dryness. The author's poetic and sympathetic nature reveals itself in more than one instance, and in those cases where, in spite of minute investigation, positive proof for certain phases in Haydn's life had not been forthcoming, he allows some scope to imagination, without, however, losing himself in the region of the impossible or the improbable. Herr Pohl does well to attach no mean importance to the influence exercised upon the development of Haydn's mental disposition by the scenes of nature surrounding him. Foolish though it would be to maintain, with certainty, the action, in an equally strong degree, of the beauties of nature upon all men, yet there can be no doubt that, given a susceptible, open-eyed mind like Haydn's, a counteraction upon the individual would be extremely probable, thus justifying the conclusion that, surrounded by wild rugged scenery, the composer of the "Creation" would not have become that which a mild, graceful, smiling country had designated him to be by anticipation.

The portion of the work which has so far been published represents Book I. of the first volume, and is divided into seven chapters. In the first of these Herr Pohl makes us acquainted with Haydn's ancestors, commencing with his great-grandfather; an introduction which, having a tragic historical event for its background, at once arrests our attention. In the second and third we have vivid pictures of Joseph's "childhood," spent under the parental roof at the little market-town of Rohrau, and of the "School at Hainburg." The fourth, headed "At the Chapelhouse in Vienna," describes the organisation of that institution, by which opportunity we also learn something of that, in many respects, remarkable man, the Dome-Capellmeister Reutter, while in a subdivision we are told all about Haydn as a "singing-boy." His industry, his teachers, several important court festivities, and, finally, the lad's expulsion from the Chapelhouse, are here dealt with. The fifth takes up the "Chronicle," the purport of which, its appropriateness in relation to the particular subject in view, we have already briefly pointed out. With the sixth chapter, entitled "Lehr und Wanderjahre," we enter upon the toilsome years of our hero's first experience in the school of life, that important period during which we find him labouring steadily for the development of his talents, and anon taking his first youthful flight into regions where he should, ere long, become a discoverer, viz., the stringed Quartett and the Symphony. In the seventh and last chapter, we see the young musician at Eisenstadt, duly installed in the orchestra of Prince Esterhazy in the capacity of second, and later on, after the death of the aged Werner, of sole Capellmeister. This first book, therefore, if we commence our reckoning with the great-grandfather, embraces the period lying between the years 1683 and 1765. The supplements, seven in number, contain matter of varied interest. The most valuable appears to be the autobiographical sketch of Joseph Haydn, and next in interest, the enumeration of all the important events in matters artistic enacted in Vienna during the years 1740-1766. The list of theoretical works, etc., found among Haydn's books after his death, merits attention in so far as it tends to show that genius even like his never disdains to learn of others, in order to obtain a ready command over faculties which otherwise might remain slumbering within. Glancing over the "Decree of Appointment" as Capellmeister, we are startled by the multitude of offices which a hundred years ago the conductor of a princely orchestra was expected to perform, and our admiration for the man who held that post increases when we consider that, far from groaning under the load of so many official duties, he, on the contrary, manifested an almost incredible creative activity, maintaining throughout a delightful serenity of mind, which pervades his works in the most refreshing manner, and which—to such a degree—is to be met with in no other artist. For the musical addenda the biographer deserves our especial gratitude. The recitativo extracted from the Symphony composed in 1761 comes upon us as a surprise, seeing that in no other of his numerous symphonic compositions he has made use of the instrumental recitativo, and we had hitherto looked upon Beethoven, in his "Ninth," as the innovator in this direction. The Adagio in E flat, selected from a Symphony in E of 1763, shows that charming simplicity, which seems to remind us of a § Adagio in one of his minor Sonatas in F. In the Andante from the Symphony in B, the adagio of which is written for the stringed quartett only, the composer assigns to the violoncello the office of supporting the melody throughout in the lower octave, an effect, which was much admired at the time, of which, however (not to the detriment of his music), he has afterwards but rarely availed himself. In an appendix, the biographer gives us the genealogical tree of the Haydn family, the difficulties surmounted in the compilation of which were infinitely more real than apparent. According to an intimation emanating from the publishers, three more volumes will follow this first one at moderate intervals, and are to be adorned respectively with portraits of the composer and a fac-simile of his handwriting. The cost of the complete work is estimated at about M 30 (£1 10s.), and considering the variety of interesting matter it offers, as well as the liberal style in which it is being published, the price certainly appears a moderate one.

In the compilation of the numerous lists of themes of Haydn's compositions from his earlier period, Herr Pohl's scrupulous and untiring care becomes again apparent; and although some few mistakes in the examples quoted have crept in here and there, they are of no great importance, and may be easily rectified by any musician.

CHURCH MUSIC AND THE EVANGELICAL PARTY.

A portion of our contemporary the Rock, of the 3rd ult., has been brought under our notice as containing some common sense. We trust that readers of that "church" paper will not be scandalised at the questionable form of our compliment; but the fact is, we assume, as a rule, that no periodical of a strictly party character ever does talk common sense; and we should have uttered an exactly similar expression of surprise had any of this rare commodity been discovered in the pages of the Record, Church Review, Church Times, Church Herald, or others. We do not for one moment mean to suggest that no intelligent person should ever read these or other "organs" of a like character; only, we believe it to be a fact that a sensible man reads them with a process of modification akin to that gone through by a boy when eating a too highly-peppered pie—with one hand he eliminates the superabundant pepper from those portions which the other hand is placing in his mouth. The Editor of the Rock no doubt foresaw that he was entering on an unusual and dangerous course in introducing common-sense views into his pages; wisely, therefore, has he turned over the whole responsibility of the remarks on Church Music to the shadowy entities Messrs. F. and S. and H. and other "few friends," brought, as he says, "round our desk for the purpose of expressing their views respecting it;" and he adds, "without binding ourselves to endorse any observations that may be offered by them, we at once proceed to let them speak for themselves." We feel that we ought to pause here for a moment to allow our readers to contemplate this touching scene of the paternal-minded Editor sitting at his desk surrounded by his intellectual and theological children, who at the lifting of his hand immediately hold converse, in very good grammar and with quite proper punctuation, on Church Music. The first speaker says, "This subject does not meet with the attention it deserves at the present crisis—at all events from the Evangelical section of the Church;" with this remark Mr. S. agrees, expressing regret that the Evangelical section has shown such indifference to the "revival of musical taste," and adds the important confession (for which, of course, the Editor is not responsible), "an idea seems to have got amongst us that good music must be associated with rank Popery or something very near akin to it," stating, too, that he has heard the introduction of Jackson's Te Deum on Easter Day stigmatised as "an advance towards Romanism." A third speaker here steps in and warns the others not to trouble themselves much about music because—"the Church of England is doomed." From the conversation so far we gather that there is at the present time a crisis; but whether that crisis is in the existence of the Evangelical party, or of the Church itself, or of Church Music, is not quite clear. However, we certainly do think that if the noble ship our "English Church," through bad High Church steering, is going to the bottom with the Evangelical section carefully stowed away below the hatches, it would be a gross waste of time and money on the part of that "section" to endeavour in the short period of existence before it to cultivate the art of music. But the musical talkers round the editorial desk of the Rock do not allow their keen insight into the yet unrolled future to blunt their intelligence as to present necessities. Mr. S. presently continues . . . "it is worthy of note that few professional musicians of any standing are to be found filling the position of organist at Evangelical churches." We beg to interrupt Mr. S. at this point in order to say emphatically that we do not believe this to be the case; but we at once give his reason for the statement: "this arises from the fact that whenever an organist seeks to improve the music of his church he is met by the parrot-like cry of 'thin end of the wedge;' and growing disgusted, he throws up his appointment and goes over to the High Church party, who are only too well pleased to make use of his abilities." If it be true that church musicians are subjected to such absurd criticism, we can only say that they shew remarkably good sense in shaking off all association with such narrow-minded interference; but true or not true, such a statement from such a source is of peculiar value, and we hope any of our readers who at any time have personal experience on this matter will remember that we keep a corner for correspondents. At this stage of the conversation a Mr. A. drops in, who, instead of appreciating the straightforwardness and self-respect of organists in thus emancipating themselves from party-spirit misrepresentation, with utterly bad logic, though with malicious ingenuity, sees in their action nothing but self-conceit. He says, "if organists think so much of themselves it is just possible we may have to give up the 'box of whistles' altogether," and urges a return to the west gallery bass-viol, clarionet, and bassoon—a suggestion which, if we had the annihilation of Evangelical influence at heart, we should heartily recommend that party to adopt immediately. This leads our conversational instructors on to the topic of boy-choristers versus female singers, in which it is asserted that "a number of boys may be drilled into fairly good singing machines, but that is about all that can be reasonably expected;" also that "their performances answer very well when sound without sense is required." It may be difficult to account for the strange fascination which hovers around the singing of a talented boy, but as to its existence we think few will disagree. On four occasions we have heard Mendelssohn's "Hear my Prayer" rendered by boys, by a different boy on each occasion, with an effect not even approached by the finest female singers in this country. It is not our business to account for this fact, but simply to state it. When, therefore, our talkers of the Rock say that the High Church party only uses boys because of "processions and surplices," it is hardly making a fair statement. The High Church party might at least retort by saying they excluded females on account of "pretty faces and flirtations." Yet, in truth, both remarks are unjust. Boys as singers are a great source of strength, but in many ways an irreparable source of weakness also; for while on the one hand they are amenable to discipline, and not entitled to the minute consideration due to women, on the other hand they can never attain to the proficiency required for a true rendering of the principal parts of our grandest oratorios; and, moreover, almost as soon as their musical education is tolerably complete, their physical growth robs the Church of their musical services for many years, perhaps for ever. The remainder of the conversation under notice is directed to the want of musical clergy and also of a good hymn-book—subjects on which we need not enlarge here. Yet we cannot consign our page of the Rock to the waste-paper basket without making some few remarks on its general tone. It may already have been said by our readers, Where is the "common sense" you complimented your conversation-text upon? You have hacked and hewed it to pieces. Our answer is, its common sense lies in the true picture which it gives of the Evangelical view of church music. There is a tone of wailing and lament throughout the whole article; and for what? Not a lament because God's glorious gift to man of Music has lost its proper place in Evangelical churches; not a lament that David's spirit-inspired songs for harp and voice are turned into a dual drone very similar to that between two bank-clerks checking a ledger; not a regret that the dark tints of the Passion are not brought more home to devout hearers by the masters of sound-pictures; not a lament that when the angel song of gloria in excelsis breaks upon the ear of thankful yet humble worshippers, no harp or viol, no pipe or string, is heard giving each word new wings. No, nothing of this sort causes regret; the real source of the wail is that the Evangelicals have allowed the High Church to get hold of an influential weapon which they might have used for their own purposes if they had only been acute enough to seize it. Hear what our friends of the Rock say:—

> "It is important, and its importance is felt by a large portion of the community, so that our only choice lies between the adoption of a judicious course of action or falling altogether into the background.

"Perhaps if our Evangelical friends had a little less literary and theological lumber stowed away in their minds, and could replace it by a certain amount of musical knowledge, the services would be all the more enjoyable because better directed and more hearty.

"Good practice meetings will never be obtained without we have something better to sing than we generally get.

. . . "The Evangelical party has no such collection of tunes" (as "Hymns Ancient and Modern") "to offer its friends, and hence they are powerless to prevent the spread of Ritualistic teaching in connection with the most congregational portion of our worship."

Enough has been quoted to shew the exact frame of mind of the speakers. But after all, the real cause of the leaning towards the High Church party, which, according to the Rock, is to be found among certain musicians, is not that they are snubbed by the one party or petted by the other: it lies far deeper. The true musician, like all those whose lives have been devoted to art, has had his appreciation of and love for the beautiful systematically sharpened by a long course of study. On the one hand, he finds that the Evangelicals, as in the Rock they openly profess to do, only want him because their business-eye shews them that he can pull up their dwindling congregations; on the other, he is met by High Churchmen who make no secret of their sentiments. All that is beautiful of God's gifts—natural, artistic, or intellectual—ought to be devoted to God and is most acceptable to Him; flowers, frescoes, statuary, music, bring them all to us, say they; we will lay all upon the altar of the great Author of all that is "very good;" and they add, we would hang a lovely picture on every pillar, and place one over every shrine, if fools did not fancy we wished to make us canvas-gods. On your sweet music, they say to their Church composers, our souls seem to climb higher towards heaven; give us more of it, we will spare no expense in finding large resources for its proper rendering; no angel feet in vision old ever trod on so true and sure a ladder to the sky as the purest and most refined out-reachings of art when devoted to God's service.

We must be cautious, and make it distinctly known (as does the Editor of the Rock) that we do not bind ourselves to endorse all, or any, of such sentiments; but one thing is pretty certain, namely, that if a choice between two such opposite frames of mind should ever present itself to a genuine musician, instead of remaining as choirmaster or organist in a place which he is made to understand happens to be a church only because it is more convenient for a congregation than a back parlour, he will naturally cross the road, and devote the gifts which he feels God has given him to help those who make his art, rightly or wrongly, part and parcel of their worship. It may be said, "You actually avow that a musician may be thus led by mere sentiment." Yes, certainly; sentiment in art is everything; it makes just the difference between the wall-painting of a house decorator and a fresco by Giotto, between a figure in a cheap statuary's yard and the Venus of the Capitol, between a dry exercise in counterpoint and a glorious motet. Place an art-genius where such sentiment lives and is enthusiastically cultivated, and you have planted one of God's fairest plants in the very soil on which it will best bud forth and grow to perfection.

This is, however, all very one-sided; there exists unquestionably a large number of skilled musicians (notwithstanding the doubts of the Rock on the point) devoted to the Evangelical party on pure and high grounds; who see in their abnegation of the æsthetic in God's house a return to that simplicity and grandeur of worship which becomes believers in a spiritual God—a simplicity of which æsthetic ritual may tend to rob us, even if it do not go further and taint us with the old taint of heathendom overcome but slowly by so much precious martyrs' blood. To such men external forms of beauty mean mental disturbance in God's presence, and to such musicians an elaborated musical service is a source of temptation, as causing a desire to enjoy the music for its own sake, and so causing a failure in the effort to carry the mind forward to the real object of its abstraction. Of such conscientious and noble musicians, who have existed ever since the Reformation, and can number a John Sebastian Bach among them, the Rock has no knowledge: it has no kind word for musicians of this stamp who now exist, thank God, in considerable numbers; it even goes so far as to say that if only the "truly converted" were "allowed to enter the organ pew" (that is the musicians' gallery, or choir seats), "such an arrangement would very materially limit the area of selection"!!!

God forbid that any words of ours should convert musicians into party skirmishers, for nothing is so truly Catholic as art, and musicians, not less than other artists, will do well to claim brotherhood with the good and true in every corner of God's fair world. But we cannot abstain from saying, in conclusion, that if the column of the Rock now lying before us is intended as the first intimation that the Evangelical party hope to wrest the weapon of music from the hands of their rivals the High Church party, they have commenced the struggle in the most clumsy way possible.

THAT we often find what we are searching for in a place where we should least think of looking for it, has been strikingly proved at a banquet given by the late Lord Mayor at the Mansion House, only a few weeks before his retirement. At the previous civic entertainment, organised especially for the purpose of assembling the representatives of "literature and art," and where we should naturally expect that the claims of music would be acknowledged, the subject was never once alluded to; and this fact we commented upon at the time; but the final banquet, to the members of the dramatic profession and writers for the stage, was evidently supposed to be the most appropriate occasion for the toast of "music" to be proposed, and this was accordingly done, the honour being acknowledged by Signor Arditi, who, with a few other followers of the art, happened somehow to be amongst the actors and authors for whom the feast was provided. We can perfectly understand how it is that the Lord Mayor could not comprehend the possibility of music having any connection with "literature and art;" but it would be curious to discover in what manner he associates it with the drama. Does he carry in his memory the fact that when he visits the theatre an overture is performed whilst the people are shown into their seats, and that a set of quadrilles usually accompanies the conversation between the acts? that the "villain" is often ushered in with grim chords, the heroine with soft melodious strains, and that "hurries" are used to heighten the effect of exciting events on the stage? If so, we can readily imagine that when he entertains the acknowledged favourites of the histrionic profession, in his official capacity as Lord Mayor, he thinks it his duty to allow poor "music" to creep in at a side door; but those who feel that the art has a higher mission than to be retained as an attendant upon the drama, would, we are certain, prefer to wait until it is formally invited and duly honoured as one of the most favoured guests at the banquet.

Some curious statistics respecting the triennial Festivals at Birmingham are revealed in a Magazine called the "Birmingham Examiner," two numbers of which have been forwarded to us. It is, perhaps, scarcely fair to charge the promoters of these meetings with doing but little for the advance of music in the early days of the Festivals, because the diffusion of the art amongst the people was hardly so much their object as the accumulation of funds for the hospital; but when we are assured by the writer of the article alluded to—entitled "Birmingham and Musical Art"—that from 1768 to 1829 the name of Sebastian Bach does not occur once in the programmes; that the recognition of his sublime choral works was solely confined to the year 1837, when four numbers from the Passion Music (St. Matthew) were given—that from 1834 to 1876 Symphonies by three composers only have been performed, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and Mozart (and very few even of these); that only a small number of the best Pianoforte Concertos have been played; and that not one note of Schubert or Schumann has ever been heard, it will be evident that the Festivals have not moved with the times sufficiently to place them on an artistic level with those which have been rapidly growing up around them. Sincerely we commend these facts to the notice of those who possess both the power and the will to institute a thorough reform in the selection of works to be performed at future Meetings. In three years' deliberation much may be done; and if in 1879 the programmes of the Festivals should be accepted as representing the increased musical culture of the day, the thanks of the many well-wishers of these world-renowned gatherings will be freely accorded to those who have so zealously laboured in the cause.

It always materially detracts from the force of a satirical article when it becomes evident that its author is not in the slightest degree acquainted with the subject he is satirising. The ignorance of literary men on music is proverbial; but jokes on the art—bad as they generally are—in the comic periodicals may be forgiven, as the King, in olden times, used to forgive his Jester, because a good laugh was all that was desired. We cannot, however, be equally lenient when we read the following in the pages of a weekly contemporary, the musical criticisms of which are invariably well written and to the purpose. Speaking of the Conductor of an orchestra, and pleading as an excuse his want of knowledge on the matter—a valid reason, we should imagine, for not writing about it—the author says that the office is "a ridiculous sinecure," and continues thus: "Intent upon their performances, and having their eyes steadily fixed upon their scores, where the words forte, piano, moderato, and other technical phrases are duly imprinted, to guide them in the path of harmony, even though their own ears were at fault—which is inconceivable in the case of professional artists—the musicians are unable to bestow a glance upon the gentleman who, with his back turned upon them, keeps flourishing his stick wildly over their heads." And this nonsense is wound up by the emphatic declaration that "nobody ever yet saw, or ever will see, fiddler, piper, or drummer looking at the gentleman who pretends to conduct the orchestra. The whole affair is a farce." The article which contains this valuable opinion is signed "Rambler," and its writer boldly prefaces his remarks by saying, "Though passionately fond of music, it is my misfortune not to know a note of it." We can more readily believe the truth of the second than of the first assertion.

The recent death of Tamburini, the once celebrated baritone, at Nice, in his 77th year, revives our recollection of the many triumphs he achieved at Her Majesty's Theatre, in company with Grisi, Rubini, and Lablache, in what may be termed the "palmy days" of Italian Opera. Many frequenters of the aristocratic musical lounge in the Haymarket may remember how the engagement of Signor Coletti, in place of Tamburini, caused a positive riot in the house, and how the peremptory demands of the privileged few at length compelled the manager to reinstate the popular vocalist in the position he had so long and so honourably occupied. We have no desire to return to the times when the works of Rossini, Donizetti, and Bellini almost entirely represented operatic music in this country, and the vocalists we have mentioned excluded all others from the stage. It is true that we still worship singers, but the appreciation of high-class operas is gradually strengthening with a large section of the public; and, with a vivid remembrance of the excellent vocal qualities of Tamburini, we can still recall the agony of hearing the duet, "Suoni la tromba," in which, spurred on by the stentorian voice of Lablache, he assailed our ears with a physical force which, however intolerable to listen to, was no doubt necessitated by what a daily contemporary, in a leader on the subject, is pleased to term "the sonorous character of the instrumentation."

HENRY PHILLIPS

Was born at Bristol on the 13th of August 1801; his father, Richard Phillips, had studied for the profession of the law, and although called to the bar, speedily gave up that vocation to become an actor, marrying Miss Barnett, an actress, and pupil of Hook. Henry Phillips first appeared as a singer at Harrogate when only eight years of age, and shortly afterwards going to London obtained an engagement to sing soprano parts at Drury Lane Theatre. On the change of his voice he became a pupil of Broadhurst, and commenced his career as a Bass at Covent Garden Theatre, in Bishop's "Law of Java," singing in the trio "Mynheer Vandunck;" but his voice was weak, and neither singer nor composition produced any effect. He consequently retired to the provinces, but returning to London in 1823 was engaged by Kemble to sing in Arne's "Artaxerxes," and was only partially successful, the newspapers duly recording the "Total failure of Mr. Phillips at Covent Garden last night." In the following year he was fortunately engaged for the first performance in this country of "Der Freischütz," and rapidly rose in the estimation of the public. On the rebuilding, in 1835, of the English Opera House, the Lyceum, which had been burnt, he was engaged for Loder's "Nourjahad" and Barnett's "Mountain Sylph." In the latter Opera the great success was the ballad sung by him, "Farewell to the mountain," originally written, it is said, to Campbell's words, "My heart's in the Highlands." Mr. Phillips was now considered indispensable to English Opera, and engaged for "Gustavus," "Amilie," "The Siege of Rochelle," "The Gipsy's Warning," "The Maid of Artois," and other operas. He also became a favourite oratorio singer, for which his distinct enunciation and declamatory powers peculiarly fitted him. Dr. Kitchener says, "he literally made himself a singing voice in very nature's spite; the excellent effect he produces by giving proper accent and emphasis to the words is such that, with as little power as any singer of the day, he sings many songs most effectively." Mr. Phillips composed many ballads, of which the best received were "The best of all good company" and "Shalle I wastynge in despaire." He retired from public life in 1863, devoting his remaining years to teaching. He died on the 8th ult. at Dalston, and was buried at Woking Cemetery on the 15th.

A "PURCELL REVIVAL."

Significant evidence that the "Purcell Society" has been formed at the right time is to be found in the action taken at Liverpool by the "Sacred Harmonic Society." The newly-formed Association numbers some 50 or 60 ladies and gentlemen, who, under enthusiastic leadership, have joined with heart and voice to practise and perform the sacred works of Henry Purcell. These have been collected and published by the late Vincent Novello, whose self-denying and artistic labours demand recognition. The bulk of the compositions collected by him are anthems, but there are others which do not come under that denomination. Some folk may ask, Why not leave this music to Cathedral choirs? The answer is humiliating. Cathedral bodies, as a rule, do not possess copies of Purcell's works—possibly their very existence is unknown to most of those who have the power to order their purchase; and, again, few Cathedral choirs have available regulations or, in the absence of such, sufficient esprit de corps to make arrangements for meeting to rehearse and study Purcell's compositions, and without rehearsal his music had better be left in quiet repose; for to a generation of singers who have been brought up on music that can only be called vapid, Purcell must at times seem to speak in an almost unknown tongue. All praise, then, to the Liverpool Society for setting a good example, by which they not only call attention to a "mine" of devotional music, but also by their care in preparation, produce a result which in like manner must prove equally beneficial. The programme presented by the Society at its first public performance on the 16th ult. included six anthems—"Rejoice in the Lord," "O God Thou art my God," "They that go down to the sea," "Be merciful," "Sing unto the Lord," "My beloved spake"—some of them extremely difficult, and all requiring finish and perfection of execution. Judging from the notices given in the local journals of the performance at the concert, it must have been all that could be desired, and it is evident that the works excited the warmest enthusiasm. One anthem, a long one, was repeated entire, in deference to the plaudits and demands of the audience. Space will only permit us to make two extracts from the Liverpool papers:—

> "Place Purcell side by side with the composers of his own time, and we at once get a true estimate of his greatness and originality. His irresistible genius can be felt and seen breaking through the narrow bounds of conventional usage, revelling in effects and progressions which still, after all that has been done since, strike us every time we hear them as being something fresh and uncommon. This is the highest test of excellence that can be applied, and the highest praise is due to those who, as members of the 'Purcell Society,' are making efforts to bring his works, many of them long buried in MSS., within the reach of the public generally. Purcell's name is generally associated with ecclesiastical music, the fact being but little known that he wrote the music to nearly fifty operas and dramas, now forgotten, save for a stray chorus or two."

> "The concert concluded with the exquisitely poetical 'My beloved spake,' embodying some of the most beautiful images drawn from nature in the Song of Solomon. What could be more thrilling than the half-mournful 'The rain is over and gone,' followed by the buoyant 'The flowers appear'? The composer must have had a dramatic musical faculty such as few have rivalled him in, though he never strayed from the delicate suggestiveness of music proper into the antic mimicry of lesser sacred lyrists."

The President, Mr. Rushton, the Secretary, Mr. Dawbarn, and the Conductor, Mr. Jude, may well feel proud of their success, and be encouraged to proceed in the labours they have voluntarily undertaken.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

On the 4th ult. two interesting novelties began and ended the programme. The first of these was the overture to Professor Macfarren's new Oratorio, "The Resurrection," written for the recent Birmingham Festival. While differing entirely in character from the overture to "St. John the Baptist," the prelude to Dr. Macfarren's later Oratorio is, perhaps, even more adapted to be heard apart from its context than its predecessor. That it is masterly in its treatment need not be said: but it is also most interesting in its themes. The overture to "Romeo and Juliet," by the Russian composer Peter Tschaikowsky, which concluded the concert, is a most elaborate composition, which requires repeated hearing and careful study in order to be appreciated. It is full of beauties, but at the same time contains much that is hard to be understood. The performance, under Mr. Manns, was remarkably fine. The Symphony of the afternoon was the ever-charming "Jupiter," and Madame Arabella Goddard gave a brilliant rendering of Mendelssohn's Concerto in G minor. Miss Anna Williams and Signor Bettini were the vocalists.

Handel's "Acis and Galatea," with Mozart's additional accompaniments, occupied the afternoon of the 11th ult. So well known a work needs no criticism; it will suffice to say that the excellent chorus-singing justified the expectations formed of the choir by their previous performance in the "Erl-King's Daughter," and that the solo parts were in the hands of Miss Catherine Penna, Mr. Shakespeare, Mr. Henry Guy, and Signor Foli, whose names will sufficiently guarantee the quality of their performance.

Miss Anna Mehlig's splendid pianoforte playing was the special feature of the concert on the 18th. She chose one of the most trying works in the whole repertoire of her instrument — Henselt's fine, but enormously difficult, Concerto in F minor—a piece beyond the reach of any but an artist of the very highest attainments. Miss Mehlig's performance was a thing to be remembered, both for its faultless accuracy and for the excellent appreciation she showed of the spirit of the music; a finer rendering has seldom, if ever, been heard. The only absolute novelty of this concert was Raff's overture, "Ein feste Burg." As will be inferred from its title, it is founded (like Mendelssohn's finale to his "Reformation" Symphony, Meyerbeer's prelude to the "Huguenots," Wagner's "Kaisermarsch," and other works) on Luther's well-known choral. Herr Raff has not been very happy in his treatment of his subjects. His overture is extremely clever, but the themes he has combined with the choral are not very interesting, and the composition is far too much spun out. Beethoven's Symphony in B flat (No. 4) and the overture to "Semiramide" completed the instrumental portion of the concert and the vocal music was given by Miss Sophie Löwe and Signor Foli.

Last Saturday, the programme included Mr. W. Best's clever and interesting overture, written for the Norwich Festival; Schubert's great Symphony in C major, which can be heard nowhere in such perfection as at the Crystal Palace; the overture to "Der Freischütz;" and Liszt's "Fantaisie Hongroise" for piano and orchestra, the solo part performed by Mrs. Beesley, a pupil of Dr. von Bülow, and a most admirable pianist.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Under the able direction of Mr. Joseph Barnby, the first concert of this Society for the present season was given on the 2nd ult., when "Israel in Egypt" was performed with a success which, considering the fact that many of the vocalists have only recently joined the Society, was highly creditable to all concerned. The finest and most exacting choruses were those which, on the whole, received the most perfect rendering; and although it seems strange to speak of "The Lord is a man of war" as a choral work, we cannot but award the most unqualified praise for the manner in which it was sung by the tenors and basses of the choir. The encore which followed the close of this piece was thoroughly deserved; but we cannot disguise from ourselves the fact that it was gained at the expense of perverting the composer's expressed intention. The solos were exceedingly well sung by Madame Sinico, Miss K. Poyntz, Miss Julia Elton, and Mr. Cummings, the last-named vocalist (who appeared in place of Mr. Sims Reeves, absent from indisposition) creating such an effect with the solo, "The enemy said," as to be compelled to yield to a demand for its repetition. Dr. Stainer presided at the organ throughout the Oratorio.

At the second Concert, on the 23rd ult., Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" were given, Mr. Sims Reeves singing throughout the latter work with all his accustomed refinement and vigour, and being received with overwhelming applause. The other vocalists were Madame Sinico, Miss A. Sinclair, Madame Sterling, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Signor Foli. The hall was extremely well attended, and the performance exceptionally good.

CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

It was a bold experiment to produce an English version of Beethoven's "Fidelio" at this establishment; but Mr. Carl Rosa evidently knew the power of the artists under his direction, and cast the work so judiciously that the success must have even exceeded his expectations. It is true that Mdlle. Torriani is scarcely capable of thoroughly realising the exacting character of Leonora; but she sang with a faultlessness of intonation and a dramatic energy which elicited the warmest applause throughout the Opera. Mr. Packard, too, must have surprised all who have heard him in former parts, for he not only triumphantly surmounted the difficulties of Florestan's Scena in the dungeon, but threw a depth of feeling into the following scenes with his wife which may be accepted as the surest proof of his ability to sustain eventually a high position on the operatic stage. Mr. Aynsley Cook was in every respect an excellent Rocco, and Miss Gaylord and Mr. Lyall were everything that could be desired in the characters of Marcellina and Jacquino. Mr. Ludwig hardly pleased us as Pizarro; his singing was generally good, but his acting wanted force, and some of the stirring situations of the Opera suffered in consequence. The small part of the Minister of State was efficiently filled by Mr. A. Stevens, his voice telling extremely well in the fine finale. The Prisoners' Chorus was sung with more dramatic feeling than we have been accustomed to hear on the Italian stage, and indeed the whole of the choral portions of the work showed that the utmost care had been bestowed upon the rehearsals. The "Leonora" Overture (No. 3) preceded the Opera, and considering the dimensions of the band, was admirably played, although we cannot but take exception to the undue preponderance of the brass, which in some places actually marred the intention of the composer. The vocalists and Mr. Carl Rosa were summoned before the curtain at the conclusion of the Opera, and the congratulations of the audience were both warm and unanimous. Considering that the "last week but one" of the season was advertised before the production of Mr. F. H. Cowen's new Opera, "Pauline" (founded upon Bulwer's play "The Lady of Lyons"), we must conclude either that its attractive powers were but little relied upon by the management, or that the music was not ready sooner. That the latter very sufficient reason was the true one we are convinced by a hearing of the work; for the evidence of haste is so apparent that we believe even the composer himself will admit that, if more time had been allowed him, he would have written a better Opera. We do not quite believe with Mr. Hersee, the author of the libretto, that "fervent admirers of the 'Lady of Lyons'" would be "unwilling to excuse the large introduction of fresh matter." It is true that we do not rank ourselves amongst the "fervent admirers" of Bulwer's play; but even if we did, we cannot see that the retention of a quantity of blank verse in the original drama is at all advisable when writing a libretto on the same story for an Opera. Nothing, indeed, could be more inappropriate for a musical setting than the well-known lines of the poetical gardener beginning "A palace lifting to eternal summer;" and we really pitied the vocalists who had to interest an audience by acting what may be termed the "Lady of Lyons," with songs. Mr. Cowen must not be surprised if, to a great extent, his music suffers from being united with a subject so well known in a dramatic shape. Had he been supplied with a story especially designed for lyrical treatment, he has amply proved to us, not only in many portions of this Opera, but in his Cantata produced at the Birmingham Festival, that he has both the talent and the skill to invest it with sufficient interest to win for it an enduring fame amongst the limited number of purely operatic works which represent the musical talent of England. We care but little for the overture or the first act of "Pauline;" but in the second act we have a pleasing little song, with a Spanish character, "Inez was beautiful," well sung by Mr. Santley, the instrumentation of which has many excellent points. There are some beautiful phrases, too, in the duet between Pauline and Claude, "O tell me once again, sweet love;" and Glavis's song, "Love has wings," pleased well enough to obtain an encore, although the melody has but little merit. The finale to this act, however, fully makes amends for previous shortcomings; for both voices and instruments are treated throughout in a manner which merits the warmest praise, the "Farewell Chorus," especially, being highly effective. The third acts opens with a well-written placid song for the Widow Melnotte, "From his mother's nest," which was so admirably sung by Miss Yorke as to be enthusiastically re-demanded. In the finale of this act we have also some good dramatic points, the impassioned scenes between Pauline and Claude affording good scope for musical colouring; and as the composer is in this place not fettered to Bulwer's poetry, his writing seems spontaneous and unforced. Before the last act we have a graceful and melodious orchestral introduction, in which a solo for the violin, beautifully played by Mr. Carrodus, was warmly applauded. One of the most charming songs occurs in this act, "Bright dreams—too swiftly vanished," an expressive and unpretentious little gem, so exquisitely sung by Miss Julia Gaylord as to rouse the audience to enthusiasm; but the conclusion of the Opera has but little to attract the musical ear, even the Finale seeming to be hurriedly put together, as if the composer were weary of his task. Should Mr. Cowen estimate his success by the applause with which his Opera was greeted throughout, he will indeed be proud of his position as an English composer, for the delight of the auditors knew no bounds. After every act he was called on and literally overwhelmed with applause. All the vocalists, too, the author of the libretto, and the conductor (Mr. Carl Rosa), came in for a share of the honours of the evening, and bouquets were thrown upon the stage in such profusion that the singers at last began to look upon them with utter indifference, and scarcely deigned to pick them up. Regarding the general execution of the Opera, there is much room for praise. Both as a vocalist and actress, Miss Julia Gaylord, in the part of Pauline, was excellent, and Mr. Santley as Claude Melnotte was thoroughly efficient, although he scarcely perhaps realised the ideal personage identified with Bulwer's play. Mrs. Aynsley Cook was a sufficiently dignified Madame Deschappelles, and Mr. Aynsley Cook was effective as her rich husband. Beauseant had an admirable representative in Mr. F. H. Celli, and Glavis was well played by Mr. J. W. Turner. A good word, too, must be said for Miss Yorke, who, as the Widow Melnotte, was everything that could be desired both by author and composer; and Mr. Arthur Howell, in the character of Gaspar, was at least energetic and defiant. The Opera was excellently placed upon the stage, and the little introduced ballet was extremely elegant and effective. The house was crowded in every part.

HERR HERMANN FRANKE'S CONCERTS.

Herr Hermann Franke, a young and talented violinist, who has only recently become known in this country, has just concluded a very interesting series of four chamber-concerts at the Langham Hall. We believe it is Herr Franke's intention to establish a permanent quartett party; and considering the comparatively few opportunities afforded for hearing the highest class of chamber-music, every fresh effort in this direction deserves support and encouragement. Herr Franke's party consists of himself (first violin) and Messrs. Van Praag (second violin), Holländer (viola), and Daubert (violoncello), with whom, for string music of the enigmatical verses so widely known, the broken phrases being skilfully and effectively varied; No. 8, "Ye banks and braes," an attractive melody, in E minor, has a running accompaniment of semiquavers throughout, which, if played with freedom, will help rather than obstruct the due expression of the words. No. 11, "How can my heart be glad?" beginning, like No. 4, in the minor and ending in the relative major, may be described as a song for voice and piano, for really the accompanist has as much to do as the vocalist: it is an excellent composition, and will be certain to prove effective in performance. No. 13, "My love is like a red, red rose," is an unpretending melody, simply but gracefully accompanied; and No. 14, "My heart's in the Highlands," is a really good song, and perhaps more than any other Scottish in character. It must not be imagined that in mentioning these numbers we have done more than merely select a few which are our especial favourites. All will please those who can appreciate genuine music; and we are firm in the faith that such persons are rapidly increasing.

Eva Tual. Irish Song. Poetry by Alfred Perceval Graves. Music by Charles Salaman.

Mr. Salaman here shows that he can be as successful in treating musically the thoroughly Irish verses of Mr. Graves as he has been in setting the Odes of Horace. Vocalists will be glad to find a song so truly national in feeling written by an artist who is above having recourse to the conventional traps for catching indiscriminate applause so common in the usual "Irish Songs" of the day. The melody is extremely simple, but the intervals give it a thoroughly Hibernian flavour—especially the characteristic jump from the sixth to the key-note at the conclusion—and the harmony is most appropriate throughout. We predict for "Eva Tual" an extensive popularity.

Album Leaves; for the Pianoforte. Composed by J. Baptiste Calkin.

These four Sketches for the Pianoforte are highly favourable specimens of the composer's refined and musician-like style. No. 1, although from the author's original works for the organ, bears no trace of being a transcription, and indeed will be found one of the most attractive of the set. No. 2 is perhaps somewhat more conventional, being merely a melodious "Song without words," accompanied by staccato quavers for the right hand, and a flowing crotchet bass for the left. It is, however, well written and effective. The theme of No. 3 is tuneful, but some stretches for both hands, which to us appear scarcely in consonance with so simple a piece, commence on the second page, and perhaps may deter many amateurs from proceeding further. No 4, "In Memoriam," has a pathetic subject, in perfect sympathy with the title of the Sketch, but a good player will be required to draw the theme away from the semiquaver accompaniment which is continued almost throughout. The changes of key are extremely felicitous, and in every respect the piece will well repay the amount of practice it demands.

Joseph Williams.

An Englishman's Christmas Song. By F. Marshall Ward.

Christmas songs are now in season, and our readers must not be surprised, therefore, if we select this composition for notice, notwithstanding the heap of music which is fast accumulating upon our shelves. There is a lack of originality in the melody; but the song is nicely harmonised, and so well adapted to the words as to ensure a round of applause from a good-humoured Christmas party.

Life of Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy. From the German of W. A. Lampadius. Edited and translated by William Leonhard Gage.

It appears singular that although a number of books illustrating more or less the career of Mendelssohn have been from time to time translated from the German for English readers, the biography written by Lampadius only a few years after the composer's death, and upon which so many of the less important works are based, should until now have been quite unknown in this country. The publication of Mendelssohn's letters, so ably translated by Lady Wallace, had the effect of creating an intense desire in England for every scrap of information respecting the life of one who throughout a correspondence intended exclusively for the perusal of his own family and his most intimate friends, manifested such wide sympathies, not only with the art of which he was so brilliant an ornament, but, as the translator of Lampadius's book affirms, with all that is "good, noble, and, in the strictest use of speech, Christlike." The fascination exercised by the composer over all with whom he came in contact may be partially pleaded in excuse for the numerous rhapsodical books which his German admirers, and even some amongst our own countrymen, seem never to tire of writing; but we cannot help thinking that could the subject of such adulation have had the least suspicion that the occurrences and thoughts of his everyday life would be minutely detailed in print after his decease, he would have sincerely prayed to be delivered from his friends. "I knew him so well and loved him so much," said one of his most earnest disciples to the writer of this notice, "that I cannot bear to hear of him what he would have recoiled from hearing of himself." May we not also suggest that, beautiful as are his works, the critics see in them much that never entered the composer's mind; for in his book Lampadius says, "and in the wave-like 'Melusina' overture does not the sea-nymph lift herself bodily, and offer herself in love to the brave knight?"—yet Mendelssohn, in a letter to his sister, Fanny Hensel, writes of this very overture, "as to the fabulous nonsense of the musical papers, about red coral and green sea monsters, and magic palaces and deep seas, this is stupid stuff, and fills me with amazement." Lampadius, although a musical amateur, was evidently thoroughly competent to appreciate the artistic genius of Mendelssohn; and being also an intimate friend, he could not but be impressed with the earnestness, purity, and nobility of his character. The many who read the biography of Mendelssohn now under notice can scarcely, therefore, expect that eulogy will be more tempered with judgment in this than in the works already known on the same theme in this country; but then it must be remembered, as we have already said, that Lampadius was one of the first to write upon the career of the composer, and he was naturally anxious, therefore, to set the pattern for those who might follow him. In speaking of his youthful days, in the first chapter of the book before us, we are told that even in his eighth year Mendelssohn played the pianoforte with remarkable facility, and that at the same early age "he disclosed that remarkable power of criticism, that lynx-eye, as Zelter termed it, which enabled him to detect six consecutive fifths in a piece of Sebastian Bach, which escaped the keen eye of Zelter himself." Goethe's friendship towards the young artist, and his often-expressed admiration of his exceptional gifts, are of course dwelt upon at much length; and we are glad to know that the author's earnestly-expressed desire "to be permitted to look into the correspondence of Goethe and Mendelssohn" has since been amply gratified by the publication of the book especially devoted to this phase of the composer's life, written by his son, Dr. Karl Mendelssohn Bartholdy, and translated into English by M. E. von Glehn. When in 1824 Moscheles replaced Ludwig Berger as Mendelssohn's instructor, it is affirmed that he could play anything that his master could, and that he "grasped the slightest hint with lightning-like rapidity." Moscheles himself says: "My E flat Major Concerto he played almost at first sight; and my 'Sonate mélancolique' he rendered very finely." Yet there can be no doubt that the ripe experience of his new tutor made his services of the highest value to the youthful prodigy, and we know how firm was the friendship of the two artists in after life. Our space will not admit of quotations to any great extent from this interesting biography—and indeed it may be said that most of the events therein related are now tolerably familiar to English readers—but we conscientiously recommend it to the notice of those who love to linger over the records of a life which, but for the dark shadows of a physical weakness too often present and impossible to be controlled, would have been one of perpetual sunshine. The book is increased in value by the addition of Sir Julius Benedict's sketch of the career of Mendelssohn, from a lecture delivered at Camberwell; some chapters from the late H. F. Chorley's "Modern German Music"; Rellstab's account of Mendelssohn's visit, when a boy, to Goethe; "Recollections" of the composer, by Bayard Taylor; the descriptive analysis of "Elijah," by J. S. Dwight; and a few notes referring to certain events related in the work, by C. L. Gruneisen. It would have been impossible to find a more competent or a more zealous translator of Lampadius's book than Mr. Gage. In his preface he tells us that in England there always has been a "passionate adoration" of Mendelssohn, and that his "fascinating presence, the stories of his remarkable culture, his unselfishness, his moral purity, his entirely religious and Christian character," have been hardly exaggerated in the pages of "Charles Auchester." Now here we beg leave to differ from Mr. Gage. That "wonderful romance," as he terms it, may be accepted as an abstract rhapsody upon art and artists; but Seraphael and Starwood Burney are purely ideal personages, and we much regret that there are still people who believe that they are "hardly exaggerated" representatives of Mendelssohn and Sterndale Bennett.

B. Williams.

A Morning Service in D. By Albert E. Bishop.

This Service, consisting of a Te Deum and Jubilate, is apparently the work of a beginner: we should almost conjecture that it is an "Opus 1." The harmony is occasionally rather crude, and in one or two places the accents of the words and music contradict one another. We nevertheless give the work a short notice, because it shows genuine musical feeling and excellent taste. Mr. Bishop has evidently correct ideas as to what Church music ought to be; and the present Service, in spite of several faults, shows so much promise that we advise its composer to study carefully. If he will do this, we have no doubt that he will succeed in time in writing something far superior to the present attempt.

The Resurrection. An Oratorio, by G. A. Macfarren. Vocal Score. Nos. 7, 11, 15, 17, 30, 34.

It is not our intention on the present occasion to enter into any criticism of the fragments of Professor Macfarren's Oratorio which have been forwarded to us. An account of the work was given in our report of the recent Birmingham Festival, for which, as our readers will remember, it was composed, and any detailed notice should be left till the whole score lies before us. An extended composition cannot be justly estimated by fragments, and the greater the unity of style the more the music will suffer by separation from its context. We will therefore only say that the six numbers now before us comprise the most important of the pieces for solo voices, viz.—the songs "Let us have grace," "For this our heart is faint," "Now is our salvation nearer than when we believed," and "His right hand shall hold us up;" the duet "In due season we shall reap;" and the trio "The peace of God." It need hardly be added that all of them are worthy of the attention of singers.

Sacred Songs for Children. Selected and arranged from Popular Hymnology, by Edward F. Rimbault.

This little collection, containing eighteen more or less well-known melodies, is not of a character requiring a lengthy criticism. It will suffice to say that the pieces selected are all of that tuneful and ear-catching character suitable for children, which they will not only easily learn, but like; while the accompaniments are so judiciously simple that the merest beginners, who are hardly through the instruction-book, can play them. They have the additional advantage of being carefully fingered. We can recommend the little volume as well adapted to its purpose.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

SMALL NOTES.

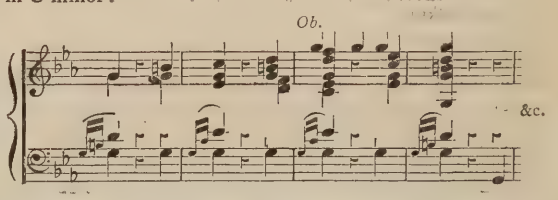
TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—It is a matter of regret that there exists a total want of unanimity on the subject of small notes, both in the way they are written and rendered. Some maintain that they ought to be played on the beat, others outside the beat. I adhere to the latter opinion.

In Germany, a work on small or ornamental notes, with the title of "Musikalische Ornamentik," was published some years ago. The book would be interesting if it were not in contradiction with the laws of rhythm and common sense. According to the author, all small notes ought to be played or sung on the beat; if given as his own opinion, we could let it pass naturally enough, but he pretends that in Beethoven's works they ought also to be understood in that fashion. I could oppose to him no better authority than the refutation of Beethoven himself; the first example is from the Rondo in C for piano:—

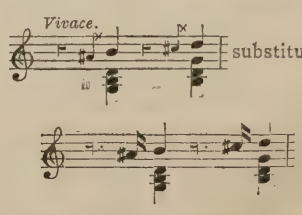
The small note at * is evidently an answer to the G marked in the first bar (1); the $\frac{F}{D}$ must therefore fall on the beat, and not the small note.

The next example is from the same author's Symphony in C minor:—

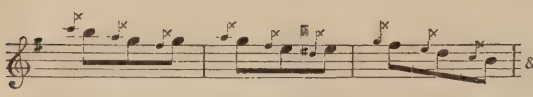


In the one from Spontini (bacchanale des Danaïdes), the fact that the small notes ought to be outside the beat is still more obvious:—

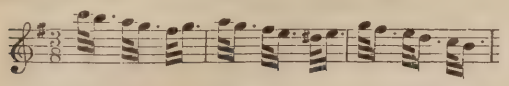
In many cases, composers could remove further doubt by expressing in large notes their meaning; for instance, instead of—



If Beethoven had meant small notes on the beat, he could have simply put the passage in the Finale of Sonata Op. 14 as follows:—



But he wanted the appoggiatura here on the beat, and therefore rendered the matter clear by noting:—



In another case, so frequently met in compositions of a former period—

The C ought to be struck on the beat; no sensible musician would think of playing—

The question of turns and shakes is in a still more unsatisfactory state; this subject I have treated at length elsewhere.—Yours truly, ALLEGRO.

DOUBLE BARS IN HYMN TUNES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—Your correspondent "Organo" has started a very useful and interesting subject, and his solution of his own difficulty is without doubt the proper one. I speak from a large experience as an organising choirmaster when I say that the way in which hymns should be sung is but little understood, and receives scarcely any attention—aye, and this too in choirs where much time is devoted to the rendering of the service properly. But to the immediate question which "Organo" propounds. Short measure tunes should be sung as they are printed in "Hymns Ancient and Modern;" that is, with a long note at the end of the first and second lines, the third and fourth being treated as one long line: the rhythm of the music is thus preserved, as well as (nine times out of ten) the sense of the words, which is much more important. Common Measures should have a pause only at the end of every two lines, as they are written; and Long Measures readily submit to the same treatment, though the exceptions are numerous. Peculiar Measures take care of themselves. How the plan which obtains so largely at the present time of stopping at the end of every line in Common, Long, and Short Measures came to be introduced, I am at a loss to imagine; I have always supposed it to be a kind of compromise with the old system of "giving out" every line, and, more recently, every two lines, of a verse before they were sung. If anyone wants an illustration of the absurdity of stopping at the end of every line, let him try to sing the following lines, which come to my mind haphazard, to any Common Measure tune he may happen to know. The result will be:—

"The Lord will come, and he will not;

The antithesis requires no explanation. This, though very flagrant, is only one of hundreds of instances which might be quoted. I know numbers of good choirs which fail in making a hymn tune "go" simply for want of attention to a proper rendering.

Another matter, while on the subject of hymn tunes, comes to my mind—the ignoring of the punctuation of the poetry. I will anticipate the objection that this would be an unfair tampering with the time, because, if properly managed, it need do nothing of the kind. Imagine the following, which, without attention to the marks of punctuation, would be (and I have heard it myself fifty times over):—

"My God I love Thee not because (pause)
I hope for Heaven thereby."

Commas in the poetry should generally (not all of them) be marked by making the word immediately before them slightly staccato, which gives the effect of a comma in reading. More palpable marks—such as semi-colons, notes of interrogation, &c.—may be met by shortening the time of the note following the mark, if the tune will allow it. I am quite aware that considerable discretion is required on the part of a choirmaster in carrying out these ideas so as not to distort the music; but I contend that the words at all times are paramount in importance, and ought not to be, as they so frequently are, made a mere peg on which to hang the music.—Yours truly,

THOS. SMITH,
Organising Choirmaster to the Church Music Society for the Archdeaconry of Sudbury.
Bury St. Edmunds.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—Will you kindly allow me to add my testimony to that of your correspondent "Organo," and I have no doubt many others, to the difficulty choirmasters and organists experience in deciding upon the best course to adopt where the double bars are placed as in the example given. As matters stand, choirs are taught to pause at every double bar, or otherwise, just according to the interpretation of each individual choirmaster, with this result—a large number of tunes are sung in a variety of ways. I am inclined to think, if our hymn-tune writers would adopt the plan laid down by Mr. Barnby in his admirable work The Hymnary, discard the use of intermediate double bars, which are really unnecessary, and insist that this plan should be strictly adhered to in any new publication, I feel sure we should have greater uniformity and more correct rendering of tunes, and they would thus be lending a helping hand to a reform which, from long experience, I am convinced is very much needed.—I am, Sir, yours obediently, J. C. B.

"TUNES NEW AND OLD."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly permit me to observe that the tune "Dettingen" is not a "distorted version" of "Wie schön leuchtet der Morgenstern," as stated in the review of "Tunes New and Old," which appears in the MUSICAL TIMES for this month. The melody is set to "Jauchzet dem Herren alle Land," in "Kirchengesäng aus dem Wittembergischen," &c., 1569; also to "Hilf mir, Gott, durch den Namen dein," in "Gesangbuchlein," &c., 1577.

As authorities agree that "Wie schön leuchtet der Morgenstern" was written about 1597, and that the earliest known copy of the music appeared in 1599, it is clear that the form adopted in "Tunes New and Old" is the original or, at least, the earlier one by many years.

I beg to enclose copies of the melody from the above-named works, as well as from G. von Tucher's "Schatz des evangelischen Kirchengesangs" and Dr. Conrad Kocher's "Zionsharfe." This earlier form of the melody has been adopted in "Tunes New and Old" because tunes are required for that particular metre, while the other metre has no place in the hymn-book for which I have endeavoured to provide suitable music.

In fairness to Dr. Bridge, I am bound to say that, though he is not responsible for the melodies, yet he was very anxious to have authentic copies in every case that appeared doubtful.—Yours faithfully, JOHN DOBSON.

Richmond, Nov. 9, 1876.

[We have much pleasure in inserting Mr. Dobson's letter, and do so the more willingly as we could hardly imagine that so excellent a musician as Dr. Bridge would be a party to a mutilation of a fine old tune. We readily admit ourselves in error; but we may be permitted to say in self-defence that the later version to which we referred ("Wie schön leuchtet der Morgenstern") appeared so far to have superseded that which Mr. Dobson has sent, that we have not found the latter in any collection to which we had access: the two books he quotes were not in our possession. We are very glad to do him justice by making the rectification.—The Writer of the Review.]

WHO ARE THE "GREAT MASTERS?"

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

DEAR SIR,—If you will kindly allow me, I would like to ask the opinion of some of your musical correspondents as to who are, and who are not, great masters. My own opinion, and I believe that of the majority of the musical public, is that no living musician, however great his attainments, can be considered a great master. This opinion seems to have been set on one side in the decision made by Mr. W. T. Best, in the contest which has just taken place for the post of organist at Bolton Town Hall. One of the conditions of the competition was that an organ composition by one of the great masters should be played by each candidate. Now, the candidate who has since been declared successful, instead of doing this, played Best's "Prelude and Fugue in A minor." Immediately on hearing this I concluded in my own mind that he was disqualified, as also did several friends to whom I mentioned the circumstance. Mr. Best, however, evidently did not think so, for in his official report he states that this particular candidate "fulfilled the conditions" more satisfactorily than the others, and accordingly gave his award in his favour. Had the other candidates known that Mr. Best (at any rate, whilst alive) could be considered a great master, they might also have played one of his compositions. My only object in writing is to elicit from competent critics the correctness, or otherwise, of the generally received opinion, that no living musician can by any possibility be reckoned amongst those whom we are proud to call great masters.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

Miss Robertson sang exceedingly well, and produced a marked effect; the other vocalists also elicited much applause.

BEDALE.—An amateur Concert was given in the Assembly Room on Monday evening, the 13th ult., under the directorship of Mr. James H. Rooks, of Richmond. Amongst the most successful pieces were the trios for violoncello, piano, and violin, played by Sir John Lawson, Mr. Rooks, and Herr Denk. Mr. King, Mrs. Swarbreck, Mrs. Hall, and Mr. Swarbreck were the vocalists. Herr Denk was well received in a solo of De Beriot's, and Mr. J. H. Rooks conducted.

The solo parts were sustained by Miss Catherine Penna, Mdme. Clara Suter, Mr. Gordon Cleather, and Mr. A. H. Allen, all of whom were well received. The band was strengthened by Mr. Zerbini and other professionals, and Mr. Diemer was the Conductor.

BLACKBURN.—A successful performance of Acis and Galatea was given by the Vocal Society on Thursday, the 23rd ult. This Society contemplates the production of Cowen's Rose Maiden, Fox's Jackdaw of Rheims, and the Dream during the present season.

BLACKLEY.—A Concert was given on Saturday, the 11th ult., by the members and friends of the Blackley Wesleyan Cricket Club, in the schoolroom of the Wesleyan Chapel. Mr. W. Christian and Mr. W. Hill (both of Manchester) were the solo vocalists. The glees, by the members of the club, were well rendered.

BOLTON.—Mr. De Jong's second Concert was given in the Albert Hall, on the 18th ult. The vocalist was Mr. Barton McGuckin, who was very successful in his songs, and M. Van Biene gained much applause for his two solos on the violoncello. The selections by the band, and the flute solos by Mr. De Jong also gave great satisfaction.——At Mr. C. Hallé's Second Subscription Concert on the 22nd ult. the instrumentalists were Mdme. Norman-Neruda, Herr Bernhardt, Herr Straus, M. Vieuxtemps, and Mr. Hallé. The programme was an interesting one, and was much appreciated by a large audience. Several glees and part-songs were contributed by the Manchester Vocal Society.

BOMBAY.—The fourth annual Choral Festival took place on Sept. 29, the Festival of S. Michael and All Angels, at S. Thomas' Cathedral. The local choirs that took part in the service numbered about 150. The Anthem chosen was Beethoven's "Hallelujah," which was well sung. Mr. J. Locke Gray presided at the organ with great ability, and kept the rather unreliable mass of voices well together. Service began by a processional (No. 390 Hymns Ancient and Modern), "Brightly gleams our banner;" the procession was a very long one, comprising, besides the choirs, the Revs. A. G. Lewis, D. J. Mackey, Fr. R. L. Page, A. Bapuji, S. Diago, C. F. H. Johnston, G. C. Reynell, the Ven. Archdeacon Leigh-Lye, and the Bishop, who was preceded by his Chaplain, the Rev. B. Dulley, bearing the pastoral staff. The hymn before the sermon was No. 423, "Stars of the morning," and the recessional, No. 242, "We love the place."

BRECHIN.—The session 1876-77 was opened on Wednesday evening, the 1st ult., with an amateur concert and dramatic entertainment under the conductorship of Dr. Selmar Kahlenberg, the newly-appointed teacher of modern languages and music in the High School of Brechin. Lord Dalhousie honoured the performances with his presence, and the hall of the Mechanics' Institution was crowded. The concert consisted chiefly of choruses, and the programme contained works of Mendelssohn, Bellini, Beethoven, Moscheles, &c.

BUXTON.—The closing concert of the fifth season of Mr. Julian Adams's connection with the Pavilion and Gardens was largely attended and highly successful. Mr. Adams, in a speech after the performance, announced that he had concluded a five years' engagement as Musical Director to the Buxton Improvement Company, and expressed a hope that the character of the concerts over which he presided would be strictly preserved.

CANTERBURY.—Dr. Longhurst's choir (instituted for the practice of Oratorios and other choral works) has now in rehearsal the Oratorio, David and Absalom (Longhurst), and Bach's Passion Music (St. Matthew). The first-named composition is to be performed on Shrove Tuesday next.

CHRISTCHURCH, NEW ZEALAND.—Mr. Luscombe Searell gave a vocal and instrumental Concert on the 4th Sept., in Oddfellows' Hall, when a number of his own compositions, including selections from his Operas Constance and Alnaschar, were successfully performed. The vocalists were the Misses Winter, Ness, S. Calvert, and Messrs. Sheath, Winter, and Anthony. Mr. Searell played several pianoforte solos, all of which were highly appreciated. Mr. C. Bonnington led the band, Mr. R. Searell presided at the organ, and Mr. Searell conducted.

CLIFTON.—One of Mr. J. C. Daniel's entertainments of the winter series was held on the 10th ult., at the Victoria Rooms, the artists being Mr. Charles Hallé, Madame Norman-Neruda, and Miss Ada Jackson. Mr. Charles Hallé opened the programme with a solo on the pianoforte, a Sonata in C, Op. 24, by Weber, which he gave with all the skill for which he is so famed. Madame Norman-Neruda followed with a solo on the violin by Corelli, which was warmly applauded. A couple of songs of Schumann's were well rendered by Miss Ada Jackson. The first part of the programme concluded with Mozart's Sonata in A (No. 1), for the piano and violin, played by Mr. Hallé and Madame Norman-Neruda.

DERBY.—A Concert was given in the Assembly Room, Siddal's Road, on the 14th ult., in aid of the Choir funds of St. Peter's Parish Church. The principal vocalists were Miss Clarkson, Mr. Berry, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Field Baldwin; solo violin, Mr. Hilton, solo violoncello, Mr. Spencer, and solo pianoforte, Mrs. Field Baldwin. The programme consisted of popular songs, many of which were encored, and a selection from Don Giovanni, well played by Mrs. Field Baldwin and Messrs. Hilton and Spencer.——The first Concert of the season of the Choral Union was given on the 21st ult., when Elijah was performed, with Madame Edith Wynne, Miss Bolingbroke, Mr. Bywater, and Mr. Hilton as soloists. Mr. W. S. Woodward led the band, Mr. Cox was organist, and Mr. W. Woodward conducted. The hall was crowded.

DEWSBURY.—A Concert was given in the Theatre Royal on Friday, the 17th ult., for the benefit of the Post Office Orphan Home. The artists engaged were the Yorkshire Concert Party, consisting of Madame Pauline Grayston, Miss Patti Hargreaves, Mr. Herbert Parratt, Mr. G. Hall Rushworth, and Mr. Wm. Clark, accompanist.

DONCASTER.—On Oct. 31st Dr. Spark gave a lecture on "The History and Progress of Pianoforte Music" in the Guildhall. The Lecturer traced briefly the rise of music from the earliest times, and then proceeded to speak of the various great composers for the pianoforte, giving many selections from their works by way of illustrating his remarks. The lecture was attentively listened to by a large audience.

DUBLIN.—A comic Operetta, entitled The Rose and Ring, the composition of Miss Elena Norton, a scholar of the Royal Irish Academy of Music, was performed in the Concert Room of the Academy on the 4th ult., and was well received by a large audience. The libretto, by Miss Mary Heyne (also a pupil at the Academy), is founded on Thackeray's novelette. Sir R. P. Stewart acted as conductor, and the pianoforte accompaniments were played by Miss O'Hea.

EDINBURGH.—At the annual general meeting of the University Musical Society, held in the Music Class-room, on the 16th ult., an eloquent address was delivered to the members by the President, Sir Herbert Oakeley, who occupied the chair. In speaking of the success which had attended the Society's Concerts, Sir Herbert especially dwelt upon the necessity of cultivating a taste for choral part-music for male voices, which, although prevalent throughout Germany, had, he said, in this country received scarcely sufficient attention. The Report of the Treasurer proved that after the accounts had been made up, a balance was left in favour of the Society larger than any carried forward on a previous occasion. In moving the adoption of the Report, Sir Alexander Grant warmly congratulated their President upon the honour recently conferred upon him by Her Majesty, and trusted that he would live many years to adorn the title he had received. At the desire of the audience, Sir Herbert performed on the organ the music used at the inauguration of the Prince Consort Memorial in July, which elicited the most enthusiastic applause.

GILFORD, IRELAND.—The annual special Harvest Thanksgiving Services were held at St. Paul's Church on the 27th Oct., the Church being most tastefully adorned with corn, fruit, flowers, &c. The anthem was "O Lord how manifold are Thy works," J. Barnby. The proper Psalms and Deus Miserеatur were sung to single chants. Mr. C. Wilson presided at the organ, and his voluntaries, "Cujus Animam" (Stabat Mater) and Handel's Chorus "From the censer" (Solomon), were performed in a highly creditable manner.

GREAT MILTON, OXON.—On the 2nd ult. the Harvest Festival was celebrated in the Parish Church. In the evening a Concert was given by the choir and friends in the schools, which attracted a large audience. Glees and songs were sung, Messrs. Bird and Smith (of Culham) playing pianoforte duets and accompanying the songs. On the Sunday following the Rev. Canon Furse, the Principal of Cuddesden College, preached at Evensong, which was preceded by a procession. The service was—Confession, Ely; Responses, Tallis; Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, Bunnett: anthem, Redhead's "Lord of the harvest." At the close of Evensong a solemn "Te Deum" (Dr. Dykes) was sung. The music was under the direction of the Rev. T. C. Elsdon. The proceeds of the concert and the offertories at the Church were devoted to the relief of the Christians suffering under the tyranny of the Turks.

GREENWICH.—A Shakspearian Recital was successfully given by Mr. Charles Fry at the Institution, on the 7th ult. The Recital was agreeably interspersed with Shakespearian songs, well rendered by Miss Jessie Royd, the accompaniments being played with much taste and expression by Miss Bessie Waugh. The audience was large and appreciative.

HEREFORD.—The fourteenth season of the Herefordshire Philharmonic Society was brought to a close by a morning concert at the Shire-hall on Tuesday, the 7th ult. The band and chorus numbered about eighty performers. Mr. Henry Leslie conducted as usual. The first part of the programme was devoted to a selection from Handel's Hercules, including the overture and minuet. The pièce de résistance was undoubtedly the Concerto, by Mozart, for flute and harp. Written in 1778 for the Duc de Guines and his daughter, the work—considering how heartily Mozart detested both these instruments—is worthy of its composer, and deserves to be more frequently heard. Mr. Walter Broadwood was the flautist, and Mr. John Thomas kindly undertook the harp part. The programme also included the overtures to Prometheus and Cenerentola. The vocalists were Miss Edwards, who sang Spohr's "The bird and the maiden" (flute obbligato, Mr. Walter Broadwood), and the Hon. Spencer Lyttelton. Two part-songs were given by the choir with much precision and delicacy.

HULL.—Mr. Frederic Harris's fourth popular Ballad Concert took place on Monday, the 13th ult. The vocalists consisted of the Yorkshire Concert Party, assisted by local artists. The quartetts, trios, and duets were all well rendered. Madame Pauline Grayston (soprano of the Yorkshire Concert Party) received an enthusiastic encore for her rendering of the old ballad "Black-ey'd Susan," and Miss Hargreaves, Miss Rigg, Messrs. Harris, Walton, and Rushworth were also well appreciated.

LEEDS.—At Mr. Ramsden's opening Concert at the Victoria Hall, on the 17th ult., Mendelssohn's St. Paul was performed. Mr. R. S. Burton conducted, and the solo parts were allotted to Mesdames Edith Wynne and Antoinette Sterling, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. Lewis Thomas. Mr. George Hirst presided at the organ, and played Mendelssohn's own accompaniments. The choruses were well sung by the Yorkshire Festival Choir, and the band was excellent.—During the months of October and November more concerts have been given than usual. Mr. Sims Reeves commenced on the 9th ult., and had a crowded audience at the Town Hall. The Philharmonic Society gave the Creation, with full band, chorus, and organ, under the direction of Mr. James Broughton. A series of Six Popular Saturday Concerts in the Town Hall, under the direction of the borough organist (Dr. Spark), proved a great success. Mr. Ramsden commenced his Subscription Concerts with a good performance of St. Paul; Mr. Morgan gave Concerts by two touring parties, including the Albani-Thalberg troupe (not well attended). Madame Arabella Goddard delighted the lovers of classical pianoforte music with a Recital on the 28th October, and Dr. Spark has continued his Tuesday afternoon Organ Concerts with more than his usual success—the programme on Tuesday the 21st being devoted to a selection from the works of the late M. Batiste.

MAIDENHEAD.—Two very interesting and successful Concerts (morning and evening) were given at the Town Hall on Tuesday, October 31st, by Mrs. Goldsmith. The principal artists who assisted her were—vocalists: Miss Adela Vernon, Miss Agnes Larkcom, Madame Poole, Mr. F. Elmore, Mr. Thorpe Briggs, &c.; instrumentalists: violin, Mdlle. Bertha Brousil: violoncello, Mons. Adolphe Brousil; pianoforte, Miss Ada Goldsmith (pupil of the R.A.M.). The matinée opened with Hummel's Trio, Op. 35, which was well rendered by Mdlle. B. Brousil, Mons. A. Brousil, and Mrs. Goldsmith, the last-named lady also giving Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata" with much feeling. Miss Agnes Larkcom, Miss Adela Vernon, and Madame Poole were enthusiastically received. Miss Ada Goldsmith ably presided as accompanist. Both programmes were well selected and highly appreciated. Brinsmead and Sons' "Gold Prize Medal Piano" was kindly lent for the occasion.

MANCHESTER.—The Ardwick Gentlemen's Glee Club, established for the purpose of cultivating a taste for vocal music, will hold its meetings every alternate Friday during the winter. A good selection of pieces was provided for the opening night, all of which were well rendered; and it is understood that several public concerts will be given during the season.—The first Concert of the Athenæum Musical Society's Tenth Season was given at the Athenæum on the 30th Oct. The choir, numbering seventy voices, was under the leadership of Dr. Henry Hiles, conductor to the Society, and the well-selected programme was admirably performed. The first part comprised Mendelssohn's Lauda Sion ("Praise Jehovah") and a selection from Gade's Crusaders, and the second consisted of part-songs, choruses, songs, &c. The Concert, in every respect, was a great success, the spacious hall being crowded.——A Concert was given by the members of the Liverpool Vocalists' Union in the Free Trade Hall on Saturday evening, the 18th ult. Glees and part-songs were performed with much expression, the parts being clearly taken up, and with perfect agreement and accuracy as to time and tune. Miss Sutton was the solo vocalist. Mr. Alfred Cellier played Guilmant's Fantasia, his own Arietta and Gavotte (encored), and a selection from Wagner's Lohengrin; and Mr. Horton Allison's pianoforte solos were Mendelssohn's "Andante and Rondo Capriccioso," his own Improvisation founded on Liszt's transcription of Gounod's Faust, and, in response to an encore, one of Brahms's pianoforte settings of the "Hungarian Dances."

MELBOURNE.—At the second matinée musicale given by Messrs. Nicholson and Ascherberg since entering their new premises at Collins Street East, Orchestral selections formed part of the programme. The band, under the able guidance of Herr Plock, performed the overture to the Crown Diamonds, a selection from La Sonnambula, and some waltzes. The other instrumental selections were from Haydn's string quartett No. 1, Op. 71, for two violins, viola, and violoncello, played by Messrs. Curtis, Montague, Jäger, and S. Chapman. These gentlemen are members of the recently-formed Melbourne Quartett Society. The singers were Signor Luisetti, Miss St. Clair, and Miss Nordt.

NEWPORT, SALOP.—On Friday evening, the 17th ult., Mr. Smart, organist of the Parish Church, gave an evening (subscription) Concert in the Town Hall. The artists engaged were Madame Sherrington, Miss Jessie Jones, Madame Patey, Mr. Hollins, Mr. Patey, and Herr Frautzen, pianoforte. The programme was well selected, and gave the greatest satisfaction to a large and enthusiastic audience.

PENZANCE.—On Wednesday evening, the 1st ult., at the concert of the Penzance Choral Society, the Cantata Spring's Message (N. W. Gade), which commenced the second part of the programme, was well rendered and warmly received. A Concert overture, by Charles E. Stephens, "A dream of happiness," was also admirably performed; this effective composition was first heard at the Crystal Palace, when its merits were fully recognised. Mr. J. H. Nunn conducted, and Mr. Richard White, jun., presided at the organ.

PLAISTOW.—The members of the Plaistow Harmonic Society gave their opening Concert on Thursday evening, the 2nd ult., at St. Mary's school-room. Mr. W. Yallop, organist of St. Mary's, conducted, and Miss McDowall accompanied in a most efficient manner. The programme was of a very attractive character, the part-singing being an especial feature. "When evening's twilight" was capitally rendered by Messrs. Gowar, Sharp, Millard, and Hyde, and deservedly encored. Miss Haidee Crofton, of the Royal Academy of Music, made a very successful appearance, each of her songs being encored. Mrs. Yallop, Mr. T. Sharp, Mr. Gowar, and Master Gillard also contributed songs.

RUGBY.—Miss Emily M. Lawrence gave a successful Concert in the Town Hall Assembly Room on the 4th ult., assisted by Miss Mary Davies (Gold Medallist, R.A.M.), Miss Bolingbroke (who was encored in "Looking out into the night," composed expressly for her by Miss Lawrence), and Mr. Dudley Thomas. The programme included selections from Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Sterndale Bennett, and Benedict. The pianoforte solos were well played by Miss Lawrence.

SALISBURY.—The re-opening of the choir of the Cathedral Church, which has been undergoing restoration for the last seven years, took place on Wednesday, the 1st ult. The Bishop of Salisbury preached in the morning, and the Bishop of Ely in the evening, to crowded congregations. A new organ is being built by Willis, but nine stops only were available for the opening services. The music chosen for the morning service was Walmisley in D, Communion Service by B. Tours, Anthem, "I beheld and lo! a great multitude" (Elvey); and for the evening service Attwood in F; anthems, "Stand up and bless the Lord" (Goss) and Hallelujah Chorus (Handel). The Cathedral choir was augmented to about 100 singers, selected from choirs in the diocese.

Sheffield.—At Mr. Charles Harvey's popular Concert, which took place at the Albert Hall on the 11th ult., Mr. Haydn Keeton, Mus. Bac., Oxon., was the organist, and, with the exception of the vocal items and a trio, his performance occupied the whole of the concert. Mendelssohn's Sonata in B flat was played with true artistic finish, and the same characteristic was apparent throughout Mr. Keeton's performance of all his other pieces; a special word of praise may, however, be given to his treatment of the fugues, which were rendered with remarkable clearness. The vocalist was Madame Monier, who made her first appearance at the Albert Hall.——The subscription Concerts promoted by Mr. Charles Harvey, as well as his Saturday afternoon Organ Recitals and Concerts, have been the main features of the Albert Hall Gatherings during the past month. The first subscription Concert (Oct. 30th) introduced the Prodigal Son for the first time to a Sheffield audience, and it was alike creditably performed and well received. Mdme. Edith Wynne, Mdme. A. Sterling, Messrs. Lloyd and Thomas were the principal vocalists. The second of the series took place on the 20th ult., the artists being Mdme. Lemmens-Sherrington, Mdme. Patey, Miss Jessie Jones, Mr. R. Hollins, and Mr. Patey; Herr Frautzen and Mons. Guilmant, instrumentalists. There was a large attendance, and the Concert was a decided success. ——On the 16th ult. the members of St. Peter's Club gave their second Concert of the season, when a well-selected programme was performed. Mrs. House, Messrs. Berrisford, Wilson, and Roberts were the vocalists; Mr. Wm. Hattersley (English Concertina) and Mr. Beaumont accompanists.

Sidcup.—An evening Concert was given on the 14th ult. by Mr. Duncan Finlay (of London), assisted by Miss Florence Clyde, Miss Maggie Montgomery, Mr. G. H. Snazelle, and Mr. Ralph Leno. Miss Florence Clyde was well received in "Tell me, my heart;" Mr. Snazelle gave an excellent rendering of "Nancy Lee;" and Mr. Duncan Finlay (though suffering from a severe cold) was not prevented from singing the songs "Good bye, sweetheart" and "Macgregor's Gathering." Miss M. Montgomery played a solo, and also accompanied the vocal music.

Silvertown, North Woolwich.—The members of the Silvertown Choral Society gave their opening Concert of the season on Monday evening, the 13th ult., under the able direction of Mr. H. Pitt. There was a large attendance, and a very attractive programme appeared to give great satisfaction. The system of "no encores" was rigidly enforced, and with the best results. The choruses were very fairly rendered. The principal soloists were Mrs. Pitt, Mrs. Banks, Miss Gilbert, and Mr. Welham.

Taunton.—The members of the Philharmonic Society gave the second concert for the present year on Tuesday, the 14th ult., at the London Hotel Assembly Room, which was filled by an appreciative audience. The first part of the programme consisted of songs, part-songs, and an instrumental trio, by Reissiger, for violin, violoncello, and pianoforte, well played by Messrs. Pridham, Waite, and Perkins. Handel's Acis and Galatea formed the second part of the concert. The choruses were delivered with a correctness which denoted a thorough acquaintance with the music, and careful training. The solos were well rendered by Miss Florence Rowe, Miss Josephine Haas, Mr. E. Blandford, Mr. W. T. Trenchard, Mr. H. S. Biggs, Mr. Eland Clatworthy, Mr. W. H. Wake, and the Misses Clarke. Mr. Comer conducted. The members had the advantage of an efficient, though small band, led by Mr. Pridham.

Warminster.—On Thursday evening, the 16th ult., the choir of S. John's Church, assisted by Dr. Alcock, Mr. W. Teague, the Rev. J. H. Pearson, Mr. J. Felden, and Mr. J. C. Alcock, gave a concert, for the benefit of the Warminster Cottage Hospital, at the Town Hall. A Symphony in C major was well performed by Mr. Felden, Dr. Alcock, Mr. Teague, Rev. J. H. Pearson, and Mr. J. C. Alcock, and a Sonata by Schubert, played by Mr. Felden, testified to the ability of the performer. Mr. Hayter was the solo vocalist. The violoncello playing of Mr. J. C. Alcock was a feature in the programme.

West Ham.—A choral service was celebrated at the parish church of All Saints, on Wednesday evening, the 1st ult., when Mr. W. J. Jennings, B.A., presided at the organ, which has lately been considerably renovated and improved. Tallis's responses and Anglican Chants were used upon the occasion, the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis being very effectively rendered to Arnold in A, the quartett in the latter piece being sung by Messrs Browning, Booker, Saville, and Self. The prayers were read by the vicar, the Rev. T. Scott, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. J. S. Layard. At the conclusion, Dr. J. W. Hinton, of Dublin, performed a selection of music.

Wimbledon.—A Concert was given on the 2nd ult. by Mr. Gerard Henry, in aid of the Building Fund of the Congregational Church. Miss Berry, Miss Alice Davis, Miss N. Ling, Mr. S. J. North, Miss Annie Runcieman (solo pianist), Mr. E. Finch (violin), Mr. A. R. Marten (viola), and Mr. Nunneley (piano) kindly giving their services. The programme included a Meditation by Bach (violin and piano), Nocturne by Kalliwoda (viola and piano), and the Andante and Allegretto from Mozart's Trio, No. 3, all of which were exceedingly well played. The songs by Miss Berry, Miss Ling, and Miss Davis were well received. "Nancy Lee" and a new song, entitled "The Fisher Hero," were admirably rendered by Mr. Gerard Henry, both being encored. Mr. Nunneley, organist of the Church, accompanied most efficiently.

Worcester.—The second Concert of the Philharmonic Society took place on the 22nd ult., when Haydn's Seasons (Spring, Summer, and Autumn) was performed. The solos were given by Miss Amy Aylward (soprano), Mr. G. W. Welch (tenor), and Mr. O. Millward (bass). The band and chorus numbered 120, and Mr. W. Done conducted.

York.—The first of the Winter Concerts for the present season took place on the 1st ult., in the Festival Concert Room. The opening overture—"Der Freischütz"—was well played by Mr. Halle's band, as indeed were all the orchestral pieces. Mendelssohn's Concerto in D minor, Op. 40, was Mr. Hallé's principal solo, and he also played Liszt's "Rhapsodie Hongroise," which was highly appreciated. M. Lavigne's Oboe solo was, as usual, a feature in the programme. The vocalist was Mdlle. A. Redeker. Every praise is due to Mr. Wilson for his spirited enterprise in securing for York such a class of concerts as the one under notice, and also for the excellent manner in which all his arrangements are carried out.

"Dr. Allon has done so much to promote an intelligent use of sacred music in divine worship that we gladly call attention to his last and, as we think, most wise effort in the same direction. Having issued in the 'Congregational Psalmist' a valuable series of hymn tunes, chants, kyries, &c., he has now published in a little pocket volume a collection of anthems intended for the use of the congregation, and not simply for the choir. The pieces, as a rule, require, in singing, a degree of musical culture somewhat greater than that required by chorales and chants, but they are on the whole within the reach of persons possessing a practical acquaintance with the art of sight-singing."—Choir.

SOUTHWELL SCHOOL SONGS. First series. 1s. 6d. By the Rev. R. F. Smith, Minor Canon of Southwell.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

The Queen.—"Fourteen" (sixteen) "capital little songs in a cheap, handy form. Quite new, and withal pretty and neatly written."

The Schoolmaster.—"Easy, pleasing tunes, suitable to school use. The composer shows himself a true musician; each 'lay' has a separate tune, which is catching, appropriate, and quite in old ballad-song style."

The Musical Times.—"The sympathetic and musician-like manner in which he has wedded them to melodies which cannot fail to please the young vocalists for whom they are expressly designed."

NEW CANTATA FOR CHORAL SOCIETIES, DRAWING-ROOM ENTERTAINMENTS, PENNY READINGS, ETC., ETC.

THE JACKDAW OF RHEIMS.

Words from the "Ingoldsby Legends." Music by GEORGE FOX. Performed for the first time on Thursday evening, June 29, at St. George's Hall, with enormous success. Price 2s. 6d. net. Harmonium Accompaniment, 1s. The Band Parts may be hired on very reasonable terms.

"Ingoldsby's humorous poem has been 'set to music' in appropriate style by Mr. Fox, and in this new form will obtain additional admirers. The music is dramatic, tuneful, and spirited, showing not only a fine appreciation of the wit of the story, but also a capability of giving musical expression to it. The solos and choruses are characteristic and good; and the cantata will be found useful both in the concert-room and private parties in affording pleasing entertainment."—News of the World.

"'The Jackdaw of Rheims,' a cantata, music composed by George Fox. Choral societies, who begin now to complain that they 'have used up everything,' will find an agreeable novelty in this spirited little work by Mr. Fox. The words are, of course, those well-known verses in the 'Ingoldsby Legends,' which have been recited ad nauseam at penny readings and 'conversazioni.' There are frequent choruses of a lively character, interspersed by solos, chiefly for a bass or baritone voice. Mr. Fox has fully entered into the humour of the poem, and here and there are little musical touches calculated to 'bring down the house'—as, for instance, the irresistible imitation of one of the Gregorian tones upon the words, 'At matins and vespers he never was out.' We cannot pass over the 'Dead March' of the poor jackdaw without a word of special commendation. Notwithstanding the 'lightness' of this composition it gives a strong indication of Mr. Fox's ability to write in a higher strain."—Musical Standard.

"Mr. Fox has made a decided success in a task of no slight difficulty, and his musical setting of the 'Jackdaw of Rheims' is marked by strong originality, great resources of expression, and a nice discrimination between comedy and vulgarity."—Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News.

"There is much liveliness of treatment and comic spirit throughout the work."—Illustrated London News.

"'The Jackdaw of Rheims,' set to very charming music by Mr. George Fox."—Figaro.
